POPULATION AND HOUSING DATA

CHESTERFIELD COUNTY ENUMERATION DISTRICTS

This Research Report contains detailed statistics on population and housing in Chesterfield County by Enumeration Districts. These areas are smaller than Census Tracts and usually one Census Tract contains many Districts. There are 132 Enumeration Districts in Chesterfield County.

The publication of this data will give Richmond business and other interested groups detailed information on smaller areas throughout the County. This can be used in marketing analysis, business location, labor market studies, county and city planning, housing analysis, and many other ways.

The accompanying map shows the location of the Enumeration Districts and was prepared by the Richmond Regional Planning Commission. Their assistance was given with the knowledge that this report will greatly assist in the growth and development of not only Chesterfield County, but the entire Richmond Metropolitan Area.

The basic information is a part of the 1960 Census and was sent to the Research Committee by the U. S. Census Bureau.

Fred Fay a good man to see. Sawyer is his man (Fay's) in charge of housing. Sawyer is in chg of pub housing.

Public Health – do very little. No director at present. Home care, med. care to indigent, sanitation enforcement of codes (housing) is very poor.
Even white area (Oregon Hill, East of Cem East of Byrd Pk)

Urban renewal projects – gov't has no qualms about tearing up residential n'hoods for public, redevel, & hwy facilities because all property is owned by negroes. No objection to take it up.
"Richmond is a microcosm of Virginia."

See Father McMahon about his experiences [THREATS] on northside. Problem on N-side is middle class vs moving into working class n'hood.

Great deal of disparity in enforcement of sanitation and housing. Negro slum housing own by whites and Negro City Councilman — Cephus!

Negro slum streets tend to be more paved than other slum cities in South.

All white slums streets paved. Not all Negro slum streets paved. Never seen a white slum street unpaved.

Ordinarily, councilman who comes in first becomes mayor. Cephus came in second, first placer (Mr Shepard) refused it. Cephus didn't become mayor, because he was Negro. Couldn't have N mayor in Richmond.

Richmond's poorer housing looks deceptively good because outsides are better maintained. more paint. further north — weather factor.

Diff. to document indiv instances of enforcement of ordinances on housing + sanitation. Only way to notice it is to look at the conditions of the n'hoods.

Bruce Randolph — "the Richmond bureaucrat" type. Naturally elusive. Probably will not talk about his city honestly. Don't expect criticism of city from him or Ross.

Richmond Council on Community Relations — up until recently very ineffective.

White groups in Richmond tend to be very paternalistic. Negro groups tend to be suspicious, and with good reason. Contact between races —

Herbert Ross — bureaucrat. Knows something about city conditions. Knows little about housing.

Ruby Clayton — Negro girl. Worked with NAACP — youth council. Potential source of info on Richmond conditions. // Woman United Giver — sympatico. — Recreation study.

Peeples, cont'd:

Doctors have desegregated the local medical society.

News Leader editorial critical of proposed city ordnance which would have req'd hot water (at least one spigot in every dwelling) because health not directly related to hot water.

City of Richmond's housing programs - public housing - probably where city gov't has it's best record - but that's only because record in other areas of social service is poor.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

ON

THE PRESIDENT'S EXECUTIVE ORDER NO. 11063

ON EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN HOUSING

HOUSING AND HOME FINANCE AGENCY
Office of the Administrator
Washington 25, D.C.
February 1, 1963

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS
ON
THE PRESIDENT'S EXECUTIVE ORDER NO. 11063
ON EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN HOUSING

PURPOSE AND EFFECT

What is the overall purpose of the Executive Order?

To help achieve freedom of choice in housing for all Americans.

How can the Order achieve this purpose?

By assuring that the benefits of Federal housing programs and assistance are made available without discrimination as to race, color, creed, or national origin.

How will the Order be administered?

Departments and agencies of the executive branch of the Federal Government will take appropriate action to prevent discrimination in housing and related facilities that they own or operate, and in housing and related facilities assisted by programs that they administer. Also, the Order establishes the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing, with general supervisory and coordinating responsibilities, to give leadership in carrying out the purposes of the Order.

When did the Order become effective?

When the President signed it on November 20, 1962.

What forms of housing assistance are covered by the Order?

The Order covers all kinds of Federal financial assistance, direct or indirect, for the provision, rehabilitation, or operation of housing and related facilities, including land to be developed for residential use. Federal loans, advances, grants, contributions, and insurance or guarantees of loans are covered by the Order.

Can community or citizen groups help to implement the Order?

Yes, They can help to dispel racial misunderstandings and promote public acceptance of equal opportunity in housing for all Americans. The President's Committee will encourage educational programs outside the Government to support the objectives of the Order. The HHFA and its constituent agencies have intergroup relations specialists, and other specialists and advisers, who can assist in planning for the dissemination of information and development of informed opinion in particular communities.

COVERAGE OF HOUSING

What housing is affected by the Order?

The Order applies to housing --

(1) owned or operated by the Federal Government;
(2) provided in whole or in part with the aid of Federal loans, grants, advances, or contributions;
(3) provided in whole or in part by loans insured, guaranteed, or otherwise secured by the credit of the Federal Government; or
(4) provided by the development or redevelopment of real property made available by a State or local public agency through Federal financial assistance for slum clearance and urban renewal.

Does the Order affect existing housing?

Yes. Existing housing is affected since Section 102 of the Order specifically directs the HHFA and other departments and agencies to promote the abandonment of discriminatory practices in housing and related facilities provided with Federal assistance before November 20, 1962, by using their good offices and taking other appropriate action permitted by law. In addition, the Order prohibits discrimination in all housing that is owned or operated by the Federal Government, no matter when provided.

How does the Order affect new housing?

Section 101 of the Order directs all departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Federal Government to prevent discrimination in housing and related facilities provided with Federal assistance made available after November 20, 1962. The Order includes definite enforcement provisions for this directive.

Are there any exceptions to coverage?

Yes. Each department and agency responsible for implementing the Order is authorized to make exemptions and exceptions consistent with law and the purposes of the Order.

Is new public housing covered by the Order?

Yes. All federally assisted low-rent public housing projects for which annual contributions contracts had not been signed prior to November 21, 1962, are affected by the Order. Annual contributions contracts signed after November 20, 1962, include mandatory non-discrimination agreements. The Public Housing Administration's long-standing requirement that public housing must be provided in the local community on the basis of need, regardless of race, continues in effect.

Are new federally aided urban renewal projects covered by the Order?

Yes. The non-discrimination requirements of the Urban Renewal Administration, issued pursuant to the Order and related policies, apply both to housing and related facilities, and to all publicly owned and many other non-housing facilities, provided in urban renewal project areas aided by Federal loans and grants where the loan-and-grant contract is signed after November 20, 1962. The requirements apply to all facilities provided by communities as non-cash local grants-in-aid. This affects all new project applications, and all projects in planning stages as of the effective date of the Order.

Is new College Housing financed with Federal loans covered by the Order?

Yes. College student and faculty housing and related facilities, and housing for student nurses, internes, and resident physicians at hospitals, financed with Federal loans from the Community Facilities Administration, are covered if the loan agreement is signed after November 20, 1962.

Is new Senior Citizens Housing financed with Federal loans covered?

Yes. Housing for Senior Citizens financed with direct loans from the Community Facilities Administration is covered by the Order. Housing assisted under FHA and PHA programs for the elderly similarly is covered, as stipulated in the regulations and instructions issued by these agencies. CFA had a non-discrimination policy with reference to Senior Citizens Housing prior to November 21, 1962. Since then, CFA has incorporated in its loan agreements a covenant against discrimination.

Is defense housing covered by the Order?

Yes. The Order covers all housing owned or operated by the Defense Department, as well as any housing that is financed with the aid of FHA mortgage insurance for defense personnel.

WHO IS AFFECTED BY THE ORDER

Are builders and developers of new housing affected?

Yes. They are prohibited from discrimination in the sale or rental of housing they produce under the Federal loan insurance or guarantee programs if applications with respect to such housing are filed after the effective date of the Order.

Are home financing institutions affected?

Yes. Home financing institutions are prohibited from discriminating on the basis of race, color, creed, or national origin in their lending practices with respect to housing loans which are insured, guaranteed, or otherwise secured by the credit of the Federal Government as the result of applications filed after the effective date of the Order.

Are local housing authorities and public urban renewal agencies affected?

Yes. Under regulations issued by the Public Housing Administration and the Urban Renewal Administration such local agencies must agree to prevent discrimination in federally assisted housing and related facilities for which Federal contract authorizations are signed after the effective date of the Order.

Is an individual homeowner who sells his FHA or VA-financed house affected?

No. The Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans Administration have exempted owner-occupants of one- or two-family houses from the regulations issued by these agencies to implement the Order. Lenders, however, who do business under FHA or VA programs may not refuse a loan to a qualified buyer in such cases because of race, color, creed, or national origin.

ENFORCEMENT OF THE ORDER

How will the Order be enforced?

Each Federal department and agency is primarily responsible for obtaining compliance with the purposes of the Order in its own operations and programs. Each agency has, or will establish, procedures for the handling of violation complaints.

How will complaints of violations be handled?

Complaints will be handled under the procedures and regulations set up by each agency that are applicable to the programs it administers.

Complaints with respect to any of the affected programs should be addressed to the administering agency.

In general, the responsible agency will first inquire into the full facts of the complaint to determine its validity and whether it falls within the scope of the Order and applicable regulations. If appropriate, it will try to correct the violation through conference, conciliation, and persuasion, as directed in the Order. In addition, any of the appropriate sanctions set forth in the Order may be invoked.

What sanctions are authorized by the Order?

Each department or agency shall take actions appropriate under its own governing statutes to obtain compliance within its programs or operations. Enforcement provisions of the Order include such sanctions as contract cancellation and refusal to extend further Federal aid.

In general, the ultimate action which might be taken by a department or agency in a case of proven violation would be to deprive the violator of the benefits of future Federal assistance. For example: a developer or sponsor of housing might be debarred from Federal loan programs or might be denied the benefits of Federally insured or guaranteed loans. A home financing institution might be denied Federal loan insurance or guarantees. A State or local public agency might be denied further Federal aid for low-rent public housing or urban renewal.

The Order also stipulates that one Federal department or agency may apply its own sanctions against a builder, lender, or other firm or person who has violated the rules, regulations, procedures, or enforcement provisions of another department or agency.

What about resort to the courts?

If legal action appears warranted and necessary, departments and agencies may refer violations to the Attorney General for such action as he may deem appropriate.

THE PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE

How is the President's Committee constituted?

The President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing includes the heads of principal Federal departments and agencies providing assistance to housing or supervising home financing institutions, plus such other members as the President shall from time to time appoint from the public. Its Chairman and Executive Director is former Governor David L. Lawrence of Pennsylvania who serves as a member of the staff of the Executive Office of the President. The Chairman and two other members designated by him from among the public members will constitute an executive committee. The Committee may establish subcommittees, whose members are appointed by the Chairman.

What Federal agency heads are designated to serve on the Committee?

The Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of Defense, Attorney General, Secretary of Agriculture, Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, Administrator of Veterans Affairs, and the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

What are the powers and responsibilities of the President's Committee?

The President's Committee recommends general policies and procedures to implement Executive Order No. 11063, promotes coordination of the activities of departments and agencies under the Order, and reports to the President on actions and results. It may confer with representatives of any Federal department or agency, State or local public agency, or private group directly or indirectly affected by the Order. The President's Committee may hold public or private hearings for compliance, enforcement, or educational purposes. It encourages educational programs by non-governmental groups to support the objectives of the Order.

Loan Program

SEC. 202. (a) (1) The purpose of this section is to assist private nonprofit corporations, consumer cooperatives, or public bodies or agencies to provide housing and related facilities for elderly or handicapped families.

(2) In order to carry out the purpose of this section, the Administrator[1] may make loans to any corporation (as defined in subsection (d) (2)), to any consumer cooperative, or to any public body or agency for the provision of rental or cooperative housing and related facilities for elderly or handicapped families, except that (A) no such loan shall be made unless the applicant shows that it is unable to secure the necessary funds from other sources upon terms and conditions equally as favorable as the terms and conditions applicable to loans under this section, (B) no such loan shall be made unless the Administrator finds that the construction will be undertaken in an economical manner and that it will not be of elaborate or extravagant design or materials, and (C) no such loan shall be made to a public body or agency unless it certifies that it is not receiving financial assistance from the United States exclusively pursuant to the United States Housing Act of 1937.

(3) A loan under this section may be in an amount not exceeding the total development cost (as defined in subsection (d) (3)), as determined by the Administrator; shall be secured in such manner and be repaid within such period, not exceeding fifty years, as may be determined by him; and shall bear interest at a rate determined by him which shall be not more than the higher of (A) 2¾ per centum per annum, or (B) the total of one-quarter of 1 per centum added to the average annual interest rate on all interest-bearing obligations of the United States then forming a part of the public debt as computed at the end of the fiscal year next preceding the date on which the loan is made and adjusted to the nearest one-eighth of 1 per centum.

(4) There is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $350,000,000 which shall constitute a revolving fund to be used by the Administrator in carrying out this section.

(b) In the performance of, and with respect to, the functions, powers, and duties vested in him by this section the Administrator shall (in addition to any authority otherwise vested in him) have the functions, powers, and duties set forth in section 402 (except subsection (c) (2)) of the Housing Act of 1950.

(c) (1) Housing constructed with a loan made under this section shall not be used for transient or hotel purposes while such loan is outstanding.

(2) As used in paragraph (1), the term "transient or hotel purposes" shall have such meaning as may be prescribed by the Administrator, but rental for any period less than thirty days shall in any event constitute use for such purposes. The provisions of subsections (f) through (j) of section 513 of the National Housing Act (as added by section 132 of the Housing Act of 1954) shall apply in the case of violations of paragraph (1) as though the housing described in such subsection were multifamily housing (as defined in section 513(e)(2) of the National Housing Act) with respect to which a mortgage is insured under such Act, except that for purposes of this subsection the Administrator shall perform the functions vested in the Commissioner by such section 513.

(3) The Administrator shall take such action as may be necessary to insure that all laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors in the construction of housing assisted under this section shall be paid wages at rates not less than those prevailing in the locality involved for the corresponding classes of laborers and mechanics employed on construction of a similar character, as determined by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the Act of March 3, 1931, as amended (the Davis-Bacon Act); but the Administrator may waive the application of this paragraph in cases or classes of cases where laborers or mechanics, not otherwise employed at any time in the construction of such housing, voluntarily donate their services without full compensation for the purpose of lowering the costs of construction and the Administrator determines that any amounts saved thereby are fully credited to the corporation, cooperative, or public body or agency undertaking the construction.

[1] The Housing Administrator's Organizational Order No. 4 provides that the program of loans for housing for the elderly shall be administered by the Commissioner of the Community Facilities Administration, a constituent of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

(d) As used in this section—

(1) The term "housing" means structures suitable for dwelling use by elderly or handicapped families which are (A) new structures, or (B) provided by rehabilitation, alteration, conversion, or improvement of existing structures which are otherwise inadequate for proposed dwelling use by such families.

(2) The term "corporation" means any incorporated private institution or foundation no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder, contributor, or individual, if such institution or foundation is approved by the Administrator as to financial responsibility.

(3) The term "development cost" means costs of construction of housing and of other related facilities, and of the land on which it is located, including necessary site improvement.

(4) The term "elderly or handicapped families" means families which consist of two or more persons and the head of which (or his spouse) is sixty-two years of age or over or is handicapped, and such term also means a single person who is sixty-two years of age or over or is handicapped. A person shall be considered handicapped if such person is determined, pursuant to regulations issued by the Administrator, to have a physical impairment which (A) is expected to be of long-continued and indefinite duration, (B) substantially impedes his ability to live independently, and (C) is of such a nature that such ability could be improved by more suitable housing conditions. The Administrator shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to prevent abuses in determining, under the definitions contained in this paragraph, the eligibility of families and persons for admission to, and occupancy of, housing constructed with assistance under this section.

(5) The term "State" includes the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the possessions of the United States.

(6) The term "Administrator" means the Housing and Home Finance Administrator.

(7) The term "construction" means erection of new structures or rehabilitation, alteration, conversion, or improvement of existing structures.

(8) The term "related facilities" means (A) new structures suitable for use by elderly or handicapped families as cafeterias or dining halls, community rooms or buildings, workshops, or infirmaries or other inpatient or outpatient health facilities, or other essential service facilities, and (B) structures suitable for the above uses provided by rehabilitation, alteration, conversion, or improvement of existing structures which are otherwise inadequate for such uses.

(e) Nothing in this section or in regulations promulgated under this section shall prevent a corporation or consumer cooperative from obtaining a loan under this section for the provision of housing and related facilities for elderly or handicapped families, notwithstanding the fact that such corporation or cooperative has theretofore obtained a commitment from the Federal Housing Administration for mortgage insurance under section 231 of the National Housing Act with respect to the housing involved, if (1) such corporation or cooperative is otherwise eligible for such loan under this section, (2) such commitment was obtained prior to the date of enactment of the Housing Act of 1961,[1] and (3) the Administrator determines that the financing of such housing through a loan under this section rather than through mortgage insurance under such section 231 is necessary or desirable in order to avoid hardship for the elderly or handicapped families who are the prospective tenants of such housing.

Approved September 23, 1959.

"SEC. 401. (a) To assist educational institutions in providing housing for their students and faculties the Administrator may make loans of funds to such institutions for the construction of such housing: Provided, That no such loan shall be made unless the educational institution shows that it is unable to secure the necessary funds for such housing from other sources upon terms and conditions generally comparable to the terms and conditions applicable to loans under this title: And provided further, That no such loan shall be made unless the Administrator finds that the housing will be undertaken in such manner that economy will be promoted in its construction, and that it will not be of elaborate or extravagant design or materials. Any educational institution which, prior to the date of enactment of this Act, has contracted for housing may, in connection therewith, receive loans authorized under this title, as the Administrator may determine: Provided further, That no such loan shall be made for any housing, the construction of which was begun prior to the effective date of this Act. A loan to an educational institution may be in an amount not exceeding the total development cost, as determined by the Administrator, of the housing; shall bear interest at the annual rate of interest (or, if there shall be two or more such rates of interest, the highest thereof) specified in the most recently issued bonds of the Federal Government having maturity of ten years or more determined at the date the contract for the loan is made, plus one-fourth of 1 per centum per annum; and shall be secured in such manner and be repaid within such period, not exceeding forty years, as may be determined by the Administrator.

"(b) To obtain funds for loans under this title, the Administrator may issue and have outstanding at any one time notes and obligations for purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury in an amount not to exceed $300,000,000.

"(c) Notes or other obligations issued by the Administrator under this title shall be in such forms and denominations, have such maturities, and be subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Administrator, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such notes or other obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of such notes or other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any notes and other obligations of the Administrator issued under this title and for such purpose is authorized to use as a public debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of such notes and other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the notes or other obligations acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of such notes or other obligations shall be treated as public debt transactions of the United States.

"(d) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator such sums as may be necessary, together with loan principal and interest payments made by educational institutions assisted hereunder, for payments on notes or other obligations issued by the Administrator under this section."

Sec. 24(b), Housing Amendments of 1953, Public Law 94, 83d Congress, approved June 30, 1953, 67 Stat. 121, 128, amended the third sentence of sec. 401 to read as follows:

"A loan to an educational institution may be in an amount not exceeding the total development cost of the housing, as determined by the Administrator; shall be secured in such manner and be repaid within such period, not exceeding forty years, as may be determined by him; and, with respect to loan contracts entered into after the first minimum annual rate has been specified as provided herein, shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Administrator which shall be not less than the minimum annual rate which the Secretary of the Treasury shall specify as applicable to the six-month period (beginning with the six-month period ending December 31, 1953) during which the contract for the loan is made: Provided, That such minimum annual rate for each six-month period shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury by estimating the average yield to maturity, on the basis of daily closing market bid quotations or prices during the month of May or the month of November, as the case may be, next preceding such six-month period, on all outstanding marketable obligations of the United States having a maturity date of fifteen or more years from the first day of such month of May or November, and by adjusting such estimated average annual yield to the nearest one-eighth of one per centum."

The third sentence of sec. 401 was further amended by sec. 808(b), Housing Act of 1954, Public Law 560, 83d Congress, approved August 2, 1954, 68 Stat. 590, 646, by substituting "is approved by the Administrator" for the word "made" immediately preceding the proviso.

Sec. 301, Housing Amendments of 1955 (the "College Housing Amendments of 1955"), Public Law 345, 84th Congress, approved August 11, 1955, 69 Stat. 635, 644, amended section 401 to read as set forth in the text except for the amendments made by later laws as shown by subsequent footnotes.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any notes and other obligations of the Administrator issued under this title and for such purpose is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of such notes and other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the notes or other obligations acquired by him under this section. Commission Offers Guidelines to Realtors

Fair housing guidelines for California realty brokers were offered by FEPC in the following March 22 statement:

On January 6, 1965 this Commission issued a statement clarifying the status of the Rumford Fair Housing Act during the present period in which the constitutionality of Proposition 14 (Article I, Section 26 of the State Constitution) is being tested in the courts. We note that the California Real Estate Association (CREA) concurs essentially in our view and that of the Attorney General and Legislative Counsel that real estate brokerage firms, as business establishments, are still forbidden by law to discriminate because of race, religion, or ancestry.

Important questions remain, however, as to just what the realty broker and salesman may or may not do as agent for the residential property owner, and how the realtor could best serve the stated purpose of his association's new "Code of Practices"--promotion of nondiscriminatory housing opportunity. We now offer guidelines and suggestions relating to these questions.

CREA took a first step of potential significance in promulgation of its Code of Practices. As local realty boards adopt the Code, the critical test of actual impact on restrictive practices lies ahead: whether there is to be full and decisive implementation of this policy by each board, and whether meaningful action will be taken by the other main divisions of the housing industry, the homebuilders and apartment house owners. This statement is concerned solely with the opportunities and obligations today facing real estate brokers (using the term to include salesmen) and their organizations.

First and foremost, we remind all brokers that they have the right not to accept discriminatory listings, and that if they would together exercise that right the impact on race barriers in the housing market would be tremendous. Proposition 14 allows homeowners to discriminate, but in no way obliges brokers to involve themselves in this harmful process. If all or most realtors in a given area were to commence, by common consent, to decline such business, racially restricted home sales would drastically decrease almost overnight. Realtors are not only free to make such a decision, but have ample facilities for concerted action through their local boards and state association.

According to the Code of Ethics of the National Association of Real Estate Boards (NAREB), the realtor's functions "impose grave social responsibility...obligations beyond those of ordinary commerce," and it is held that he "should endeavor to eliminate in his community any practices which could be damaging to the public or to the dignity and integrity of the real estate profession..." CREA President David N. Robinson has advised all his vice presidents that it is their

June 25 Is Deadline For FEP Staff Applications

Applicants for Consultant (investigator-conciliator) positions with FEPC must file applications with the State Personnel Board by June 25 in order to take the required examination, scheduled for July 10.

Requirements include three years of full-time or five years of part-time experience in the industrial relations or intergroup fields. College graduation or additional qualifying experience is required also. Candidates for Specialist-Consultant positions will take an additional test in Spanish. Salaries for both jobs range from $717 to $870 per month.

Application blanks, with complete requirements and job descriptions, are available at local State Department of Employment offices or from the Personnel Board in Sacramento, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Realtors' Guidelines

duty to work in their respective communities to overcome housing inequities. We suggest that, if this CREA goal is to be realized, the time has come for realtors to conduct their business altogether without participation in any discriminatory practice.

If, however, brokers should fail to make this clean break from the old restrictive practices, and continue to serve as agents for discriminatory owners, we strongly recommend that at least the following guidelines be observed:

1. The broker has a compelling duty to the buyer or tenant prospect to inform him of all listings which might interest him. Also, as emphasized in the CREA Code, the broker "has a legal and ethical responsibility to receive all offers and to communicate them to the property owner," and to "exert his best efforts to conclude the transaction."

2. In keeping with the "equal service to all clients" theme of the CREA Code, the broker must not volunteer information as to the race of either party to the prospective transaction. He should fully understand the essential irrelevance of race and the illegality of injecting this factor into his dealings.

3. In taking a listing, the broker must not in any way suggest or encourage a restriction as to race, religion, or ancestry (hereinafter "race" for brevity), or inquire as to the client's intention in this regard. It is illegal to raise the question. As CREA states, such a listing may occur only "at the property owner's instance without any influence whatsoever by the agent."

4. If the listing owner raises the question of race restriction, the broker should seek earnestly to dissuade him from insisting on such discrimination. This is not only the realtor's duty, if he means seriously to promote the objective of the CREA Code of Practices; it is legally prudent as well. In such a situation the broker faces an interesting challenge to the depth of his knowledge of residential property and to his effectiveness as a salesman. Over many years these talents have generally fostered discrimination; now their influential thrust should be reversed.

5. Even if the listing owner persists in expressing discriminatory intent, the broker should endeavor to keep the situation flexible, urging that the listing not be formalized in restrictive terms. The owner should be made aware of the advantages of considering all prospective buyers or tenants on their merits, rather than denying himself in advance this free range of choice. (This is one of the points at which, if the broker's best efforts to secure a nonrestrictive listing fail, he could decline the listing.)

6. Where the owner insists on a discriminatory listing, he must do so explicitly and in writing. It would appear inadvisable for the broker to employ any kind of prepared or printed form to accommodate such listings.

7. If a formal restrictive listing exists, and if the broker has a prospect who is of the minority group proscribed by the owner, the broker should do everything possible to bring this prospect into contact with the owner or to show the property, or both. Discriminatory inclinations often evaporate when two persons of comparable economic or educational level meet face-to-face.

8. Where a restrictive listing exists, we recommend that this fact appear only in the formal listing document and nowhere else in the records, forms, notices, signs, advertisements, or the like kept or used by the broker's office.

9. We hold serious doubts as to the legality of a multiple listing service accepting, recording, or processing a restrictive listing, and we strongly recommend that all these services follow the lead of those which prohibit such practices.

10. We suggest that careful study be given to the view that brokers may not legally handle discriminatory listings on behalf of tract builders or others engaged in housing as a business.

These are some of the ways--under existing law and pursuant to CREA's declared opposition to housing discrimination--in which California brokers could generate substantial progress toward equal housing opportunity. Their example could spark similar actions on the part of homebuilders and apartment house owners. Should the housing industry as a whole move ahead in such fashion and achieve meaningful results, all Californians who sincerely support the right to residence without discrimination would heartily applaud.

Realtors contend that racism in housing can be overcome through "education." We remind them that their own practices--including the information and advice they give to clients--comprise the most powerful single educational force in the housing market. We hope, accordingly, that the California Real Estate Association and its affiliated local boards will enlarge on a good beginning and strengthen their present Code of Practices along the lines suggested above.

FEPC will continue, in any event, to discharge its responsibilities under the law and to cooperate fully with sincere and realistic affirmative fair housing programs.

Integrated TV Commercials

When Negro actors were employed for integrated TV commercials, advertisers were fearful of criticism. It never came. Lever Brothers, one of TV's biggest advertisers, reports: "We've had millions of exposures with our integrated commercials. We've had less than 100 letters from viewers--and, believe me, they write if they have something to say--and only a third of those were unfavorable."

Advisory Group Surveys San Mateo Job Skills

Forty volunteers recently helped the San Mateo Area Advisory Committee to FEPC conduct a survey of job skills among workers in the San Mateo minority community. The survey took place on two Saturdays during March and covered a 40-block area in San Mateo peopled largely by minority families. Most of the volunteers, directed by Committee Chairman Horace Marshall, were students at San Mateo Junior College.

The purpose of the survey was to find qualified people who had been unable to get work, and also to determine which were underemployed at jobs requiring use of less than their full training or experience.

A full report on the outcome of the survey will be available soon.

The San Mateo Area Advisory Committee also sponsored a luncheon in February at which twelve prominent San Mateo business leaders met with Commissioner Elton Brombacher to discuss ways of fully implementing job policies that would offer equal opportunity to all minority applicants.

Second Bank of America Report on Minority Hiring

The second report on Bank of America hiring practices, covering the four months ending November 30, 1964, shows continued progress by the Bank in providing job opportunities for minority workers.

During the period covered by the report, which was released in March, the number of minority workers increased from 3,839 to 3,867. Total employment was 28,619, a decrease, because of seasonal fluctuation, from 28,856, the total number of employees at the time of FEPC's first report in September 1964.

The reports are issued as the result of an affirmative action agreement entered into in June 1964 as a means of aiding the Bank in recruiting, hiring and promoting members of minority groups on an equal opportunity basis.

During the last reporting period, the number of Negro employees increased from 826 to 864; other nonwhite employees from 531 to 540; Spanish surname from 1,841 to 1,854. The number of Oriental employees dropped from 640 to 608.

The report said that "intensive recruiting efforts in the minority communities undoubtedly contributed to the increase in the number of Negro and Spanish surname employees.... The slight decrease in Oriental employees is attributed to the same seasonal fluctuations which affect the overall work force."

Commissioner Louis Garcia, in charge of the program with the Bank, urged that "the full original impetus in recruiting and hiring be maintained," if the affirmative action is to have continued effectiveness.

The work of the Bank's human relations specialist, newly appointed at the time of the affirmative action agreement between FEPC and the Bank, was found to have growing value, especially in those branches which he visited personally.

Aileen Hernandez To New Federal FEP Commission

Mrs. Aileen Hernandez, assistant chief of the California FEPC since November 1962, has been appointed by President Johnson to the federal five-member Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Hernandez

Headed by Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., former Undersecretary of Commerce, the new Commission is authorized under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act to enforce prohibitions against racial discrimination in employment.

Other members are Richard Graham, Wisconsin business executive; Rev. Luther Halcomb of Dallas, Texas; and Samuel Jackson, Topeka, Kansas, lawyer.

Mrs. Hernandez, a graduate of Howard University, has an M.A. in government from Los Angeles State College, and has done graduate work at UC, USC, and the University of Oslo. For 10 years before her FEPC appointment she was education director of the Pacific Coast Region, International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union. In 1960 she lectured in Latin America as a State Department labor education specialist, and in 1961 the Community Relations Conference of Southern California named her "Woman of the Year."

FEPC Case Highlights

Affirmative Action: Goals and Results

Most of FEPC's time and effort is devoted to investigating and resolving individual job complaints alleging discrimination because of race, color, religion or national origin. In 1964, 846 such complaints were received; 4,171 have been docketed since the agency was formed in 1959. But the importance of broad-gauged affirmative actions has also become clear. Like other major fair employment agencies around the nation, FEPC seeks increasingly to move through such programs.

Affirmative action is a procedure in which employers (including both private firms and public agencies), unions, or other organizations cooperate voluntarily with FEPC for the purpose of strengthening their use of minority workers. The action is not initiated on the supposition that a violation of the FEP law has occurred. The key feature of the entire process is the willing cooperation of the employer.

Voluntary participation in these programs has come from a wide variety of the State's leading employers--large industries, major utilities, firms in trade and commerce, statewide educational institutions, governmental agencies, federal defense installations, and labor organizations. By the end of April 1965, 43 such programs had been launched with 29 still in progress.

The advantages of the affirmative-action approach are increasingly obvious. Basic recruitment and hiring patterns are modified so as to include workers of every group. A single affirmative action agreement between FEPC and a cooperative employer may lead to employment of hundreds of minority workers. Through these affirmative actions the Commission can address itself, on a planned basis, to main problem areas and to employment situations likely to yield good results.

To see how various kinds of affirmative actions have worked in broadening the job market for minority job seekers, it may be instructive to look briefly at a few such FEPC cases.

A Metropolitan Airport

When a major California city opened its new airport in 1961, the first minority workers were employed mostly in such "traditional" jobs as porters. It was at this time that FEPC staff, under the direction of Commissioner Dwight R. Zook, made contact with the various concessionaires in the huge airport complex and urged upon them adoption of equal employment opportunity, particularly in considering nonwhite applicants for public contact jobs not before open to them.

Following groundwork discussions, contacts between FEPC and employers were renewed periodically, and four years after the airport opened, a thorough check was made among the restaurants, bars, newsstands and tobacco stands. These concessions alone employed nearly 600 people. About one-fourth of that number were Negro, with other minorities also employed.

Many of the positions filled by these new employees had not previously been available to minorities--such as cashiers, waitresses, snack bar attendants, and car rental agents. It is additionally significant that during the period in which FEPC and the airport employers were working together, at least two major airlines began employing Negro hostesses for the first time.

A Major Utility

Affirmative action can also materially aid a firm to close certain gaps between its intentions and its practices in employment integration.

In 1959, following passage of the FEP Act by the State Legislature, a major communications utility reaffirmed its policy of affording "opportunity in employment without discrimination because of race, religious creed, color, national origin or ancestry." This had been management's stated policy for many years--but there was a serious lag in the way it was being carried out at lower levels.

In late 1960, under the direction of Commissioner Elton Brombacher, FEPC staff made its first contact with the company in Northern California, and discovered that the problem for minority applicants began with the initial job interview. Interviewers, bypassing the company's stated policy, were found to extend different treatment to white and Negro applicants. Lengthy investigation revealed few minority employees in public contact jobs and none in management.

FEPC's purpose was to encourage and aid the implementation of a fully equal job policy throughout the entire structure of the company. This was done by the company in part through advertising in minority newspapers; through contact with schools and colleges having high minority enrollments; by close liaison with minority specialists in all State Department of Employment offices in given hiring areas; by issuing an attractive brochure showing minority employees at work with the company; and by making every effort to place minority workers in public contact positions. The company also undertook a program of looking beyond the scores in aptitude tests taken by minority prospects to determine which had the ability to learn, regardless of test scores.

Additionally, the company participated in several local job training programs for minority youth, and developed an audio-visual program which is effective both in urging young people to stay in school and in pointing out the types of training needed for good jobs with the company.

By 1964 the fruits of this affirmative action had become apparent. An excellent pattern of employment had been established, and, as a predictable result of the open-door hiring policy, minority workers were beginning to move into good management and public contact positions.

In San Joaquin Valley

Midway in 1963 FEPC learned from the Fresno Area Migrant Ministry that a sugar company was shortly to open a new processing plant near Fresno. A telephoned inquiry by the FEPC executive officer to the company's headquarters brought ready agreement to confer informally concerning opportunities at the new plant. Commissioner C. L. Dellums was assigned to the undertaking. He and staff opened discussions with personnel authorities of the large firm, then surveyed employment patterns in three of the company's other installations, to gain a view of what hiring practices might be expected in the new plant.

While Mexican Americans were employed at all three of these locations, it was learned that out of 1,500 employees, only about 25 were Negroes.

In subsequent meetings FEPC representatives and the employer worked out ways in which the recruiting practice of the employment office at the new plant could be broadened so as to include minority applicants. Hiring officials, with FEPC aid, informed the local Department of Employment office that they wanted to interview, among others, qualified Negro applicants. Through newspapers advertisements they stressed their equal opportunity policy; and they informed the private employment agency through which they also recruited that "all qualified applicants will receive consideration for employment without regard to race, color, creed or national origin."

Operating upon this broadened recruitment base, the plant opened in September 1963. FEPC maintained contact with the company and in 1964 checked the employment pattern. Over 300 employees had been hired, about 50 of whom were Mexican American, 40 Negro and one American Indian. When FEPC staff visited the company again a few months later, it was found that a number of minority employees had been upgraded to higher positions.

A Large Rubber Company

In July 1963, FEPC learned of the plans of a rubber company to open a new plant in the "X" Valley, and immediately arranged a meeting with the industrial relations director of that company to discuss recruitment and hiring policy.

During the course of the meeting it was discovered that the company proposed to hire 400 production workers for the factory. About 90 had already been hired, none of whom was Negro. Another 100 were to be employed in the office, and of the 65 already hired, none were Negro.

The company was most willing to implement a broad, equal opportunity employment policy, and to have FEPC advice to this end. The company was conducting its recruiting entirely through the Department of Employment at "X", and it was decided that it would be desirable also to recruit through the "Y" office of that Department in order to include in the pool of possible employees the large population of Negroes in that area, and to reach Mexican Americans living there as well. These minority communities were then informed of the new opportunities in this situation and encouraged to look into them.

Contact was maintained by Commissioner Brombacher and staff. By September 1964 the company had hired 466 employees, of whom 26 percent were Mexican American, five percent Filipino, and almost four percent Negro. Negro workers included front office personnel and the important position of plant nurse. Supervisory staff included two Mexican Americans and one Oriental.

Of special interest here is the fact that as the company actively extended its employment recruiting to the full range of potential applicants, it happened that the levels of minority representation in the work force became approximately those which obtain in the population generally in that labor market area.

A somewhat different approach to affirmative action has been followed by Commissioner Elton Brombacher with a number of large employers in the San Francisco Bay Area. Meeting periodically on an informal basis, top-level representatives of such firms as a major oil company, a packing company, a variety chain store, banks, a clothing manufacturer, and a nationwide chain of retail department stores talk over situations they have encountered in seeking to implement equal opportunity policies, and explore ways of coping with problems and of attaining fair employment goals.

Affirmative Recruitment By Unions

"We must engage in affirmative recruitment of qualified minority applicants to get the best, to encourage them to apply. It is necessary to support supplemental educational opportunities for those interested in union membership and who seek to meet legitimate qualifications for union membership....The sooner we get the job done, the better off we are going to be."

--Vice President Hubert Humphrey
at an AFL-CIO conference

The potential for extending such affirmative action programs is great. Around the State many firms that employ large numbers of workers may show apparent indifference toward equal opportunity and make no move on their own to institute better practices. Yet, once approached, they may be willing to cooperate in extending their hiring and upgrading policies to include applicants and workers of all groups, and to utilize FEPC consultative assistance to this end.

The need for and benefits of affirmative action have been clearly demonstrated. The number and breadth of such affirmative action programs which FEPC can undertake are limited only by the bounds of budget and staff.

SF Housing Authority: First Report By FEPC

In a preliminary report on an investigation of the hiring and tenant placement practices of the San Francisco Housing Authority, FEPC Commissioner C. L. Dellums on February 2 asked the Authority to discontinue coding pre-employment applications according to the race of the applicant.

Commissioner Dellums said the existence of special code letters on applications of Negro and Jewish job-seekers was "an indication of willful disregard on the part of management of a State law."

In his report, the Commissioner recommended that the Authority--

+ hire more minority group workers in headquarters jobs and as project managers;

+ recruit minority "craft personnel" from other sources if building trade unions failed to provide such workers;

+ explore the possibility of setting up apprenticeship positions, some of which could be filled by minority individuals.

The report also recommended discontinuing the racial coding of pre-tenancy records, since this could lead to abuses.

The FEPC investigation was started last August after both the Housing Authority and the San Francisco branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People requested that FEPC examine the Authority's practices. Following the report, San Francisco Mayor John Shelley asked the City Human Relations Commission to maintain a check on the Authority's hiring and placement procedures.

New Airline Hostess

One of American Airlines' new stewardesses is Natalie Ann Glover, who has lived in Los Angeles since 1960. A graduate of high school in Noblesville, Indiana, where her parents still live, Miss Glover also studied sociology at Compton Junior College. Before starting her airlines career, she worked as a secretary to an attorney.

"No person in the United States shall on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.

HOUSING and HOME FINANCE AGENCY
Office of the Administrator

May 1965

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

General

1. Q. What is Title VI?

   A. Title VI is that portion of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 that deals with nondiscrimination in federally-assisted programs. It assures that no person in the United States shall be discriminated against on the ground of race, color or national origin in any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.

2. Q. What HHFA programs are affected by the nondiscrimination requirements of Title VI?

   A. All HHFA programs listed in Appendix A (see page 7) are covered by Title VI.

3. Q. Are the FHA mortgage insurance programs covered by the language of the law?

   A. No. Programs involving "a contract of insurance or guaranty" are specifically excluded by the language of Title VI. Activities under the FHA mortgage insurance programs are thus excluded. However, Executive Order 11063 on Equal Opportunity in Housing, which prohibits discrimination in all Federal housing programs, continues to apply to the FHA programs.

4. Q. What is the effective date of HHFA regulations under Title VI?

   A. HHFA regulations were approved by the President on December 3, 1964 and published in the Federal Register on the following day. The regulations became effective January 3, 1965.

5. Q. How is "Federal financial assistance" defined under Title VI?

   A. "Federal financial assistance" is defined to include:

      1. Grants, loans and advances of Federal funds.
      2. Donations of Federal property.
      3. Detail of Federal personnel.
      4. Sale, lease and permission to use Federal property either at a nominal consideration or at a reduced consideration in order to serve the public interest.
      5. Any Federal agreement which has as one of its purposes the provision of assistance.

6. Q. How is "recipient" of Federal financial assistance defined?

A. "Recipient" is defined to include any individual or entity - public or private - to whom Federal financial assistance is extended for any program or activity (such as a local housing authority in the public housing program), or who otherwise participates in carrying out such program or activity (such as a redeveloper in the urban renewal program).

7. Q. Does Title VI cover employment practices of recipients of Federal assistance?

A. No, unless a primary objective of Federal financial assistance is to provide employment, as in the case of the Accelerated Public Works Program.

8. Q. How are the regulations to be enforced?

A. Enforcement responsibility is vested in the departments and agencies involved. HHFA regulations require assurances of compliance from recipients and provide for compliance reports and reviews. In addition, the regulations provide for investigation of noncompliance.

9. Q. What assurances of compliance are required?

A. New contracts for Federal financial assistance must contain or be accompanied by assurances that the program or activity will be conducted in compliance with all requirements of Title VI and the regulations. On contracts executed prior to the effective date of the regulations, but where funds have not been fully disbursed, similar assurance may be required if deemed necessary. On contracts executed prior to the effective date of the regulations, but providing for periodic payments to continue the program or activity, as in low-rent public housing, the recipient is required to submit a statement satisfying the Agency that the program or activity is being conducted in compliance with the requirements of Title VI and the regulations, or give reasonable assurance that any noncompliance indicated will be corrected.

10. Q. What happens in the case of a refusal to submit the required assurances?

A. A refusal to furnish required assurances constitutes a violation of the regulations and appropriate procedures may be instituted to effect compliance.

11. Q. What actions may be taken in the case of a violation of the regulations?

A. The Agency may suspend, terminate or refuse to grant or continue financial assistance, or take some other enforcement action such as referring the matter to the Department of Justice for appropriate proceedings.

12. Q. What are the procedures to be followed before financial assistance may be cut off?

A. Attempts will be made to secure compliance by voluntary means. If voluntary compliance cannot be secured, the recipient will be advised of his failure to comply and will be given an opportunity for a hearing. Following the hearing and an express finding on the record of a failure to comply, further compliance action must be approved by the Administrator. No action withholding financial assistance, however, may actually be taken until 30 days after the Administrator has filed with the Committees of the House and Senate having legislative jurisdiction over the program or activity involved a full written report of the circumstances and the grounds for such action.

13. Q. Is there a right of judicial review in the case of Agency action cutting off financial assistance?

A. Yes. Section 603 of Title VI provides for judicial review in the case of a cut off of funds.

Low-Rent Public Housing

1. Q. Is all federally-aided low-rent public housing covered by the regulations?

A. The regulations apply to all federally-aided low-rent public housing receiving Federal financial assistance on the effective date of the regulations. This means that except for those few federally-aided projects that were paid off before the effective date of the regulations, every federally-aided low-rent project provided since the inception of the public housing program in 1937 is subject to the nondiscrimination requirements.

2. Q. What kind of assurances of compliance must local housing authorities give under the regulations?

A. For new projects, a local housing authority must agree in writing that it will comply with all requirements imposed by Title VI and the regulations and PHA requirements issued thereunder. For existing low-rent projects, the local housing authority must also give assurance of compliance. It must state whether or not existing projects are currently operated in compliance with those requirements, and it must submit a description of policies and practices in receiving applications, selecting tenants, and assigning applicants to dwelling units. If existing projects are not currently operated in compliance, the local housing authority must explain the extent of noncompliance and action it proposes to correct it.

3. Q. What actions may be taken in the case of a violation of Title VI or the regulations?

A. Approval of further low-rent projects may be refused or, if the annual contributions contract so provides, remedies may be invoked for breach of the contract, including recovery of title or possession by the Federal agency. In addition the matter may be referred to the Department of Justice for appropriate judicial remedies. The sanction of cutting off annual contributions will not be used in the case of public housing violations, in that the full faith and credit of the United States are pledged to their payment as security for bonds issued for financing of the project.

Urban Renewal

1. Q. To what extent are federally-aided urban renewal activities covered by Title VI and the regulations?

A. Title VI and the regulations apply to all future federally-aided urban renewal projects and to all such projects already under way on the effective date of the regulations to the extent that any project land remained to be disposed of by the local urban renewal agency.

2. Q. What assurance of compliance is required of the local urban renewal agency?

A. The local agency must submit assurances in the form of a resolution of its governing body that it recognizes and will comply with all regulations and requirements under Title VI.

3. Q. Are private redevelopers of urban renewal project land affected?

A. Yes. Private redevelopers are expressly included in the definition of "recipient" contained in the regulations. All land disposal agreements between the local urban renewal agency and the redeveloper must require the deed to contain a covenant against discrimination by the redeveloper. The deed must stipulate that the United States is a beneficiary of the covenant and is entitled to enforce it.

4. Q. Do the regulations cover a facility proposed as a "noncash local grant-in-aid"?

A. Yes. Under the urban renewal program, public facilities such as schools and parks, or certain expenditures by colleges and hospitals may be offered for credit as part of the locality's required contribution to the cost of the urban renewal project. These will be accepted for credit on the condition that the facility or institution is operated on a nondiscriminatory basis.

Community Facilities

1. Q. Are all Community Facilities Administration (CFA) programs covered by the nondiscrimination regulations?

A. Yes. College Housing, Senior Citizens Housing, Public Facility Loans, Advances for Public Works Planning, and Accelerated Public Works. The nondiscrimination requirements applicable to the Accelerated Public Works Program extend also to employment practices.

2. Q. What assurance of compliance is required of recipients of CFA financial assistance?

A. Assurance of compliance must be submitted, signed by an authorized official and agreeing to comply with Title VI and all requirements imposed pursuant to HHFA regulations under Title VI.

3. Q. In the case of financial assistance for a public facility, is the required assurance limited to the particular facility aided?

A. No. The assurance extends to the entire system of such facilities operated by the recipient of the aid. For example, assurances of nondiscrimination in the case of a public library provided with Federal aid extend to the recipient's entire public library system.

4. Q. What assurances of nondiscrimination are required of colleges and universities?

A. The assurances from colleges and universities extend not only to the operation of the housing or other facilities provided with Federal financial assistance, but to the institution's admission practices and all other practices relating to the treatment of students.

5. Q. In the case of a college or university which operates several campuses, does the assurance of nondiscrimination extend to the entire institution?

A. Generally, yes. More limited assurance is permitted only where the institution can demonstrate that practices in part of its operation in no way affect its practices in the part federally-aided. This would be a rare case.

6. Q. What assurances of nondiscrimination are required of hospitals?

A. Nondiscrimination must extend to the admission or other treatment of patients, to the admission or other practices relating to the treatment of interns, student nurses and residents, and to the privileges of physicians, dentists, or other professionals to practice at the hospital.

FUNDS SHIFTED

More Money Slated For Rt. 60 Project

An extra $200,000 has been allocated by the State Highway Commission to money available in 1965-66 for improvement of U. S. Rt. 60 west of Williamsburg.

On the recommendation of Richard S. Holland, commission member from the Suffolk district, the $200,000 was taken from $1,900,000 earmarked for work on U. S. Rt. 13 on the Eastern Shore.

Holland told the commission yesterday the Eastern Shore work would cost less than expected.

The switch of funds from U. S. Rt. 13 to U. S. Rt. 60, putting $400,000 in the pot for that work, was the only change the commission made yesterday in the 1965-66 interstate and primary road allocations tentatively approved earlier.

With the formal approval of spending plans, the commission wound up three days of public hearings. It met for two days in Roanoke and finished with the final session in Richmond.

ROAD ALLOCATIONS

The allocations for the two road systems total 142 million dollars, 95 million for the interstate system and the rest for primary and primary arterial roads.

The total 1965-66 budget, including money for urban and secondary roads and for maintenance and operations, totals 252 million dollars.

Before the final session was completed, the commission heard itself praised for the projects it has approved—and was asked for more.

Del. Shirley T. Holland and a delegation from Isle of Wight County appealed for funds to begin for a by-pass of Smithfield along U. S. Rt. 258 and State Rt. 10.

Del. Lyman C. Harrell Jr. of Emporia requested an allocation to four-lane U. S. Rt. 58 between Emporia and Lawrenceville.

Robert Thraves, a member of the Albemarle county board of supervisors, asked the commission for money to improve State Rt. 20 from Barboursville to U. S. Rt. 250.

ANOTHER APPEAL

William R. Blandford, commonwealth's attorney of Powhatan county, asked for funds to four-lane U. S. Rt. 60 from the Chesterfield county line westward to an intersection with U. S. Rt. 522.

E. Floyd Yates, another member of the Powhatan delegation, remarked the commission had "sadly let us down" on U. S. Rt. 60.

Garland Moss, mayor of Chase City, asked the commission for more money to improve State Rt. 49.

The only suggestion which bore fruit, however, came from Del. Russell M. Carneal of Williamsburg and Dr. Murray Lornig of the James City county board of supervisors.

They appealed to the commission for more money for the U.S. Rt. 60 improvement work. It now calls for four-laning the highway to an interchange with Int. Rt. 64 north of Anderson's Corner in James City county.

Real Estate Sale Pattern To Be Studied

A study of real estate selling patterns in Richmond neighborhoods undergoing racial change will be made this summer by three organizations, it was announced today.

The Virginia Council on Human Relations said it will join with the Richmond Council on Human Relations and the Southern Regional Council Inc. of Atlanta in making the study.

Staff economists from the Atlanta organization will help conduct the study.

PANIC SELLING

"An attempt will be made to discover what causes underlie panic selling of homes," the Rev. Robert L. Combs, Virginia Council on Human Relations executive secretary, said.

He said the study will start with letters to selected residents of some neighborhoods asking them to describe what, in their opinion, contributes to "panic selling."

Mr. Combs said purpose of the study will be two-fold: "To discover the effects of panic selling and the purchase of a home by another person under these conditions."

He said the study will be incorporated in a report to be made available late in August.

Neighborhoods in a few sections of the city have undergone racial transition in recent months.

The Federal Housing Administration, in addition, has sold some homes to Negroes in the midst of white neighborhoods under its policy of non-discrimination. The homes were real estate on which FHA mortgages had been foreclosed.

Mr. Combs declined to specify which neighborhoods will be studied.

RT. 95 INTERCHANGE

$300,000 Bond Likely In Construction Row

Legal counsel for the state Highway Department says a Chesterfield county motel owner, seeking to halt construction of a new Int. Rt. 95 interchange, may be asked to put up a $300,000 bond.

The notice came from Paul D. Stotts, an assistant Attorney General.

Teh motel owner, John J. McDonald Jr., has asked federal District Court here to enjoin construction of the interchange where State Rt. 660 now crosses the interstate road in Hanover county.

McDonald, the owner of the Indian Hills Motel, located at a Chesterfield county interchange with Int. Rt. 95, contends he will suffer irreparable injury if the new interchange is built.

McDonald is one of a number of businessmen who protested the State Highway Commission's decision to permit construction of the new interchange.

TO PAY COST

The interchange construction cost will be paid for by Speed & Briscoe, Inc., a truck terminal now located on U. S. Rt. 1. By-passed by Int. Rt. 95, the terminal owners say they are losing money.

When the new interchange is built they would re-locate the terminal there.

Stotts' contention is that the transfer of funds to the highway department from Speed & Briscoe is on a conditional basis. The Hanover county board of supervisors, serving as intermediary, passed on the $300,975 check to the department.

TO SEEK REFUND

But the supervisors' resolution says that if the interchange is not approved in all respects by July 1, it will ask the highway department to refund the money.

This would leave the department responsible for the financing, said Stotts, unless McDonald was ordered by the federal court to post a covering bond.

McDonald's suit, filed Wednesday, names both the federal and Virginia governments as defendants. He contends they acted illegally in approving the interchange.

Judge John D. Butzner Jr. has been asked to give time for a hearing at 10 a.m. Tuesday. He would be asked then to issue a temporary injunction, prohibiting construction. Later he would be asked to make the injunction permanent.

Although others have criticized the commission for allowing Speed & Briscoe to build their own interchange, most of the opposition has come from businessmen already located at other interchange sites.

They contend they paid prime prices for their choice locations and that property values will be lessened if new interchanges are allowed.

The highway commission yesterday, disregarding McDonald's suit, awarded a contract for the interchange project to the sole bidding contractor, the Via Construction Co. of Richmond.

The $300,975 check covers the company's $273,315 bid with 10 per cent added for contingencies.

Downtown Area Is Off 'Slum' Lists

Private capital apparently is providing the impetus to rehabilitate a 14-block downtown area which was declared in need of urban renewal two years ago.

The area in question, bounded generally by Broad, Fourth, Seventh and Eighth sts. and the Richmond-Petersburg turnpike, was proposed for a slum clearance and redvelopment project by the Richmond Redevelopment and Housing Authority.

Now Frederic C. Fay, the agency's executive director, says circumstances have changed so much that public redevelopment no longer is necessary.

Since the time in July, 1963, when City Council rejected 8-1 the redevelopment proposal, a number of new commercial ventures have been undertaken in the area.

The city also proposes to build its downtown coliseum there, near the new federal building.

An example of increased property values in the area: one parcel which sold for $4.80 a square foot three years ago went for $7.50 recently.

W. C. Chewning, a realtor and consultant to a group which opposed the federally sponsored redevelopment proposal, said properties in the area are being purchased by speculators who don't have an immediate use in mind for the property, but who believe in the future of the area.

Richmond Times-Dispatch, Fri., June 11, 1965

Downtown Tract No Longer 'Slum'

By Ed Grimsley

A 14-block downtown area considered two years ago to be a slum in need of clearance and redevelopment is no longer regarded a potential urban renewal project area.

Frederic A. Fay, executive director of the Richmond Redevelopment and Housing Authority, says circumstances and conditions "have changed so much" that urban renewal action is not considered necessary for the area.

Two years ago, the authority proposed a massive anti-slum program for the area bounded generally by Broad, Fourth, Seventh and Eighth sts. and the Richmond-Petersburg Turnpike.

Using federal funds, the authority intended to purchase the property, raze slum structures and sell the land for redevelopment. High-rise apartments, office buildings and off-street parking facilities were among the new uses contemplated for the redeveloped area.

Rejected Two Years Ago

But in July, 1963, City Council rejected the plan by a vote of 8 to 1.

Since then, Fay said, several downtown office and apartment buildings have been constructed. Additional parking facilities, including some in the area proposed for urban renewal, have been developed. And an interchange to serve Interstate Rt. 64 is to be built within the area.

Consequently, the area is "not attractive for redevelopment," Fay said.

W. C. Chewning, a realtor who was consultant to a group that opposed the urban renewal project, said private investors are showing a keen interest in the area.

"Property values have increased tremendously," he said. "Some have doubled."

One parcel that sold for $4.80 a square foot three years ago sold recently for $7.50 a square foot.

Chewning said investors are assembling small parcels into larger tracts that could be used for major commercial ventures. The investors don't necessarily have specific projects in mind.

Many slum houses have been demolished. Pending its need for other projects, the land on which many of these houses stood is being used for parking.

Unquestionably, one of the major factors contributing the revival of private investors' interest has been the public building activity in the area.

Most Negroes Live in City, Creating Woes

Occupancy Area Drops While Population Rises

Editor's note: Richmond shares a problem with most major cities: while the total population of the city is decreasing, the Negro population is increasing—increasing at such a rate that demands for adequate housing cannot be met. This is the first of five articles that explore the area of Negro housing as to the problems and solutions.

By Conrad Lemon
Times-Dispatch Real Estate Editor

Nearly all Negro families that live in the Richmond area live n the city, creating a housing problem.

While the city's Negro population continues to increase, areas of Negro occupancy are decreasing.

"There are," according to Reuben A. Clay, intergroup relations advisor for the Federal Housing Administration office here, 69,000 housing units in the city, 24,000, or 34 per cent of which are occupied by nonwhites.

"I could once approximate the land area occupied by this group," he continued, "but with our redevelopment, our toll road and civic center demolition, which falls directly upon this group, I can only say 42 per cent of the people (Richmond Negro population) live in 34 per cent of the housing on somewhat less than 30 per cent of the land area."

DEMOLITION IN RICHMOND has been, according to Clay, "99 and 44/100 per cent nonwhite. Because the Negro is low on the economic scale, he is defenseless . . . As it does in all other fields of endeavor, the woes of the world of housing fall most heavily on the weakest, and in the America of the 20th Century, these are racial minorities."

The problem Richmond faces is not unlike the problem encountered by most American cities—a greater proportion of the central population is becoming nonwhite, creating housing difficulties.

Why do Negroes come to the city if there is less space for them to live?

"When the Negro is displaced from the farm," said Clay, "he doesn't stop in the suburbs. He comes to the heart of the central city . . . he is excluded from the suburbs, not by statutes, but by economics."

Part of this exclusion, Clay said, centers around transportation. A Negro family may be able to afford to buy a suburban house but, because of limited income, cannot afford to buy a car that may be needed if the house is not near a bus line.

A builder who has constructed homes for Negroes in the suburbs, but who did not wish to be quoted by name, put it more simply: "I have found Negroes want to live in the city," he said.

WITH THE NEGRO POPULATION steadily increasing in Richmond and with the space available for housing decreasing, the Negro housing problem is "a place to build—living room," Clay said.

"The Negro housing problem is becoming increasingly apparent," said Howe Todd, director of City Planning. "Because of the shortage of vacant land, Negro rental housing is not being built at the speed demanded by the increasing population. There is area left suitable for construction of free-standing houses," he said, "but not much for apartments. The real need is vacant land and vacant land is in the county."

But the Negro population is excluded from the county—the suburbs, said Clay, because of economics.

And what are these economics?

The median yearly income for all families in the city is $5,156. The median yearly income for nonwhite families is $3,387.

The Federal Housing Administration uses, as a rule-of-thumb, the formula that a family can afford a house which costs about 2½ times the total of a family's yearly income.

THIS MEANS THAT Negroes families as a group, can afford homes in the $8,000 price range. Since there are few homes in the suburbs selling for this price, most Negroes live in the city where they are likely to find neighborhoods around the central core in various states of deterioration. Here, property values are relatively low.

Even in the city, however, there are few houses that can be bought with such a low income, fewer still that receive approval from a lending institution for a mortgage loan.

Many Negro families, to buy a home, lease sections of it to other Negroes to supplement their income and when housing restrictions are relaxed or not enforced, crowded conditions are likely to develop.

These conditions speed the deterioration of the entire neighborhood by wearing out not only the houses involved but also the schools and other community facilities.

The likely result: a slum.

The likely solution: slum clearance.

"We as a people have come at long last to the awareness that our cities are going to destroy the slums or the slums will destroy the city," Clay said.

But, he added, provisions must be made for persons displaced by slums.

HOMES OWNED by displaced persons are, Clay said, bought by the redevelopment authority or other builder at a "fair market price."

This price, he said, may be a figure "like three thousand dollars which appears to be a good price for the house. But," he

Total city population*	230,310	219,958
Nonwhite city population	73,082	92,331

Median income for all nonwhite families and unrelated individuals	$1,565	$2,615

*Population estimates made by the University of Virginia bureau of public administration indicate that the white population of the city is declining at the rate of 1,792 a year, while the Negro population is rising at the rate of 2,980 a year. If the trend continues, the Negro population will exceed the white population of the city in late 1967 or early 1968.

asked, "what can a man do with three thousand dollars? He can't buy another house for that amount."

Not unless the house is in another area of deterioration.

And not even then, in many cases, without income from another source.

Again this source is usually tenants and another slum is in the making.

The spread of the Negro population has, with but few exceptions, fanned out solidly from Richmond downtown.

The large areas most recently converted from all-white to Negro include most of Church Hill and Barton Heights.

"It was like wildfire on Church Hill," said one city official.

"Unless," said Clay, "there is something in these redevelopment plans which decrees that land will be made available for displaced persons and low income groups, redevelopment will cause greater housing problems. . . . There are no compensating areas for occupants of demolished areas. . . . If the normal market is willing to receive the Negro, he'll probably be priced out of it."

REDEVELOPMENT of one area, said Clay, usually brings about a slum in another area. But, he added, "people don't make slums—people are the victims of slums. Pigs aren't naturally dirty—we make them dirty by penning them up and crowding them."

Every free-standing house that has become available for Negro occupancy in Richmond in recent years, he said, has been quickly taken as have private rental projects. There is, he said, simply not enough housing available for the Negro population, and this shortage is

Blockbusting Called Effective Negro Tool

Editor's note: Negroes, 42 per cent of the city's population, live in 34 per cent of the city's housing on about 30 per cent of the city's area, according to an FHA official. Attempts to solve this problem are being made in public and private housing. The federal government has another answer. This is the last of five articles and deals with President Kennedy's housing order.

By Conrad Lemon
T-D Real Estate Editor

The federal government, in November, issued an executive order that bans all forms of racial discrimination in federally owned, assisted or insured housing.

This order could open new Negro living areas—not areas that would be occupied in ghetto fashion, but neighborhoods where whites and non-whites would have houses.

Before issuance of the order, the Negro population had only one effective tool with which to enlarge its living areas — blockbusting.

Blockbusting, a move whereby one Negro family buys a home in an all-white block or neighborhood, takes three general forms.

Can Come by Default

It may come by default. The white population, faced with a deteriorating neighborhood of its own making and panicked by fears of further decline in property values which, it feels, is brought about by the existence of Negro neighborhoods nearby, abandons the area and moves farther away.

It may take the form of an organized campaign on the part of Negroes to break a neighborhood that is not in a state of decline and is not in the immediate front of the "black belt."

The white residents may offer resistance in the form of a pact under which they agree not to sell regardless of pressure exerted.

Pacts Often Fail

If Negroes are determined to occupy a block, said Howe Todd, director of city planning, these pacts usually fail. One or two of the white residents are offered prices far above market value. While this pressure can be resisted for a while, holding out against such offers becomes more difficult when one home owner feels that his neighbors may have been made the same offer. Knowing that his home will not be bought for the inflated price, or perhaps not even for its market price once one of the houses on the block is sold, he breaks. His distrust, fear and greed take the form of a sales contract and the block is broken.

Blockbusting may take a third form organized pressure by real estate agents, professional blockbusters, who use a technique similar to that used by organized Negroes. They, however, seek to break the block for a profit and whites and Negroes share the cost.

Under this system agents attempt to stampede owners into selling houses at below market prices on the fear that Negroes are going to move in. They augment their pitch with ready cash. Once an owner and the neighborhood panic, the agents buy the property and immediately inflates the price, knowing that Negroes, trying to find better housing and to escape crowded conditions, are willing to pay more for decent homes.

There are no professional blockbusters in Richmond, according to Todd and Pleasant H. Bagby, president of the Real Estate Board of Richmond, but there are agents, Todd added, who are standing by, waiting to take advantage of a broken block though they did not help to break it.

Regardless of the technique used, once a block or neighborhood is opened to Negroes, the Negroes almost immediately fill the area.

Once Negroes move into a new area, adjacent neighborhoods become the targets of the blockbusters, a product of fear of declining property values.

Could End Fear

The federal order could end this fear. If Negroes are allowed to move into the suburbs as individuals the intent of the open-occupancy order it would appear that pressure around the borders of the black belt would subside as would white fear of declining values. It is not, said Reuben A. Clay, intergroup relations advisor for the FHA office here, Negro occupancy that brings about deflated property values; it is white panic.

But, ask some builders, won't the order simply mean that Negro neighborhoods will be formed in other sections, bringing about new pressures for expansion in the suburbs.

Clay and other Negro leaders say no.

"I do not think," Clay said, "there will be any inundation of what are considered white neighborhoods."

Dr. Picott Agrees

Dr. J. Rupert Picott, executive secretary of the Virginia Teachers Association, agreed.

"It is my judgment and sincere belief," he said, "that this will be done in an orderly fashion.

Most Negro leaders questioned said they felt the order, if applied to owner-occupied homes as well as to tract developments, would help stimulate what has been a rather slow home-sale market in the Richmond area. Houses not wanted by the white population may be desired by Negroes.

Better Situation Seen

B. A. Cephas, a real estate broker and a member of the city planning commission, said he thought the order "is going to help the situation. We have people who are in a position to pay above the average rent but can't find suitable locations. It is an opportunity to give the people who can afford it more modern apartments and homes. They will be available in wider areas."

The President's order, which has been questioned as to its constitutionality by at least two Virginia political leaders and which has been called the worst thing that ever happened to the building industry by a Richmond building executive, could bring chaos to the Richmond home construction industry.

Or it could be a step toward solving the Richmond Negro housing problem.

Title: Negro Apts Called Big City Need

"The N hsng mkt will never be saturated in Richmond" - Paul Gordon, who builds N hses, (LE: among other things. He's an operator!)

Gordon built Hickory Apts - 48 units - for N's on North side.

"I have found ... that Negroes want conventional housing, not public, and they don't want to rent anything that looks like public housing."

He builds freestanding houses for N's, but not many because there aren't enough sites for many, and these are in bad n'hoods which makes diff. getting loans for houses.

∴ he concludes, need apts for N's in Rich. Lenders, he says, won't lend to N's for houses - even new - in rundown n'hoods, but will lend to reputable builders for apts.

Harve Todd disagrees with Gordon, who said N's didn't want to build in rundown areas avail to N's. Says N will build in such area because "he does not look down on the area as others might." Claims some like to build in such areas because their new houses, however modest, look "luxurious" in comparison to neighbors, and "more luxurious" than they would in comparable houses area. Todd says what is needed is private capital to go into areas already zoned for multifamily houses (Gordon had tried unsuccess to get a couple areas rezoned for apts.)

Jacob Clayman - had built 350 units in 4-unit bldgs, renting apts for under $60/month. "They go as fast as we can build them," he said," and there is still a demand for them. There is a need for many more N. apts in the city."

Gordon - Mkt for N apts better than that for new homes. His Hickory Apts - received 600 applications for the 48 units.
Gordon: Tremendous Mkt for N apts

But Todd says - before more bldrs get into field, "the negro has got to want better housing. He's got to get a + prop. of family into hsng." Then private developers can get into the field. "They (the dev.) don't (go into the field) now because apparently they can't afford to.

Reg Harris - N's are willing to spend more for hsng if its offered them. So handling University Terrace - $65 a month, all leased immediately, and there's a waiting list.
Harris handled, too:
Byrd Park Apts - purchased 1962 by new owner - converted from W to N. Had high vacancy rate as W apt. Filled immed. as N apts. Rents up to $120/month.
Harris - "Give them something nice, and they will take it."

Title: Sales to Negroes are Slow in Private Housing Project"

After city cleared Carver Slum Clearance area - two private firms - Viking Dev. Corp. of Norfolk, and Reynolds Metals subsid - Reynolds Aluminum Service Corp. Built 98 unit condominium development - Hartshorn homes. Houses are sold as individual homes" for $11,500. At the same time, the buyer purchases a share in the community facilities, such as the $35,000 swimming pool."

Selling very slowly. Only half sold at the time of article. J. Reg. Harris was managing agent for the property.

Harris - Reason was "certain misconceptions about the homes on the part of the public."
"The misconception is that Hartshorn homes is a public housing project. Because the land was cleared by a public agency, and because certain facilities are owned in common, the public generally has come to believe that it is public hsng."

Harris - "A Negro may have at one time been in financial difficulty, and got back on his feet with the aid of P.H. When he is back on his feet and his y has to the point where he can afford something better, what is the first thing he wants to stay away from? It's public housing." (Concl: that's why HH's not selling)

Project director of Reynolds A S Co - Can redevelop on small scale. Must renew whole area and who area environment in order to redevelop successfully.

Problem with environment of N homes – surrounding blighted area, including city's gas tank – RR tracks, warehouses, R-P turnpike. An oasis – but gad, what a desert around it! Compensations – near downtown, recreation, schools.

Reuben Clay – What Richmond needs is more land avail for N hsng, and more N housing developed by private capital free from the "taint" of public hsng. Negroes not as poor as they are painted. Can afford to buy "their share of consumer goods and low- and middle-cy hsng."

Problem 1 per author:

Local bldrs – 3 br. brick veneer could be built in Rich for $9 – $10 M. Using FHA guidelines 2½ x ann. fam y – families with $4 M annual could afford them. Only ⅓ of N fams in Rich have this much y. 3/4 of W fams do.

Conclusion – N hsng mkt exists, but its small.

Clay – "If suitable ~~bldng~~ growing areas could be found near the city, there would be no trouble finding developers and builders," Clay said.

But – white builder skeptical –

Sometimes you have to sell the house two and 3 times. Negroes poor credit risk.

Yet – Mort Sobel, of M.S. Associates, has found opposite true. Sobel built Cornel Ct. on Cool Lane. 33 houses. Says normally you can expect to lose half your buyers between contract and closing times because they can't get loans. Loss rate (buyers) for Cornel Ct. only ⅓.

Sobel: "Negroes can afford more than currently recognized. It appears that credit agencies start off with the assumption that N's are poor credit risks."

Article IV, cont'd -

Because of his success with Corneal, Sobel is ~~bldg~~ planning another subdiv, Oakwood Manor in East Rich. Corneal houses sold $13,000 - Oakwoods to be $10,250 to $12,750.

Other relatively new Negro subdivs -

(22) Archmore - T street between 23rd & 24th Sts - $9000.

(10) Cardinal Ct - Canepa St. - $9300.

(24) Skyview - Amelia St. - $12000.

All the above 3 built by Viking. Little difficulty selling them.

Sobel - "The Negro market is just waking up, and I find it has a good future."

Times-Dispatch Housing Series - Article II
Dec. 31, 1962

Richmond's first pub. housing - Gilpin Ct., 297 units, built 1942.

RRHA - slum clearance is its primary function, not public hsng, tho it did build Richmond's p-h. projects.

The R-P turnpike, the Belvder st. extension, construct. around MCV, Civic center, + "the clearance of the 17th St. Bottom for a city jail have swept away hundreds of slum dwellings, mostly occup by N's. This area, added to the 400 ~~[illegible]~~ acres cleared by the RRHA, substantially reduces areas of Negro occupancy within the city.

Residents displaced by governmental action are given preference in their applications for public housing, but public housing has not been able to accomodate all.

~~November 30~~ end of, 1962 - housing authority had 1,003 verified eligibles on waiting list. This is a normal waiting list, per officials.

Sorp person must be a bona fide Rich resident to qualify for eligibility.

There was a Fulton clearance plan for constructing 450 pub housing units.

Fay vs Clay on Negro removal. See below *

Before clearance can be approved:
Supposedly (per Fay) state law requires construction of "decent, safe and sanitary dwellings ... substantially equal in number to the number of slum dwellings destroyed by clearance if such units are not already available, with rents within the financial reach of the persons displaced."

Have Todd, director of city planning — "you must be careful not to strangle the downtown with public housing. There are better uses of the land."

* When Negro areas are demolished, and when their occupants are not absorbed by p.h., it means they must find, or would rather find, compensating areas. Ruben Clay — "There is always a group somewhere that just disappears following redev'ment. They just fade away."

Example — when 850 families were displaced by R-P turnpike, but only 300 moved into p.h. "The others found housing on their own."

Negro families such as these may move into other N n'hoods, or n'hoods of white occupancy. Existing N n'hoods are already crowded (said Clay) "and when you are overcrowded, you wear out things (faster) because they are overused. The qlty of citizenship goes down in those areas, as do taxes because several fams may pay taxes on a single piece of property instead of on several."

Fay — didn't want to fill city with public housing. Said best way to solve slum problems is via urban redev't, "which enlists the aid of private capital" to do the job.

RICHMOND-PETERSBURG AREA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS
17 East Cary Street
Richmond, Virginia 23219
April 13, 1964

Dear Fellow Richmonder:

I am aware of the pride that we of the Northside feel in our neighborhood and our homes. We cherish the atmosphere of permanence and stability in this part of Richmond, and we recognize that our homes are more substantially built and often more comfortable than many of the newer homes in other parts of the city.

In the area bounded by Brookland Park Boulevard, North Avenue, Claremont, and Brook Road there are many of us who have put our roots down deep.

No one can predict how real estate patterns will develop in the future. We do know that many Negro families are seeking homes which they can take care of and be proud of, and that more and more are moving into previously all-white neighborhoods seeking pleasant and comfortable surroundings.

We know, too, that the continued stability of such a neighborhood depends in large measure on the attitude of the residents presently living there. For this reason we of the Richmond Council on Human Relations would like to ascertain how many there are in this part of the Northside who, because of moral principle or because of deep roots in the neighborhood, would be willing to maintain their residence here even if Negro families should purchase homes among us.

If you feel that you would likely maintain your home here in such circumstances, we would appreciate your checking the first box on the enclosed slip of paper and returning the slip to us. You would not be committing yourself to any movement or organization, and your name would not be made public.

If you would like to attend a discussion meeting on this same topic, please check the second box. The meeting will be held on Thursday, April 30, 8:00 P.M., at the Ginter Park Presbyterian Church, 3601 Seminary Avenue. The title of the discussion will be "No Hiding Place."

Thank you for your consideration and cooperation.

Cordially yours,

John J. McMahon

New Community Would Have Different Style Houses Placed in Groups

Area's First Cluster Community Planned in Suburbs for Negroes

RTD 6-14-64 p D-1

By Conrad Lemon

The Richmond area's first cluster community, which also is the first suburban subdivision that will be sold on a condominium basis, is being planned by a Richmond developer for a tract north of the city.

The development for Negroes, Newtowne Northside, will be built on an 11½-acre site at the southwest corner of Mountain and Greenwood rds.

Seventy-eight houses, all with three bedrooms, that will range in price from $16,000 to $21,000 are planned.

A cluster community is one in which the houses are placed in groups on relatively small lots and the land saved on the lots is incorporated into common areas such as courts and recreation areas.

Under the condominum concept, the buyer obtains full ownership of his house (the same as in buying a house in a conventional subdivision) and at the same time obtains an interest in the common property of the subdivision, such as the recreation areas.

One condominium project has been completed in the city—Hartshorn Homes in the Carver redevelopment area.

The development was built by Viking Development Corp. of Norfolk and by Reynolds Metals Co. After the sale of the homes was complete, Reynolds and Viking utrned the operation of the community over to a community council composed of Hartshorn residents. Community property at Hartshorn includes a swimming pool.

Five Cluster Groups

The builder of Newtowne Northside is Mort Saber Associates. Saber was with Viking during the Hartshorn development. He has since, on his own, built Cool Lane Court, a Negro subdivision, and has built some non-speculative Negro houses.

Newtowne Northside will have five clusters grouped around dead end streets.

There will be at least three different structural designs in each court, said Saber, but the houses of each court will be harmonious in appearance. He said he plans no stereotype community such as Hartshorn.

Some of the houses will be free standing, some will be attached by garages and some will be attached directly but offset from each other.

Landscaping Planned

George Weir Wilson, a landscape architect, has planned the basic landscaping, but the residents of each cluster may make plans for the complete landscaping of the courts.

There will be one large recreation area of about two acres. The developer will provide such things as picnic tables and barbecue pits, but final plans for the area will be left up to the community.

In addition to holding fee simple title to his house, a homeowner in Newtowne Northside, Saber said, will have individual ownership of some land surrounding the house. Lots with a minimum of 80-foot frontage are planned.

But the homeowner will not be responsible for the maintenance of his lot nor of the exterior of the house.

Included in mortgage payments, Saber said, will be funds that will be set aside by the developer to maintain the community areas, to maintain individual lots and to provide such exterior maintenance as painting.

"No one in the community," said Saber, "will have to worry about his neighbor not mowing his lawn. Everyone's lawn will be mowed."

The developer will retain control of the community until its completion, scheduled for about two years. At that time, as with Hartshorn, the developer will turn control of the community over to its residents. Funds which the developer will have been using to maintain the community, will be diverted to the residents who probably will administer it through a council.

George A. MacDonald, Architect

Preliminary Layout of Negro Cluster Community

Shopping Area Planned Adjacent to Development

Savings Are Cited

The principal advantage of the cluster is savings in installation and maintenance costs of roads and utilities since the houses are placed on relatively small and grouped lots and include the maintenance of open areas within a community without reducing the number of houses that can be built on a given tract.

The principal advantages of condominium ownership include the advantages of full home ownership without maintenance worries and include part ownership in community recreational facilities.

Saber, who has two backers—one from New York and the other from Washington—plans to build a small shopping center adjacent to the community.

House plans are now being developed by architect George A. MacDonald of Falls Church.

Despite the efforts of a neighborhood citizens committee, and the co-operation of the area's William Byrd Community Center, some Oregon Hill residents had reservations about the project.

Southside County Cuts School Aid

Times-Dispatch News Bureau

FARMVILLE, June 30—In a special meeting lasting until almost midnight Tuesday, the Prince Edward county supervisors, accustomed to living amidst controversy, took at least three stands likely to continue the tradition. The board:

(1) Sliced $80,000 from the requested local expenditures for the public school system, which is attended mainly by Negro children. The school board had requested $380,000 in local money; it will get $300,000.

(2) Refused to appropriate any local funds for the joint local-state-federal public welfare program in the fiscal year which begins Thursday. However, in another special meeting Wednesday afternoon, the board rescinded that move and substituted another, cutting the total welfare budget from $138,030 to $95,000. Local participation would be continued, but it was unclear exactly how much local money would be involved and whether the county could legally cut federal and state welfare appropriations.

Tuesday's action would have meant a welfare budget of $110,802—but from federal and state sources only. The final action taken Wednesday is for a budget of $95,000—from local, state and federal sources.

(3) Authorized the county school board to procure sufficient mobile classrooms to accommodate enrollment needs this fall and, at the same time, urged the school board to "take such steps as may be necessary" to explore the possible sale of public school buildings not in use. This was viewed as a request that the school board seek to find out what school property Federal District Judge Oren R. Lewis will permit to be sold. Proceeds from any sale should go toward school building programs, the supervisors suggested.

After considering lowering the tax rate because of cuts made in welfare and public school budgets, the supervisors decided to stick with the present rate of $2.50 per $100 assessed valuation on real estate and tangible personal property

Ship to Shore

Tom Rose of Virginia Beach, a VPI biology student, pays a visit to the newest seal at the Norfolk Zoo, to which the United States Marines delivered it only yesterday. Rose felt a proprietary interest in the seal. It was first spotted Monday when it jumped into his boat. He wasn't in the boat and the seal got away then. The marines spied it in the Atlantic near the impact area for Dam Neck rifle range yesterday, ceased fire, and three of them herded it ashore. They named it Surfy and, on orders, delivered it to the zoo.

Atlantic Fleet Forces

TwoChangesMade In Top Commands

NORFOLK, June 30—(AP)—The Atlantic Fleet's 40,000-man marine force, first to be committed as shock troops or policemen in any Western hemisphere crisis, got a new commander Wednesday.

So did the 20,000 men and 94 ships of the service force, which keeps the Atlantic Fleet supplied at sea.

The two changes of command were top events in a day of military activity that also included a visit by Vice President Humphrey.

Humphrey came to Norfolk for a routine briefing on the workings of the four-service Atlantic command, headed by Adm. Thomas H. Moorer.

The new fleet marine force commander is Lt. Gen Alpha L. Bowser. He relieved Lt. Gen. J. P. Berkeley, who retired after 38 years' service.

Admiral Ailes Retires

Rear Adm. Henry A. Renken relieved Rear Adm. John W. Ailes III as service force commander. Ailes retired after 40 years' service.

Berkeley and Ailes were decorated; Berkeley with the Distinguished Service Medal, Ailes with the Legion of Merit.

Berkeley was cited for "his extraordinary grasp of the principles of war and his ability to apply them with maximum effect."

"His untiring efforts in obtaining approval for and his brilliant command of the landing force in Exercise Steel Pike I established him in the forefront of modern military commanders."

Lynchburg College To Expand

LYNCHBURG, June 30—Lynchburg College announced a 10-year, 10.6-million-dollar development program Wednesday which includes the construction of 10 new buildings.

Dr. Carey Brewer, president of the college, said the plan earmarks $2,355,000 for student scholarships, and faculty improvements and benefits, $2,400,000 for academic program support and library acquisitions and $5,832,000 for construction of new buildings.

Construction of three of the buildings had been announced previously and work is scheduled to begin on them in the near future. Those buildings are a chapel and music building, a men's dormitory and a student union building. Contracts have not been let on any of the buildings yet.

The list of construction projects also includes the remodeling of a dormitory into an administrative building and the addition of an annex to Knight Memorial Library.

After considering lowering the tax rate because of cuts made in welfare and public school budgets, the supervisors decided to stick with the present rate of $2.50 per $100 assessed valuation on real estate and tangible personal property and 60 cents on merchants capital.

Special Category

School and welfare appropriations were each placed in a special appropriation category at the suggestion of Commonwealth's Attorney William F. Watkins Jr., who said that in the event that the supervisors' actions were challenged, the operation of other county agencies would thus be unimpaired. The other agencies' sums remained in the general county budget.

The motion to cut local money for schools by $80,000 was made by Charles B. Pickett, seconded by John C. Steck and carried unanimously, although supervisor Hugh M. Jenkins said he favored trimming it by $20,000 more and insisting that the state split public school costs with Prince Edward on a 50-50 basis.

Pickett said Prince Edward appropriates "more per pupil than any other county adjoining us." Jenkins said by his calculations public schools here are costing $376 per child, while the private Prince Edward School Foundation for white children runs on $309 per pupil.

"If one organization can operate on it, I don't see why the other can't." Jenkins said.

Virginians Reminded Of Bell Ringing

Governor Harrison yesterday called to the attention of Virginia residents an act of Congress authorizing the ringing of bells throughout the nation at 2 p.m. on the Fourth of July.

The observance is in remembrance of the tolling of the Liberty Bell in Philadelphia at that hour on July 4, 1776. This proclaimed the signing of the Declaration of Independence and the birth of America as a free and independent nation.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, June 30—The city school board adopted a pupil assignment plan for elementary pupils Wednesday night, based on the neighborhood attendance concept, during a special meeting attended by about 200 persons.

A few city residents spoke out at the special meeting, but the board encountered no organized opposition.

The assignment plan, the second pupil placement program offered by the board in compliance with the 1964 Civil Rights Act, divides the city into six elementary school districts.

One effect of the new policy will be to end the operation of a city elementary school, Jefferson, as an all-Negro facility. It will house the junior high grades — seventh, eighth and ninth—until completion of two junior high schools now under construction.

In addition, Negro teachers who formerly taught at Jefferson will be reassigned to all the other elementary schools. This includes Greenbrier on the northern edge of town.

Each elementary area, including Greenbrier, Venable, Johnson, Clark, Burnley-Moran and McGuffey school districts, has been determined by the capacity of the schools, according to school officials.

George C. Tramontin, school superintendent, explained that the districts are enclosed by streets rather than natural boundaries.

He said the program was set up in "complete disregard to race, creed or national origin."

Tramontin further explained that the map outlining the districts was proposed with the understanding that minor revisions may be necessary when school begins this fall.

"The school board feels that this plan presents the soundest educational plan possible under the existing circumstances by maintaining as nearly as possible the concept of the neighborhood school and by imposing a minimum amount of reassignment of students," the superintendent said.

"There are no easy and perfect solutions to this problem," Tramontin continued, "but it's a program we can live with for at least the next five years without reassignments and disrupting school enrollments."

He added that the board drew up the placement plan after several months of study and consultation with city council and officials of the federal Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW).

"The school board is not a completely free agency to do what it thinks is best," Tramontin continued, "but we took many plans into consideration."

Tramontin added that school officials also considered "assigning a pupil to a school as close as possible to his home because of safety factors in walking and being transported, and providing a plan which will be long-range and not require drastic revision every few years.

"All schools, will be filled very near to capacity" when the new program goes into effect this fall, he commented. "We are already constituted with too many downtown schools" and are in need of school in the out-lying areas."

Judgeship Bill Passed By Senate

Four Posts Are Approved

By Times-Dispatch Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, June 30 — The Senate approved by voice vote Wednesday a bill which would provide two additional judgeships on the United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals and two district judges for Eastern Virginia.

Only one additional judgeship on the appellate tribunal had been anticipated, but the Senate added a second by approving a floor amendment offered by Sen. Tydings (D-Md).

Conservative Democrats from states comprising the circuit advanced the name of Governor Harrison of Virginia for the judgeship provided in the earlier version of the bill.

A news article earlier this month suggested that North and South Carolina Democrats might quietly unite behind Harrison in order to forestall the appointment of a Maryland liberal to the bench.

The news article said Sen. Ervin (D-NC), a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, "is reported to be interested in this approach."

It also was understood at that time that Ervin had expressed hope that Virginia Senators Byrd and Robertson would propose Harrison for the appointment, which would be made by President Johnson subject to Senate confirmation.

It was considered significant therefore, that Ervin joined

Another 'Final' Report

Report Says Baker Exploited Position

From Wire Dispatches

WASHINGTON, June 30 — Bobby Baker was accused Wednesday by the Senate Rules Committee of abuse of his high patronage post to promote his own ends.

The committee suggested consideration be given to indictment of Baker for violation of conflict of interest statutes.

But the report of the committee's Democratic majority rejected as a figment of the imagination a tale of an alleged political payoff on the District of Columbia Stadium project by Matthew McCloskey, a former ambassador and Democratic party fund raiser, which, allegedly, found its way into the 1960 Kennedy-Johnson campaign fund.

The Rules Committee chairman, Senator Jordan (D-NC), filed the committee's report on the Baker case with the Senate Wednesday. It contained sharper language in its indictment of Baker's behavior, and urged stronger remedial action by the Senate, than the previous "final" report, which was filed just short of a year ago.

Recommendations made in the report included adoption of a rule requiring senators, and Senate employes earning more than $10,000 annually, to make periodic reports of outside income.

It also proposed to restrict outside employment of Senate employes to activities not interfering with regular duties.

The investigation began in October, 1963, when Baker resigned his $19,600-a-year job as secretary to the Senate's Democratic majority after disclosures that he had been running a multi-million-dollar private business enterprise in his spare time. Last July 8 the committee reported it found Baker guilty of "many gross improprieties," and closed the books on the affair over the protest of Republican members of the Senate. The case became a

System Held Impractical To Build as Free Facility

By Ed Grimsley

City Council tacitly authorized its trafficways committee yesterday to proceed with plans for the creation of an independent authority to construct a proposed 80-million-dollar expressway system for Richmond as a toll facility.

The committee recommended this approach in a report to Council at a special informal meeting. It said an exhaustive study of financing possibilities has convinced it that "it is not practical or feasible to finance the project as a free facility . . ."

It advised Council that the committee's lawyers are preparing proposed legislation by which the General Assembly could create an authority that would select precise routes for the expressways, issue bonds to finance them and supervise their construction.

The committee also has instructed its consultants to proceed with studies that will enable them to recommend detailed routes, to obtain more precise cost estimates and to determine traffic volumes and revenue potential.

Council was not asked to act on the committee's recommendation, and it didn't. But it could have stopped the committee had it wanted to do so.

On the contrary, Mayor Crowe said Council "received the report on the whole very favorably."

It was understood that the committee would proceed with the next phase of its study, Crowe said.

Crowe said Council would await further reports from the committee before committing itself to the proposed financing plan.

Irvin G. Horner, chairman of the Chesterfield county board of supervisors, said the board has been apprised of the progress of the trafficways committee's discussions on several occasions, the latest on yesterday.

The case became a cause celebre in the presidential campaign.

Last October the case was reopened on the basis of charges that Baker had been involved in the alleged payoff on D. C. Stadium.

The issuance of Wednesday's report, which in effect wraps up both phases of the investigation, served again to emphasize the wide and acrimonious difference in viewpoint between the six-man Democratic majority on the committee and the three-man Republican minority.

In referring to possible indictment of Baker, whose activities are under investigation by a federal grand jury here, the Rules Committee cited a $5,000

EXPRESSWAYS EXPRESSIONS—Richmond's trafficways committee met with City Council yesterday to recommend construction of a toll expressway system for the city. Shown here before the meeting are A. J. Richmond and Henrico and Chesterfield should give them their co-operation in breaking up the traffic logjam that this proposal would help break up."

S. A. Burnette, chairman of the Henrico county board of supervisors, could not be reached for comment.

Although the committee itself endorsed no specific routes, it said continuing studies have confirmed its previously expressed opinion that the expressway system should consist of the following:

(1) A north-south expressway running from the intersection of Interstate Rt. 64 (now under construction) and Interstate Rt. 95 (the Richmond - Petersburg Turnpike) near Bryan Park to a connection with Chippenham Parkway south of the James river in Chesterfield county.

(2) An east-west road running from the Richmond-Petersburg Turnpike in downtown Richmond to Huguenot bridge in the far West End, "following insofar as possible in progress for the past seven months confirmed this need and the desirability of toll financing, the committee said.

Construction of the system as a free facility would have a major impact on the city's bonded indebtedness, the committee said. Although Richmond could legally borrow the additional money needed for the system without exceeding its debt limit, the committee said, "the issuance of bonds in that amount would increase the annual debt service payments out of proportion to the city's total operating expenses and might well have an adverse affect on the city's credit."

Other Needs Will Arise

Further, "the issuance of the required amount of bonds would also leave very little room for meeting other capital improvement needs which will doubtless arise from time to time," the committee continued.

Under the proposed method of financing, it would be necessary for the city to guarantee the payment of up to 20 million dollars on the principal and interest of the money borrowed for the project. But engineers' of a suit either during or after the sale of the bonds."

When its legal advisers complete the proposed legislation for an expressway authority, the committee will seek the approval of Council and the supervisors and ask area legislators to sponsor the measure.

Although the expressways would be almost wholly within the city, they would serve thousands of Henrico and Chexterfield residents, Hence, the committee has worked closely with county officials. And it has consulted representatives of the State Highway Department and area legislators.

"The co-operation of all who have been consulted continued to be of great assistance," the committee said.

Earlier yesterday, the committee met with the Henrico and Chesterfield boards of supervisors to advise them of its recommendations. It didn't seek their approval.

Crowe expressed belief that a metropolitan expressway system such as is here conceived by this trafficways committee, which includes members from Henrico and Chesterfield, offers the finest opportunity for metropolitan co-operation toward the common good yet offered."

For engineering advice, the committee has relied on the firm of Wilbur Smith and Associates and the firm of Howard, Needles, Tammen and Bergendoff.

The investment banking firm of White-Weld and Company and bond attorneys firm of Wood, King, Dawson and Logan have acted as financial and legal advisers.

Brent estimated it would take engineers about six months to complete detailed route, cost, traffic and revenue studies. This would coincide with the opening of the next session of the Generl Assembly in January.

Technically, the east - west road would be called a parkway from Huguenot bridge to its intersection with the proposed north-south expressway.

The committee noted that "regardless of the precise route to be followed, problems of relocation will necessarily arise and should be carefully considered well in advance. But engineers' estimates indicate that it won't be necessary for the city actually to "pay out such funds," the committee said.

It explained that although toll revenue "would be sufficient to meet annual interest and principal payments, the coverage is not sufficient to give the desirable degree of marketability to the bonds at an attractive rate of interest."

The committee said it had considered other methods by which the city could aid the project, such as by the donation of the right of way or by the assumption of annual operating and maintenance costs. "but at present (the committee) considers the guarantee to be the most acceptable and cheapest method of accomplishing the desired purpose."

The second phase includes:

- Drafting legislation that would create an independent authority to construct the road.
- Continuing studies looking toward establishment of definite locations and detailed costs.
- Appointment (by Council) of a committee to study problems of relocation of persons who will be displaced regardless of the precise route that may be chosen.

Editorial comment, Page 10.

In its report to City Council the committee said it proposes to proceed immediately to obtain the detailed location-cost and traffic revenue data required for revenue bond financing "in order to eliminate any delay in completion of the project as a whole."

UP TO ASSEMBLY

It is estimated that this work can be completed in time for the General Assembly, which meets in January, to establish the recommended special authority.

The committee said that engineering and traffic data thus far indicate that the project is feasible.

While tolls would appear to be sufficient to amortize the cost, the committee recommended that the city give a limited guarantee for the payment of funds to take care of any deficits that might be experienced in paying principal and interest. A total amount of 20 million dollars was suggested for this guarantee.

"While the engineers' estimates do not indicate that it will actually be necessary to actually pay out such funds," the report said, "the guarantee will be necessary to obtain marketability on attractive terms regardless of who undertakes the project if it is to be financed by tolls."

SUGGESTED ROUTE

The general route suggested would be one along the Belt Line, connecting with Int. Rts. 64 and 95 (the Richmond-Petersburg Turnpike) in the vicinity of Bryan Park and with Chippenham Parkway south of the James. An east-west connector would run between this north-south road and Int. Rt. 95 to the east by way of downtown Richmond.

The committee said that it was within the city's bonding power to finance the road, but that this would increase the annual debt service payments out of proportion to the city's total operating costs, and might have an adverse effect on the city's credit.

When the proposed legislation for creating the authority is completed, the committee, with the advice and consent of the members of Council and the supervisors of Henrico and Chesterfield, will ask representatives of the metropolitan area to seek its adoption by the General Assembly at the earliest possible time.

Another important factor will be the determination through the judgment of independent engineers and possibly by a court test of whether such a road would result in substantial reduction in volume of traffic on the Richmond-Petersburg Turnpike.

This necessity arises from a clause in the turnpike act that provides the commonwealth may not consent to the construction of a limited access expressway within 25 miles of such road unless it is determined that the construction would not result in a substantial reduction in the turnpike traffic.

The proposed new authority would involve Chesterfield and Henrico counties and Richmond. Although probably no part of it would be constructed in Henrico, citizens of Henrico would be served by it.

COMMITTEE MEMBERS

The committee includes A. J. Brent, chairman; Alan S. Donnahoe, Aylett W. Goode Jr., Frank G. Louthan Jr., J. Harvie Wilkinson Jr., and Councilmen James C. Wheat Jr. and Phil J. Bagley Jr.

The committee thus far has spent about $52,000 for engineering and financial work and advice.

Henrico and Chesterfield officials and all others interested in the project have been kept in touch with progress. Brent said co-operation has been full and appreciated.

Mayor Crowe said after yesterday's closed session that Council received the report "on the whole very favorably."

Yankee

I didn't have much time to think up preconceived notions about Virginia. However, I had visualized Richmond as a city full of stately old homes leading to a Southern version of Fifth ave. The stately old homes are there. But downtown is a different and disappointing story.

Virginians are polite and friendly, probably by nature. In New England we tend to stand back and watch for 10 to 15 years before we get acquainted with newcomers. Parts of Virginia may be like that, but I haven't seen it.

One of the things I find most amazing about Virginia is its liquor laws. I thought New England's Sunday blue laws were bad, but the restaurants here don't permit a cocktail with dinner. Maybe that's why downtown Richmond is deserted by six in the evening—and it is.

One evening I walked around, just looking, and there was literally no one else on the street. I felt like an interloper.

Richmond is an apartment hunter's dream. I didn't know what I'd find here, but one thing I didn't expect was a fireplace. I found one, along with two huge closets in one of those stately old houses that have been converted into apartments.

Virginia has also turned out to be a surprise politically. Why, there's actually a Republican candidate for Governor! I was even more surprised—and pleased—not to find myself engaged in endless arguments about integration. People here seem so much more reasonable than I had expected.

For a Yankee whose knowledge of the South started with "Gone With the Wind" and ended with William Faulkner—with very little in-between—Virginia has been a revelation.

Survey Shows Increase in Housing Segregation

BY JIM HYATT
Chronicle Reporters

Racial discrimination in housing throughout the South slowly increased from 1940 to 1960, a University of Wisconsin sociologist has concluded.

"Many Southern cities are approaching the upper limit of complete segregation," says Dr. Karl E. Taeuber, associate professor of sociology, writing in the August issue of Scientific American magazine.

And, he adds it will "be many decades before residential segregation of whites from Negroes" reaches low levels anywhere in the nation.

He bases his conclusions on a statistical "segregation index" calculated for 207 American cities. An index of 100 indicates complete segregation in housing; an index of 80, that "80 percent of the Negroes would have to be redistributed to predominantly or exclusively white blocks if the city were to achieve an unsegregated pattern of residence."

Using that measure, and housing statistics, he told The Chronicle that in 1940 Houston's "segregation index" was 84.5; in 1950, 91.5; and in 1960, 93.7.

Dallas Index

The Dallas index also rose during those years, from 80.2 in 1940 to 88.4 in 1950 and 94.6 in 1960.

His figures throughout the country ranged from 60.4 in San Jose, Cal., to 98.1 in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., in 1960. Half of the cities in the study have segregation indexes above 87.8; half below.

Housing segregation dropped in the West, Northeast and North Central states between 1950 and 1960, he said, while it increased in Southern cities. Segregation rose in all areas from 1940 to 1950.

"The modest declines during the 1950's in three regions do not conceal the fact that throughout the nation residential segregation continues to be a serious social problem."

Dismissed Poverty

Dr. Taeuber dismissed poverty as a cause of housing segregation, although opponents of fair-housing legislation often argue that economic gains for Negroes will correct residential discrimination.

"The crucial assumption that white and Negro families at the same income level are not residentially segregated is patently false.

"In no city do high-income Negroes live randomly scattered in the same neighborhoods as high-income whites. . . .

"Regardless of income, most Negroes live in Negro neighborhoods and most whites live in white neighborhoods."

In the magazine article, he concludes "neither free choice nor poverty is a sufficient explanation for the universally high degree of segregation in American cities.

Principal Cause

"Discrimination is the principal cause of Negro residential segregation, and there is no basis for anticipating major changes in the segregated character of American cities until patterns of housing discrimination can be altered."

In a telephone interview, he told The Chronicle that some observers have been startled by his pessimistic views that housing changes will be slow.

"Apparently people have the notion that by passing a few bills you can effect a radical change in the social structure."

Dr. Taeuber and his wife will publish his findings this month in a 300-page book titled "Negroes in Cities: Residential Segregation and Neighborhood Change," from Aldine Publishing Co.

He said that although society changes slowly "I don't think that anybody controls it or plans it. Changes do occur, but not always at the rate desired by different groups."

Housing Segregation

Housing segregation, he added, often is determined by bankers, real estate agents and loan officers "independent of the attitudes of the seller involved. There is a lot of informal control over who goes in what neighborhood.

"It is clear even in New York City, where there are open occupancy laws, it is extremely difficult to devise laws which cannot be circumvented."

Homeowners who claim that housing patterns are "a normal process in the free enterprise market" are actually "producing results by their own behavior," he said.

Housing discrimination is "a type of prejudice that can be approved because it is put in economic terms."

Walk with Combs through his neighborhood in transition shows that a great number of different real estate agencies are handling the "for sale" houses.

[5] ~~3500~~ Griffin – 3500 block – 2 houses

Philips-Hall

Total – 5 blocks, 14 houses for sale
11 different real estate agents, 1 owner only two more than once, and then each twice. One is biggest white firm in city (R+R), Loving (W) probably largest N. in area.

Interview with Rev + Mrs. James Carpenter — white minister of almost all-Negro congregation 3319 Hanes
All Souls Presbyterian church.

Quoting Graham of Ruckert + Richardson —
We don't break the block. But after it's broken, we handle Negro customers.
Carpenter — your "principles" don't extend very far.

While b-B tactics are going on, all communications between the races cease.

Black + white r.e. men seem to be working together.
White r.e. men canvass the n'hood, create the rumor.
Negro r.e. men move in — offer to handle your house if you're interested in selling.
Result — whites get the idea that block is "going". They panic. Block goes.
ACTUALLY — no r.e. man need ever have said that N's are moving in. NEVER AT ALL!
Only inquiry is if house is for sale, if we can handle it, etc., and the like.

This MULTIPLE LISTING BUSINESS —
Mr + Mrs C. — How come when multiple listings come into a neighborhood, then all hell breaks loose?

Another tactic to induce panic in a fringe area — advertise a house as colored. Then — whamo, over la rumor mill.

The Carpenter's elderly neighbor – Julia Banks
Pressured, pressured, pressured into selling.
Scared of losing value on house, which prob. represents most of her wealth.
Scared to live in n'hood where N's are.

Other neighbor – the paranoid neighbor who clicks guns all night long, shoots at "ground hogs," "possum", etc., which may be imaginary. Rabid segregationist.
But is selling to N's, though he hates them. Can't be in his house while they are looking at it.

Interview with Dr. and Mrs. ~~Strickland~~ 3507 Montrose
[Presby minister, church park lot, after Bible school].

Owner of house in their n'hood desp. anxious to sell. R.E. agent would not show to N's. Owner showed to N. Told neighbors he would not sell if neighbors would raise $500. Would keep house on mkt until maybe white buyer could be found. Neighbors at first made obvious effort to raise, but didn't raise, the bribe. [a new form of blackmail] House was sold to negroes.

The "panic -"

Neighbors are upset if Negroes walk through drive through, an area which is in transition.

The pressures -

(1) Neighbors claim prop. values will be lowered, if N's move in.

(2) Neighbors tell minister's family his daughter will marry N, if they entertain N's in home.

(3) Real estate agents call often - esp. at night - 8:30 to 11 p.m.

(4) White agent called - "do you plan to sell"?

The tactics -

(1) "Fee-splitting" business with white and negro agent cooperating. [CHECK OUT]!

Some events -

(1) white woman takes a $5000 loss on her house rather than sell to Negroes. House sold to whites, who are trying to back out. Law suit now on. House may go to N's Ahm R.E. agent anyway. Why did woman want to sell - "had to sell, because cheap niggers are ~~moving~~ going to move in."

(2) Another woman in same block was moving away, couldn't care less to whom she sold, sold to Negroes.

From Combs – add to panic tactic – The house in his n'hood which was supposedly sold to Negroes for months before they moved in ⊛ The point rumor spread that people were N's (people who bought) for long time before this was definitely established. The result: rumor feeds panic better than does fact. ⊛ Probably house was not sold before short time before new N owners actually moved in.

Also from Combs – Combs family is being used as a scapegoat for why N'hood is going N.

Interview with Mrs. Peggy Solon, wife of minister (he was in Michigan) - 3310 Fendall

No question that neighborhood is being "pressurized". Three ways - polite, but definite.

(1) Mailings - including complimentary note pad advertising a particular RE company.
(2) Phone calls
(3) Door-to-door [cards left in door, too]

Within last couple of weeks n'hood had become more calm. One house is supposed to have been sold to a Negro. [Maybe the B-B has been accomplished.]

Rumor mill - "buzz groups" - Real estate agent helping to create panic & playing upon it.

* The "panic" is often manifested by social pressure - people afraid of what their friends will think of them if they live next to colored. Degrading in the eyes of their friends.

Operation of panic -
The people are watching & waiting.
[I.E. It's literal QUIET DESPERATION]

But - real estate agents -
(1) Some are blunt in playing "sell or lose property values"
(2) others are more clever than overt -
(a) They are "careful" about where the show houses to negroes, "unless they decide to turn a block" (quote is Mrs. Solon's).

2 cont'd

(b) Real estate agents decide where & to whom they will show the house.

(c) Some r.e. agents won't be the ones to "turn a block", but them — after the first house goes — wham!

(d) Rucker Jr. — trying to move families in — white — to stabilize a n'hood.

LE:

In summary [suggested only per Combs] panic seems to have a cycle — storm (1), lull (2), storm (3), lull (4).

(1) R.E. agents appear, suggest, n'hood disrupted.

(2) Lull — quiet desparation

(3) Negro family move in. Storm. N'hood excited

(4) Lull — resignation. white families move out, Negro families move in.

CODE OF ETHICS

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REAL ESTATE BOARDS

Preamble

UNDER all is the land. Upon its wise utilization and widely allocated ownership depend the survival and growth of free institutions and of our civilization. The Realtor is the instrumentality through which the land resource of the nation reaches its highest use and through which land ownership attains its widest distribution. He is a creator of homes, a builder of cities, a developer of industries and productive farms.

Such functions impose obligations beyond those of ordinary commerce. They impose grave social responsibility and a patriotic duty to which the Realtor should dedicate himself, and for which he should be diligent in preparing himself. The Realtor, therefore, is zealous to maintain and improve the standards of his calling and shares with his fellow-Realtors a common responsibility for its integrity and honor.

In the interpretation of his obligations, he can take no safer guide than that which has been handed down through twenty centuries, embodied in the Golden Rule:

"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

Accepting this standard as his own, every Realtor pledges himself to observe its spirit in all his activities and to conduct his business in accordance with the following Code of Ethics:

Part I
Relations to the Public

ARTICLE 1.

The Realtor should keep himself informed as to movements affecting real estate in his community, state, and the nation, so that he may be able to contribute to public thinking on matters of taxation, legislation, land use, city planning, and other questions affecting property interests.

ARTICLE 2.

It is the duty of the Realtor to be well informed on current market conditions in order to be in a position to advise his clients as to the fair market price.

ARTICLE 3.

It is the duty of the Realtor to protect the public against fraud, misrepresentation or unethical practices in the real estate field.

He should endeavor to eliminate in his community any practices which could be damaging to the public or to the dignity and integrity of the real estate profession. The Realtor should assist the board or commission charged with regulating the practices of brokers and salesmen in his state.

ARTICLE 4.

The Realtor should ascertain all pertinent facts concerning every property for which he accepts the agency, so that he may fulfill his obligation to avoid error, exaggeration, misrepresentation, or concealment of pertinent facts.

ARTICLE 5.

The Realtor should not be instrumental in introducing into a neighborhood a character of property or use which will clearly be detrimental to property values in that neighborhood.

ARTICLE 6.

The Realtor should not be a party to the naming of a false consideration in any document, unless it be the naming of an obviously nominal consideration.

ARTICLE 7.

The Realtor should not engage in activities that constitute the practice of law and should recommend that title be examined and legal counsel be obtained when the interest of either party requires it.

ARTICLE 8.

The Realtor should keep in a special bank account, separated from his own funds, monies coming into his possession in trust for other persons, such as escrows, trust funds, client's monies and other like items.

ARTICLE 9.

The Realtor in his advertising should be especially careful to present a true picture and should neither advertise without disclosing his name, nor permit his salesmen to use individual names or telephone numbers, unless the salesman's connection with the Realtor is obvious in the advertisement.

ARTICLE 10.

The Realtor, for the protection of all parties with whom he deals, should see that financial obligations and commitments regarding real estate transactions are in writing, expressing the exact agreement of the parties; and that copies of such agreements, at the time they are executed, are placed in the hands of all parties involved.

Part II
Relations to the Client

ARTICLE 11.

In accepting employment as an agent, the Realtor pledges himself to protect and promote the interests of the client. This obligation of absolute fidelity to the client's interest is primary, but it does not relieve the Realtor from the obligation of dealing fairly with all parties to the transaction.

ARTICLE 12.

In justice to those who place their interests in his care, the Realtor should endeavor always to be informed regarding laws, proposed legislation, governmental orders, and other essential information and public policies which affect those interests.

ARTICLE 13.

Since the Realtor is representing one or another party to a transaction, he should not accept compensation from more than one party without the full knowledge of all parties to the transaction.

ARTICLE 14.

The Realtor should not acquire an interest in or buy for himself, any member of his immediate family, his firm or any member thereof, or any entity in which he has a substantial ownership interest, property listed with him, or his firm, without making the true position known to the listing owner, and in selling property owned by him, or in which he has such interest, the facts should be revealed to the purchaser.

ARTICLE 15.

The exclusive listing of property should be urged and practiced by the Realtor as a means of preventing dissension and misunderstanding and of assuring better service to the owner.

ARTICLE 16.

When acting as agent in the management of property, the Realtor should not accept any commission, rebate or profit on expenditures made for an owner, without the owner's knowledge and consent.

ARTICLE 17.

The Realtor should not undertake to make an appraisal that is outside the field of his experience unless he obtains the assistance of an authority on such types of property, or unless the facts are fully disclosed to the client. In such circumstances the authority so engaged should be so identified and his contribution to the assignment should be clearly set forth.

ARTICLE 18.

When asked to make a formal appraisal of real property, the Realtor should not render an opinion without careful and thorough analysis and interpretation of all factors affecting the value of the property. His counsel constitutes a professional service.

The Realtor should not undertake to make an appraisal or render an opinion of value on any property where he has a present or contemplated interest unless such interest is specifically disclosed in the appraisal report. Under no circumstances should he undertake to make a formal appraisal when his employment or fee is contingent upon the amount of his appraisal.

ARTICLE 19.

The Realtor should not submit or advertise property without authority and in any offering, the price quoted should not be other than that agreed upon with the owners as the offering price.

ARTICLE 20.

In the event that more than one formal written offer on a specific property is made before the owner has accepted an offer, any other formal written offer presented to the Realtor, whether by a prospective purchaser or another broker, should be transmitted to the owner for his decision.

Part III

Relations to His Fellow-Realtor

ARTICLE 21.

The Realtor should seek no unfair advantage over his fellow-Realtors and should willingly share with them the lessons of his experience and study.

ARTICLE 22.

The Realtor should so conduct his business as to avoid controversies with his fellow-Realtors. In the event of a controversy between Realtors who are members of the same local board, such controversy should be arbitrated in accordance with regulations of their board rather than litigated.

ARTICLE 23.

Controversies between Realtors who are not members of the same local board should be submitted to an arbitration board consisting of one arbitrator chosen by each Realtor from the real estate board to which he belongs or chosen in accordance with the regulations of the respective boards. One other member, or a sufficient number of members to make an odd number, should be selected by the arbitrators thus chosen.

ARTICLE 24.

When the Realtor is charged with unethical practice, he should place all pertinent facts before the proper tribunal of the member board of which he is a member, for investigation and judgment.

ARTICLE 25.

The Realtor should not voluntarily disparage the business practice of a competitor, nor volunteer an opinion of a competitor's transaction. If his opinion is sought it should be rendered with strict professional integrity and courtesy.

ARTICLE 26.

The agency of a Realtor who holds an exclusive listing should be respected. A Realtor cooperating with a listing broker should not invite the cooperation of a third broker without the consent of the listing broker.

ARTICLE 27.

The Realtor should cooperate with other brokers on property listed by him exclusively whenever it is in the interest of the client, sharing commissions on a previously agreed basis. Negotiations concerning property listed exclusively with one broker should be carried on with the listing broker, not with the owner, except with the consent of the listing broker.

ARTICLE 28.

The Realtor should not solicit the services of an employee or salesman in the organization of a fellow-Realtor without the knowledge of the employer.

ARTICLE 29.

Signs giving notice of property for sale, rent, lease or exchange should not be placed on any property by more than one Realtor, and then only if authorized by the owner, except as the property is listed with and authorization given to more than one Realtor.

ARTICLE 30.

In the best interest of society, of his associates and of his own business, the Realtor should be loyal to the real estate board of his community and active in its work.

CONCLUSION

The term Realtor has come to connote competence, fair dealing and high integrity resulting from adherence to a lofty ideal of moral conduct in business relations. No inducement of profit and no instructions from clients ever can justify departure from this ideal, or from the injunctions of this Code.

The Code of Ethics was adopted in 1913. Amended at the Annual Convention in 1924, 1928, 1950, 1951, 1952, 1955, 1956, 1961, and 1962.

MAYOR MAKES NEW APPOINTMENTS

2 New Commissioners Named to EOC; Vacancy Exists on 10-Member Body.

Mrs. Emma Michael and William Tutton, Jr. are the two new members of the Equal Opportunity Commission who were recently appointed to the policy making body by Mayor J. Harold Grady.

Mrs. Michael, a housewife and civic worker, fills the vacancy created by the resignation of Dr. G. James Fleming, head of Morgan State College's Political Science Department. Mr. Tutton, representative of the Maryland Restaurant Association, is the new member provided for in a recent ordinance which designated that an additional commissioner be an active member of the restaurant association.

At present, another vacancy exists on the 10-member Commission with the recent resignation of Mr. Francis S. Filbey, union official. It is expected that Mayor Goodman will appoint a replacement to serve the remainder of Mr. Filbey's term which runs until October 1963.

In addition to filling this vacancy, the mayor will also be concerned with the appointments of three commissioners whose terms expired in October. They are: Dr. Raymond V. Rangle, chairman; John P. Hauswald and Judge Robert B. Watts.

All members of the commission, with the exception of Dr. Leon Sachs, are appointees of Mayor Grady. Dr. Sachs has been a member since the EOC was created in 1956, and was originally appointed by the former Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro. He was reappointed in 1961 by Mayor Grady for a three-year term which expires in October 1964.

Houston, Tex. – Job offers for Negro college graduates are outpacing the available applicants, according to Dr. S. M. Nabrit, president of Texas Southern University. Industries are in dire need of mathematicians, secretaries, accounting personnel and draftsmen. Employers have also opened their foremen training programs to Negroes.

Richmond, Va. – The Virginia Council on Human Relations is about to embark upon an experimental project in Equal Opportunity Consulting and Recruiting Service which will be available to employers in and out of the state who want to open new establishments in Virginia and wish aid in initiating equal employment operations. The program will be geared to interviewing, testing, referring and recruiting Negro and other minority group personnel.

St. Louis, Mo. – The Council on Human Relations recently won a court case concerning the constitutionality of its public accomodations law when the circuit judge dismissed a suit filed by six tavern and restaurant owners.

Washington, D. C. – Robert L. Wearring, president of the Building Laborers Local 764, is the first Negro to be appointed to serve on the District Apprenticeship Council. The Council, which promotes and supervises apprenticeship training programs in the trades, has three members from labor and three from management.

AD-VENTURES

Attention all high school and college students!

If you are classified as the veritable "bookworm" and you don't mind working in a position where you meet people all day and stay on your feet 40 hours a week, then you should consider the wide-open field of Library Science.

Believe it or not, this is the area where few are called but many could be chosen if they qualify for the job. As an example, Dr. Virginia Jones, dean of the graduate school of Atlanta University, reported recently that she has 800 requests for qualified librarians and only 25 full-time candidates for master's degrees available to fill them.

On the Baltimore scene, Edwin Castagna, director of the Enoch Pratt Free Library, announced that there is a continual need for professional librarians, particularly in the young children's area. In order to attract more potential applicants to the field, he said that the library has established a one to two-year preprofessional trainee program, for persons with AB degrees, where it is possible for them to engage in library work with pay prior to enrolling in a graduate library school to obtain their master's degree.

The opportunities are vast in this field.

Children's Librarians are responsible for book selection and reading guidance of the individual child, visits to schools and work with parents and community groups. Young Adult Librarians are responsible for book selection and reading guidance of the individual young adult, visits to schools, film programs for young adults and work with parents and community groups.

Adult Assistants work in the area of reference and reader advisement, in addition to making contacts and cooperating with community groups to stimulate the use of the Library. Catalog Librarians attend to the classification and cataloging of library materials in assigned subject fields.

The guidance counsellor at your school has all the information on how to go about preparing yourself to become a professional librarian. Check with him, for who knows, this may be the AD-VENTURE for you.

Professional Librarian, A Rewarding Career

72 FILE JOB COMPLIANTS WITH EOC

Since the first of the year, 72 persons have brought complaints of discriminatory employment practices to the EOC office. During 1961, a total of 83 complaints were filed with the Commission.

Experience has shown that it takes from two to three months to process a complaint. This is due to the fact that generally, during the initial investigation, certain conditions arise which require additional extensive probing. Furthermore, there is only one investigator employed on the EOC staff in addition to the executive secretary to process these cases.

In recent weeks, two cases have been closed with the employers signing agreements that they will maintain an employment policy of non-discrimination on the basis of race, religion, national origin or ancestry, and will fully comply with the provisions of the equal employment law, Ordinance No. 379, as amended.

In one case, the complainant responded to a newspaper ad and was denied an application by the company on the grounds that a sufficient number of persons had been employed for the job.

Several visits by the EOC staff revealed, however, that the company was still in need of help and continued to employ additional personnel.

Inasmuch as the company failed to offer the complainant an application, or to suggest that he return in case of future job openings, the EOC representatives felt there was reasonable cause to believe that unfair employment practices were being engaged in by the company. Subsequently, a negotiation session was held with company management and an agreement signed. The key point in this agreement was that the complainant would be notified of, and allowed to compete for, the next job opening with the company. Also, the firm agreed to advise the Commission of its job openings for the next six months.

In the other case, the complainant, responding to a newspaper ad for factory worker, was permitted to fill out an application with the company. Two weeks later, she noted the ad reappearing in the paper and returned to the company to request employment, whereupon she was informed that experienced help was needed, although this qualification was not cited in the advertisement.

Investigation revealed that while the company did follow a merit employment policy in most of its departments, there were indications that Negroes were not being employed in the field of employment covered by the advertisement.

During the initial interview, the management, upon suggestion of the EOC staff, agreed to interview the complainant, but subsequently refused her employment because she failed to produce references demanded of all applicants.

Nevertheless, the company entered into negotiations with the EOC staff and signed an agreement after hiring three Negro applicants.

EMPLOYMENT LAW
What the Law Says About Equal Employment Opportunity

Ordinance No. 379, as amended, applies whenever any employer with 15 or more employees, employment agency or labor organization acts in a discriminatory manner towards any individual because of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry, in connection with the following:

- Hiring and firing
- Upgrading or promotion
- Training and apprenticeship programs
- Referral practices of employment agencies
- Membership in labor unions
- Employment application forms or interviews
- Any other terms or conditions of employment

Violators of this law are subject to investigation by the Commission and possible legal action.

RESTAURANT OWNERS AGREE TO OPEN DOOR POLICY WHEN FACED WITH COMPLAINT

"OK, what do you want me to do?"

This has been the general reaction of restaurant owners when confronted with the fact that Ordinance No. 1249, the public accommodations law, has been in effect since its approval by the Mayor and City Council last June.

During the period the law has been in existance, there have been 19 complaints filed against 17 eating establishments in the city, many of which are small concerns located in the downtown area, particularly in sections where local private and public offices are integrated.

With the exception of eight cases which are under investigation, 11 have been resolved through negotiations between the restaurant owners and EOC staff members. In each of the closed cases, the owner has signed an agreement indicating his willingness to abide by the law, to advise his employees of the law and to direct them to comply with the provisions of the law.

ACCOMMODATION LAW
Law on Public Accommodation

Ordinance No. 1249 applies whenever an owner, operator or agent of any hotel, motel, inn or restaurant (where the average daily food sales exceed the average daily alcoholic beverage sales) discriminates against any individual because of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry, in connection with the following.

- Refusing, withholding from, or denying any of the accomodations, advantages, facilities and privileges to any person.
- Circulating or displaying any notice or advertisement stating or implying that such privileges or accommodations are being denied or withheld.

Violators of this law are subject to investigation by the Commission and possible legal action.

In one case, the owner, upon being faced with a charge of discrimination for refusing to serve a Negro patron, fired the waitress involved because her refusal to serve the complainant did not conform to the new "open door" policy of the restaurant.

In another situation where a Negro patron was denied service, the owner explained there had been a misunderstanding between his employee and the complainant, and thereupon invited the person to return to his establishment and dine with him.

When initially faced with the charge of discrimination, many of the owners express the fear that they may lose the bulk of their white trade during the transitional period of serving customers of all races, colors and creeds. However, when advised by EOC that the law does not state that service must be given to those customers who are rude, unkempt or disorderly, the owners tend to change their line of thinking during the negotiation session, and subsequently agree to abide by the law.

According to the EOC records, there have been at least three or more complaints of denial of service in restaurants each month since the passage of the law in June. Within three weeks after the law was in force, four persons filed complaints against three restaurants. In July, three complaints were filed; in August, there were again four complaints filed against three restaurants; in September there were three complaints and in October there were five.

Experience to date has shown that it takes about two weeks to process a complaint after it has been certified by the EOC Commission. However, there have been instances where longer periods have been necessary due to technical problems involved.

LITERATURE – The Commission has ample copies of three pamphlets available for distribution. One, "Equal Employment Opportunity in Baltimore", describes the principal features of the local law. The second, "Equal Job Opportunity for All", tells the how, when and where of filing a complaint. The third, "The Doors Are Opening", seeks to encourage minority group youth to acquire the training and skill necessary to compete successfully in gaining employment in Baltimore. These pamphlets may be obtained at the office of the commission upon request.

TELEVISION – Now being shown on all three television channels is a one-minute spot featuring key Colt football players John Unitas, Lenny Moore, Raymond Berry, Jim Parker and Gino Marchetti. The purpose of this spot is to show that the efficient teamwork of the Colts is based mainly on the ability and qualifications of each player regardless of his race, color, creed, national origin or ancestry. Just as teamwork is the key to success with the Colts, so teamwork is the key to success in any business where individuals should be employed on the basis of ability and qualifications.

The Commission is currently preparing new animated cartoon spots on merit employment which are scheduled to be televised on all three channels beginning the first of the year. They will replace the three which are now being shown, one of which was awarded top prize in the one-minute category by the Baltimore Art Directors Club.

REPRINTS – The Commission has on hand for distribution a limited supply of Burt Schorr's article on job recruiting on Negro College campuses which appeared on the front page of the WALL STREET JOURNAL on August 6, 1962. The article points up the fact that with the continued expansion of equal employment opportunities to Negroes, industry and government recruiters are directing their attention more and more to the Negro Colleges.

THE FORTNIGHTER, a special publication issued by the Associated Builders and Contractors, Inc. for its membership, recently devoted its edition to a thorough explanation of the equal employment law in Baltimore and the functions of the Commission.

RESEARCH STUDY TO GIVE EOC 'EQUAL EMPLOYMENT BAROMETER'

An "Equal Employment Barometer" will soon be at the disposal of the Equal Opportunity Commission allowing it to determine the local employment progress of Negro and white persons educated in Baltimore City.

This "Barometer" will be available upon completion of a research study which is now being conducted under the direction of Dr. Bernard Levenson of the Department of Social Relations of Johns Hopkins University.

The purpose of the study is to determine if Negroes and whites with comparable education receive comparable jobs; if, when Negroes do have comparable jobs to whites, they receive comparable earnings. The study will also show whether or not Negroes experience a difference in their initial earnings, and if so, whether or not this gap tends to narrow with more training and experience on the job.

Furthermore, the study will indicate the changes in earnings and rates of employment in recent years, specifying the trades where such changes have increased, remained the same, or decreased.

In amassing the data and information for the study, it was necessary for the researchers to secure the graduation records, since June 1956, of Carver Vocational-Technical High School and Merganthaler Vocational-Technical High School. These records were then submitted to the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivor's Insurance who cooperated in providing the employment and earnings records, even though no identification of any individual was possible since BOASI is forbidden by Congress from disclosing such information without the consent of the individuals involved.

The two schools were chosen because, while the graduates of one are virtually all Negro and the other virtually all white, both have comparable facilities and plants, offer a similar curriculum and are staffed by instructors conforming to the same requirements with similar reputations for the quality of their instruction. In addition, both schools are essentially terminal educational institutions.

It is anticipated that sometime in the future a follow-up will be done in order to determine the employment progress of those in the present study as well as incorporating data of subsequent graduating classes. Through the regular updating of the study, the EOC will be able to maintain a "highly reliable Equal Employment Barometer", according to Dr. Levenson.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE

RALEIGH

TERRY SANFORD
GOVERNOR

FOR RELEASE: At 1:00 p.m., Friday, January 18, 1963

STATEMENT BY GOVERNOR TERRY SANFORD

THE GOOD NEIGHBOR PROGRAM

In North Carolina we will attempt to provide leadership for the kind of understanding America needs today.

To carry out these hopes we will do five things right now:

1. We have established the North Carolina Good Neighbor Council.

It will consist of 24 outstanding citizens of the State. David S. Coltrane will be chairman; Dean James T. Taylor will be vice chairman. Coltrane is former Director of Administration and presently Special Consultant to the Governor. Taylor is former Dean of Men at North Carolina College.

We will also name an additional advisory committee to reach more sections of the economy and the State.

The Council will have a two-fold mission (1) to encourage employment of qualified people without regard to race, and (2) to urge youth to become better trained and qualified for employment.

2. We are asking all Mayors and Chairmen of County Commissioners to establish local Good Neighbor Councils.

3. We have issued a memorandum to heads of State agencies, departments, and institutions, asking them, if they have not already done so, to examine and formulate policies which do not exclude from employment qualified people because of race.

4. Being aware that complete success cannot be achieved without wise and vigorous leadership from private business and industry, we will conduct a conference this spring, inviting leading industrialists and businessmen to participate.

5. We call on church leaders, pastors, civic organizations, to support the objectives of the Good Neighbor Councils in their own effective ways.

In addition to Coltrane and Taylor, the members of the North Carolina Good Neighbor Council are: Marse J. Grant of Raleigh, editor of the Biblical Recorder, official publication of the North Carolina Baptist Convention; John H. Wheeler, president of Farmers and Mechanics Bank at Durham; J. P. Strother, managing editor of the Kinston Daily Free Press; John W. Winters, Raleigh realtor and member of the Raleigh City Council; Roy D. McLaurin, Laurinburg businessman; Dr. Reginald A. Hawkins, Charlotte dentist; Bruce F. Jones, Edenton automobile dealer; Clark S. Brown, Winston-Salem funeral director; J. S. Stewart, president of Mutual Savings and Loan Association and member of the Durham City Council; Edward Loewenstein, Greensboro architect; and Dr. John R. Larkins, State Department of Public Welfare.

Other members of the Council will be announced later.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

SELECTIVE BUYING CAMPAIGN ENTERS SECOND PHASE

Atlanta, Ga. -- Atlanta's "Operation Breadbasket's" selective buying campaign against Highland Bakeries has entered its second phase. Ministers in the Atlanta area announced that this decision was made after repeated requests for upgrading Negroes were refused. A spokesman said "Operation Breadbasket" was told that further requests for improved job opportunities would be met with "fewer jobs for Negroes."

Entering into its second week, "Operation Breadbasket" will now involve the active support of over 500 social and civic clubs in addition to the more than 400 Negro ministers who first called the campaign.

Highland Bakeries was selected as a target, according to a member of the negotiating committee, after negotiations for advancing present Negro employees and hiring more Negroes in skilled capacities failed.

"Operation Breadbasket" is modeled after the highly successful selective patronage campaign carried on in Philadelphia over the last 2 years. The ministers in that city have approached 19 industries and have created more than 1,000 new white-collar jobs for Negroes in these businesses.

MORE

The structure of "Operation Breadbasket", like that of the Philadelphia campaign, is completely informal. The selection of industries and companies within industries and how and when they should be approached is done by a priorities committee. The priorities committee has no chairman, and the membership constantly shifts.

In recent weeks Negro clergymen throughout the country have begun similar selective buying programs. In addition to Atlanta and Philadelphia, selective buying campaigns have been reported in Chicago, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Wilmington, Del.. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, has indicated the possibilities of a nation-wide conference of Negro religious leaders to discuss the prospects of coordinating all future selective patronage campaigns.

HUMAN RELATIONS BULLETIN

ISSUED BY THE

NORTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS
121 East Third Street — Charlotte, North Carolina

T. FRANKLIN WILLIAMS, M. D.
Chairman

HARRY S. JONES
Executive Secretary

This bulletin is issued periodically for the purpose of disseminating information on problems, programs and progress in the field of human relations. Readers are encouraged to send items suitable for inclusion in this bulletin.

SIGNIFICANT COURT RULINGS:

1). Federal Judge Edwin M. Stanley told Caswell County school officials on December 21 that unless an acceptable plan for desegregation was prepared by January 2, Negro children would be free to choose any school in the county they wished to attend beginning the second semester, Negro attorneys were instructed to notify Negro students of this freedom of choice ten days before the semester begins.

2). At the same time, Judge Stanley ruled that some 200 Negro students involved in desegregation suits in Durham must be admitted to the "white" schools of their choice by the second semester of the current school year. Further school desegregation in Durham was delayed when school officials announced that a study committee had been appointed to submit a plan of desegregation. This plan must be presented by May 1, and approved by July 1. Otherwise, a complete freedom-of-choice plan will go into effect at the opening of schools next September.

3). The U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals ruled on December 7 that a suit asking the desegregation of Clarendon County, S. C., schools would be tried as a class action. Judge C. C. Wyche of the Eastern South Carolina Federal District Court had ruled that it was not a class action and had dismissed all but one of 40 plaintiffs. Said the Appeals Court: "A common set of facts pertain to all the plaintiffs in their effort to secure admission to previously all-white Clarendon schools." The case could be an historic one. If decided in favor of the plaintiffs the ruling would apply to all others similarly situated, making unnecessary a multitude of court cases for individual pupils.

4). The South Carolina Supreme Court early in December reversed lower court convictions of Negro youths involved in lunch counter demonstrations in Sumter in 1960. The youths were arrested on breach-of-peace charges, some when they attempted to get service at a "white" lunch counter, and some when they picketed outside the store. The Supreme Court ruled that the facts of these cases did not support the charges. In effect, they said that non-violent protest of segregation does not constitute a breach of the peace.

ITEMS FROM AROUND THE STATE:

RALEIGH: Mayor William G. Enloe has named an interracial committee of three Negroes and four white persons to coordinate efforts to satisfy the desegregation demands of Negroes and improve race relations.

KINSTON: The Kinston Ministerial Association (white) and the Ministerial Alliance (Negro) have merged their organizations into a single unit. It will be known as the Lenoir County Ministerial Fellowship.

GREENSBORO: The Moses H. Cone Memorial Hospital has invited Greensboro Negro doctors and dentists to apply for staff privileges. The hospital is a defendant in an integration suit challenging for the first time the "separate-but-equal" clause of the Hill-Burton Hospital Construction Act.

REIDSVILLE: A group of Negro parents has brought suit asking that all public schools in the city be desegregated. The suit alleges that the Reidsville Board of Education has used provisions of the pupil enrollment act to maintain segregation in violation of the U. S. and State constitutions.

MONROE: Mayor Fred Wilson has appointed a "Better Citizenship Committee" of four Negroes and four white people to advise the City Council and develop plans for eliminating discrimination and segregation in the city.

RALEIGH: A resolution from the Raleigh Ministerial Association to the Mayor and the City Council calls for the integration of all public recreational facilities, and urges the Mayor to use his influence to persuade restaurant owners to serve all customers, irrespective of race.

CHARLOTTE: Memorial Hospital has admitted a Negro doctor to its private medical staff for the first time. As associate on the medical staff, Dr. C. Warren Williams has been granted full surgical privileges.

HOWARD JOHNSON CHAIN AGAINST SEGREGATION

The Howard Johnson Company has put itself on record against racial segregation in its far-flung chain of restaurants. Declaring that its national policy is to provide "service without discrimination," the company claimed "marked accomplishment" in putting this policy into practice in the South.

A management letter in December to supervisory personnel said that of 297 company-operated restaurants, in only 18 does "community action still impose restrictions upon who may enter and be served."

Of 279 restaurants serving all travelers regardless of race, the letter said, nearly 100 of them are in the deep South.

The letter pointed out that in addition to 297 company-operated restaurants there are 339 other Howard Johnson's restaurants run by local proprietors under license agreements.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF WHAT SEGREGATION MEANS

Few of the graduates of Negro colleges in North Carolina find jobs in private industry. "None of the nation's industrial or sales firms comes here for employes," said William P. Malone, job placement director at North Carolina College for Negroes in Durham. "Federal Government and teaching recruiters come on the campus, but that is about it."

The placement problems of the South's white colleges are minor by comparison. At the overwhelmingly white University of North Carolina, recruiters for business and industry swarmed on the campus last spring. The university placement service reported 395 companies "from throughout the nation" conducted 2,803 campus interviews in the four months preceding the end of the school year. In addition, 367 job openings were listed by letter with the placement office.

CHRISTIANITY SHOULD MAKE A DIFFERENCE

"We boast of our Christian society, and, if this is true, we need have no fears in granting equal privileges to all our citizens. It is logical to conclude that agencies operated by governments and all business licensed by government should offer equal employment and services to all citizens.

This is not only legally right, it is morally right, and this should be the strongest force in a Christian community such as ours."

--A. E. Spears, Vice-President, Mechanics & Farmers Bank, Charlotte

REMEMBER SIX YEARS AGO?

What has happened to the first contingent of Negro students who, six years ago, braved howling mobs to enter previously all-white schools? . . . These boys and girls are among our heroes. . .

Like the first wave of U. S. soldiers to hit the beaches of Normandy in World War II, the mission of these students was to establish a beachhead. They might now take comfort in announcing "mission accomplished." . . .

These young pioneers had only one defense and that was their sheer ability to absorb punishment, and to take insults without retaliation. These Negro boys and girls must have graduated with the Heavenly Father's "Cum Laude" citation. . .

Negro students were not having their first taste of bitterness when they faced the unfriendly faces. They had been introduced to suffering long before in numerous and subtle ways. And so they did not have to be drafted for the conflict.

Out of a sense of mission and Provident election, the Negro students accepted their roles as witnesses to the cause of freedom, through suffering. History elected them. God strengthened them. We shall remember them, with thanks.

KENTUCKY GOVERNOR ASKS EQUAL SERVICE FOR ALL

Governor Bert T. Comps of Kentucky has asked managers of 7,000 restaurants, theatres, hotels, motels and other places of accommodation to serve all persons and to display a special emblem indicating that they provide equal service to all.

In a letter to the managers the Governor said: "I hope you will join other Kentucky business men who are participating in our program of Equal Service for All in places of public accommodation, in commemoration of the 100th Anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation. We know that many restaurants, theatres, hotels, motels and other similar places are serving without discrimination based on race, creed or color and that it has not hurt their business. We ask you to join them through this voluntary program.

"We hope you will be able to display the emblem which shows that you provide equal service to all. We are trying to attract people to come to Kentucky to spend their tourist dollars. It is my hope that visitors as well as our own people will come to know this as a sign of Kentucky hospitality in the very best tradition and that people will not be embarrassed because of their race, creed, or color when they seek service in restaurants, movies and other accommodations in Kentucky."

HOORAY FOR THE SOUTH!

This year the annual Shrine Bowl North-South game, played at Miami, Florida, was different. For the first time in its seventeen year history there were Negro players on the team representing the South. One was a mercury-fast halfback from this year's national championship small college team, the Florida A. and M. University Rattlers. The other was a shifty and brilliant ball carrier from Mississippi's Jackson State College. . .

The game was a thriller . . .

With the South trailing by a 7-to-12 score and only 37 seconds remaining in the game, the Dixie quarterback faded back and rifled a pass to his Negro teammate from Jackson State College. The fleet halfback eluded North tacklers and raced into the end zone for a touchdown. . . A neatly executed forward pass (on the play after touchdown) put the South ahead 15-to-14. A few seconds later the game ended.

We felt real proud of the South, not because it had won, but because in this game its representatives had broken with the dead past and utilized the talents of a couple of Negro players on its all-star team.

LITTLE REBELS

When a white Charleston, S. C., family moved North, reports the city's News and Courier, the mother was concerned about how her children, accustomed to segregated schools, would adjust to Negro children in their classes. After the first day at the new school, the youngsters reported that they had eaten lunch with Negro children. Surprised, the mother asked why.

"Well," they protested, "you didn't think we'd eat with those Yankees."

AN OUTSTANDING ARTICLE

"A Letter From A Region In My Mind" was the title of James Baldwin's article in the Nov. 17, 1962, issue of the New Yorker Magazine. Baldwin's letter, as noted by commentator Edward P. Morgan, may mark the nearest anyone has ever come to leading a white man intellectually into the furnace of torment that has been, and still is, a black man's fate.

Another commentator, Harry Fleischman, says: "Baldwin makes frighteningly clear the deadly purposefulness of Elijah Muhammad and his Nation of Islam movement, which has attracted thousands of followers on a doctrine of black supremacy, venomously preaching that all white people are devils, about to be brought down. The letter may first shock and enrage even the most thoughtful minds, who then, however, are likely to wilt in shame and humility before the major truths that Baldwin insists on assembling. The largest truth of all is that time is running out for the opportunity for amicable acceptance of the Negro as a full-fledged member of the human race."

A FELLOW HUMAN BEING: HARVEY GANTT (Negro)

We are fond of boasting to Yankees that we Southerners really like and understand the Negro on an individual basis better than they. The Clemson College students, given the opportunity, should now prove it. They should extend the hand of friendship to Harvey Gantt and accept him in a spirit of Christian charity.

As proud South Carolinians, as concerned Americans, and as citizens of the world community, they can do no less. One wonders how a man of college age today can possibly think he is preparing himself to live in a state whose population is 40 percent colored, or in a world whose non-white population outnumbers the white two-to-one, if he is unable to live harmoniously on campus with a citizen of a different race. Harvey Gantt should be neither favored or penalized but simply treated as a fellow human being. Jesus left us a reliable guideline to follow in such situations when he handed down the Golden Rule.

* The Executive Director's *
* REPORT for JANUARY 1963 *

MFRC GETS NEW CHAIRMAN & NINE NEW TRUSTEES Joseph L. Leinwohl, assistant vice-president of the First National Bank, was made chairman of MFRC on January 15, in the 1963 appointments by Mayor Walton Bachrach. Added to the Board were nine newcomers: Mrs. Alfred Berger, a leader in Catholic women's groups; Thomas J. Bruggeman, teacher, representing Xavier University; James R. Clark, Jr., former county commissioner; Rev. Richard Isler, executive of the Council of Churches; William Kircher, AFL-CIO sub-regional director; Mrs. George Moyer, executive of the Hamilton County Good Government League; Attorney S. Arthur Spiegel; Joseph Turner, former executive of the Convention Bureau; Ralph Zeigler, realty broker and past president of the Avondale Community Council.

Re-appointed to the Board were : Bishop Roger W. Blanchard, Wm. H. Bocklage, Robert D. Bollard, Dr. Edmund C. Casey, Robert J. Coates, Dean Campbell Crockett, Mrs. Robert S. Dorsey, Mrs. Richard A. Forberg, Mrs. Jerry Griffith, Mrs. Ralph V. Haile, Jr., Joseph A. Hall, Lawrence C. Hawkins, Mrs. Joseph D. Heiman, Henry W. Hobson, Jr., Arthur F. Hull, Jr., Reuven J. Katz, Joseph L. Leinwohl, Dr. John A. MacLeod, Arnold Morelli, Rev. Wm. D. Mosley, Jr., Mrs. Ann Kroger Polasky, Charles Posner, George B. Redfern, John L. Strubbe, M. L. Walton, DDS, and Msgr. Lawrence Walter. Four retiring trustees--Rabbi Murray Blackman, Albert E. Heekin, Jr., Aldon A. McLeod and Robert I. Westheimer--are expected to be appointed by the Mayor, soon, to MFRC's General Committee.

The new Board on the 23d elected four officers to serve with Mr. Leinwohl: 1st and 2d vice-chairmen, Dr. Casey and Mr. Morelli; treasurer, Mr. Bollard; secretary, Mrs. Berger. Mr. Leinwohl, praising his predecessor's leadership in 1961-'62, said he counted on Arthur Hull's continued counsel and energy. Thus began MFRC's 20th year, briskly led by its 11th chairman (who was amazed that his appointment evoked good wishes from so many citizens all over town).

COUNSEL TO SCHOOL COUNSELORS From Columbus in January, to all counselors in in Ohio schools, went a manual whose title identifies an important part of their job. "Counseling Minority Group Youth." Its aim is to help them develop youngsters able to claim equal job opportunities. It is issued at a time when openings for Negroes in skilled and professional fields often outnumber qualified applicants, The manual can help educators to break the traditional "vicious circle--of limited job opportunities, lack of incentive, inadequate training, limited job opportunities." It has been compiled by the Ohio Civil Rights Commission and Department of Education.

"Without an understanding of FEP laws and changing patterns in employment, the educator and counselor operate with an inadequate picture of the extent to which equal job opportunities are a growing reality in Ohio and in the nation," say the authors, William A. Briggs of OCRC and D. L. Hummel of Ohio University. They urge counselors to know employment patterns of Negroes and other minorities in all occupations; to emphasize accomplishments of minority persons; and to know what deprivations in a child's life block his growth, and how past discriminations sap his self-confidence.

"Counseling Minority Group Youth" costs just 50 cents and is available at the Civil Rights Commission's local office in the Schmidt Building (phone, 241-6605). We urge "unofficial counsellors"--the host of adults in reach of youth who need facts to encourage them to aspire--to get this 155-page manual. It is meaty and interesting. And it suggests efforts we can all support.

FACING THE 'SPECULATORS' PROBLEM Urban Development's officials brought to MFRC a serious problem that threatens the Avondale-Corryville conservation project. Briefly, it's the excessive profits made by some "speculators" in buying from departing whites and selling to in-coming nonwhites. Adding $2000 to $4000 to the price he paid, such an operator will dispose of it by land contract to a family lacking a down payment. Carrying this inflated price tag, and relatively heavy monthly payments, the family is often unable to get any additional financing for improvements suggested by UD's rehabilitation specialist. The conservation plan's success depends upon voluntary upgrading by owners; if a number are already trapped financially, it's a dilemma.

MFRC is helping to warn the home-seeker to avoid exploitation, to seek facts and advice from official or private sources. We huddled with UD staff and other intergroup agencies to get the picture. Then Mr. Wesley spent more time with the staff, getting a grasp and arranging for a continued flow of information. He wrote a first article to run in MFRC's column in two Negro papers; asked their editors to consult us on other treatments in their columns; saw a radio manager about similar aircasts; and tried to assist a 'feed' of facts to mass media direct from UD staff. The effort is just starting... A sample, this, of MFRC's stated responsibility to offer advice and aid to any city official or operation "hindered or complicated by intergroup problems."

APPEALING TO THE CONSCIENCE OF AMERICANS Seven Cincinnatians returned from the National Conference on Religion and Race (held January 14-17 in Chicago), bearing a challenge to all Jews and Christians to erase the "insult to God" of racial discrimination and segregation. At the historic interfaith meeting were: Rabbi Murray Blackman and C. E. Israel; Rev. Jovian Weigel, Daniel Kane and Thomas Luken; Rev. L. V. Booth and Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, Jr. Home again, together they will enlist church and temple members to work prayerfully for the specific, difficult objectives stated in the Conference appeal:-

"SEEK a reign of Justice in which voting rights and equal protection of the law will everywhere be enjoyed; public facilities and private ones serving a public purpose will be accessible to all; equal education and cultural opportunities, hiring and promotion, medical and hospital care, open occupancy in housing will be available to all.

"SEEK a reign of love in which the wounds of past injustices will not be used as excuses for new ones; racial barriers will be eliminated; the stranger will be sought and welcomed; any man will be received as brother -- his rights, your rights; his pain, your pain; his prison, your prison.

"SEEK a reign of courage in which the people of God will make their faith their binding commitment; in which men willingly suffer for justice and love; in which churches and synagogues lead, not follow.

"SEEK a reign of prayer in which God is praised and worshiped as the Lord of the universe, before Whom all racial idols fall, Who makes us one family and to Whom we are all responsible.

"In making this appeal we affirm our common religious commitment to the essential dignity and equality of all men under God. We dedicate ourselves to work together to make this commitment a vital factor in our total life.

"We call upon all the American people to work, to pray and to act courageously in the cause of human equality and dignity while there is still time, to eliminate racism permanently and decisively, to seize the historic opportunity the Lord has given us for healing an ancient rupture in the human family, to do this for the glory of God."

A GROWING-UP DAY When City Manager Harrell went to William McClain's office to tell him, "You're the new City Solicitor," it was more than the promotion of an able lawyer. It marked, in a degree, the maturing of a city. The radio, TV, press stories, editorials and interviews reflected a climate change since 1946, when Mr. McClain's color was a fearful "problem" to a minority who kept him out of the Bar Association. (Not including Paul W. Steer, Albert Cash, George Fee and others, who went to work and presently pried open the door.) Since then, more doors have opened hereabouts; not as many as we'd like, but a growing number. Usually it happened because a man like Mr. Harrell sized up a man like Mr. McClain, and then did the commonsense but untraditional thing. Orchids to them both; and a salute to the thousands of folks whose own growth has encouraged more decision-makers to go forward in fairness. Yes, January 25 was a growing-up-a-bit day in our city. Many happy returns...

HILLS-TO-CITY SYMPOSIUM NEARS At February's end, announcements were going out inviting a vast variety of organizations to An Institute on Appalachian Migrants, to be held March 5-6 (Tuesday from 4 to 9 P.M. at Heinold Junior High; Wednesday from 9 to 3 at Jewish Community Center). Aids to adjustment of the newcomers will be emphasized. The swapped experiences of participants will be as valuable as what they hear from speakers. To the many uninvited persons who may be interested: "You're invited." For more details, call City Hall (421-5700) and ask for MFRC, which is assisting the Berea workshop alumni and the Council of the Southern Mountains in this interesting project.

FACING A JUVENILE PROBLEM The nuisance of children's pilfering and rowdyism in a Basin supermarket came to us. Past the initial issue of an employee who faced an assualt charge (later dismissed) for slapping a youthful pest, we looked for basic causes, and remedies. We talked to two school principals, who had long tried to curb such behavior; to managers of public and private housing projects nearby; to other merchants; to a variety of youth agencies in the area; and to police and correctional workers. Mr. Sparrow probed into the fact that open displays--candy bars, toys, etc., within easy reach--were relatively new in the area, and tempting. He prepared the persons contacted to meet in February and together analyze all elements of the condition, then see what a joint effort could do to curb if not eradicate the problem.

AT THE PUBLIC LIBRARY The Catholic journal Social Order has collaborated with the Anti-Defamation League to make its February issue a discussion of "How to Achieve Interfaith Understanding in an Age of Crisis."..."Fight for Freedom, the Story of the NAACP" by Langston Hughes is a well-written history of 50 years' uphill struggle..."The Long Shadow of Little Rock" offers Daisy Bates' inside view of that school desegregation battle...Haynes Johnson's "Dusk at the Mountain" is a Washington journalist's look at problems in the capital--education, employment, housing, crime--provocatively written.

Masonic Club (MB 1/11); Peaslee PTA (MB 1/16)

ALSO THIS & THAT (1) WCKY's editorial on Jan. 30 was an unsolicited tribute to MFRC's 'positive work' toward solving intergroup problems. On Jan. 31, WZIP's "Viewpoint" presented our director and our ex-Chairman, Arthur Hull, in a one-hour interview that brought us many comments. (2) The Cincinnati Herald began using our weekly column, already appearing in the Call & Post. (3) We supplied housing information to a Councilman, for his speech to a Catholic intercollegiate conference. (4) Learning that the Council of Churches' course on integration of churches was not exactly overcrowded, we suggested to two radio stations that they consider doing programs on it. (5) We oriented the new psychiatric resident at the Court Clinic, Dr. Henry Hicks. (6) The Walnut Hills Community Council had an excellent session with Police Capt. Elmer Reis of District 7, with our staff sitting in.

THANKS TO ALL WHO PARTICIPATED IN THE WORKSHOP, PARTICULARLY TO THE SPEAKER, MR. ANDREW HATCHER, ASSOCIATE WHITE HOUSE PRESS SECRETARY, WHO ARRIVED AT 7:30 P.M., SPOKE AT 8, LEFT FOR D. C. AT 2 A.M. TO CATCH A 6 A.M. PLANE FOR CALIFORNIA.

THE GREATER ATLANTA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS, ON DEC. 13, MADE A STATEMENT BEFORE THE PUBLIC WORKS COMMITTEE OF THE CITY ALDERMANIC BOARD PROTESTING THE INFAMOUS BARRIERS AT PEYTON ROAD.

PHERN STANLEY, CHAIRMAN, GACHR HOUSING COMMITTEE, SUBMITTED THE FOLLOWING REPORT:

"WHETHER THE PHYSICAL BARRIER IS UP OR DOWN, THE SITUATION WHICH IT SYMBOLIZES IS ONE WITH WHICH ALL CITIZENS OF GREATER ATLANTA MUST DEAL. THERE IS TALK OF "OPENING UP" CERTAIN AREAS FOR NEGRO RESIDENTIAL USE. THERE IS TALK OF "AGREEMENTS"-PAST AND FUTURE- TO DIVIDE UP THE REAL ESTATE MARKET BETWEEN WHITES AND NEGROES. IN 1918 THE GEORGIA SUPREME COURT HELD SUCH AGREEMENTS INVALID AND IN 1948 THE U.S. SUPREME COURT SO RULED.

WHILE PRESIDENT KENNEDY'S ORDER ON EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN HOUSING DOES NOT APPLY TO PRIVATE HOUSING, WE AGREE WITH HIS STATEMENT THAT 'DISCRIMINATORY POLICIES AND PRACTICES (BASED UPON RACE, COLOR, OR CREED OR NATIONAL ORIGIN) RESULT IN SEGREGATED PATTERNS OF HOUSING AND NECESSARILY PRODUCE OTHER FORMS OF DISCRIMINATION AND SEGREGATION WHICH DEPRIVE MANY AMERICANS OF EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN THE EXERCISE OF THEIR INALIENABLE RIGHTS TO LIFE, LIBERTY, AND THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS.'

FACTS ABOUT THE METROPOLITAN ATLANTA COMPILED FROM THE 1960 U. S. CENSUS BEAR OUT THIS STATEMENT: AMONG THE WHITES, 66% OWN THE HOUSES WHICH THEY OCCUPY, WHILE AMONG THE NON-WHITES ONLY 31% OWN THE HOUSES THEY OCCUPY. THE MEDIAN VALUE OF THE OWNER-OCCUPIED UNITS OF THE WHITES IS $13,100: $8,500 IS THE MEDIAN FOR NON-WHITES. OF THE UNITS OCCUPIED BY WHITES, 89% ARE OF "SOUND CONDITION", WHILE ONLY 55% OCCUPIED BY NON-WHITES ARE OF "SOUND CONDITION". ONLY 3% OF THOSE OCCUPIED BY WHITES ARE "DILAPIDATED", 20% OF THOSE OCCUPIED BY NON-WHITES.

THE SOCIO-ECONOMIC HEALTH AND POLITICAL CONTROL OF ATLANTA ARE IMPORTANT TO THE ENTIRE METROPOLITAN AREA. TO HAVE A HEALTHY COMMUNITY, EACH CITIZEN MUST HAVE AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY TO CHOOSE WHERE HE WILL LIVE WITHOUT ARTIFICIAL MARKET RESTRICTIONS.

REMOVAL OF THE BARRIERS AT PEYTON AND HARLAN ROADS COULD BE A STEP TOWARDS SUCH A GUARANTEE IF ENOUGH OF US WISH IT TO BE.

THE COUNCIL IS WORKING WITH THE ALL CITIZENS COMMITTEE ROR BETTER CITY PLANNING, AND IS PROVIDING OPPORTUNITIES FOR WHITES AND NEGROES TO DISCUSS MUTUAL HOUSING PROBLEMS INFORMALLY AND UNOFFICIALLY. IF YOU ARE INTERESTED, CONTACT THE COUNCIL OFFICE".

OTHER COMMITTEE MEMBERS ARE DR. JOHN TUMBLIN AND DR. EDWARD WEAVER.

AT THE END OF THE FIRST MARKING PERIOD, THE GRADES OF THE NEGRO TRANSFER STUDENTS IN ATLANTA DESEGREGATED SCHOOLS WERE FOUND TO BE LOWER THAN THEIR LAST YEARS GRADES IN NEGRO SCHOOLS. TO CONSIDER THE IMPLICATIONS OF THIS, SOME COUNCIL MEMBERS MET WITH A GROUP OF NEGRO AND WHITE EDUCATORS. THEIR CONCLUSION WAS THAT NO DEFINITE ANSWER COULD BE GIVEN FOR THE DECLINE IN GRADES WITHOUT DETAILED RESEARCH, BUT POSSIBLE REASONS INCLUDED: (1) INFERIOR EDUCATIONAL BACKGROUND OF NEGRO STUDENTS, COMBINED PERHAPS WITH DIFFERENT GRADING STANDARDS IN NEGRO AND WHITE SCHOOLS; (2) EMOTIONAL TENSION OF NEGROES IN THE DESEGREGATED SITUATION.

IT WAS AGREED THAT THE BEST SOLUTION TO BOTH THESE PROBLEMS COULD BE ACHIEVED BY ESTABLISHING A COMPLETELY DESEGREGATED SCHOOL SYSTEM. IN THE MEANTIME, HOWEVER, THE FOLLOWING LINES OF ACTIVITY MIGHT BE FOLLOWED: (1) RESEARCH COMPARING NEGRO AND WHITE EDUCATION IN ATLANTA, WITH THE AIM OF IMPROVING ANY INFERIOR METHODS OR PRACTICES THAT MIGHT EXIST, IN TEACHING, HIRING, OR TEACHER EDUCATION; (2) THE ATLANTA SCHOOL ADMINISTRATION INFORMED OF THE COUNCIL'S OBSERVATIONS AND CONCERN, IN THE HOPE THAT RESEARCH COULD BE INITIATED AS SOON AS POSSIBLE BY SCHOOL OFFICIALS; (3) INDIVIDUAL NEGRO TRANSFER STUDENTS HELPED BY TUTORING.

THE COUNCIL HAS FOUND TUTORS (ALL COLLEGE PROFESSORS) FOR 28 OF THE STUDENTS WHO NEEDED THEM.

IN REGARD TO EMOTIONAL TENSION, THE DESEGREGATED SITUATION SEEMS TO BE EASIER THAN LAST YEAR. THIS MAY BE PARTLY DUE TO THE FACT THAT MORE NEGRO STUDENTS ARE IN EACH SCHOOL THIS YEAR, AND THEY HAVE EACH OTHER AS FRIENDS. SOME NEGRO STUDENTS ARE PLAYING ON BASKETBALL TEAMS AND SOME ARE PARTICIPATING IN GLEE CLUBS, DRAMATIC CLUBS, ETC.., AND VERY FEW COMPLAINTS ABOUT CONFLICTS WITH WHITE STUDENTS HAVE COME TO THE COUNCIL'S ATTENTION.

AS A RESULT OF SEVERAL CONFERENCES WITH OFFICIALS OF THE ATLANTA, FULTON AND GEORGIA DEPTS. OF EDUCATION, SMITH-HUGHES VOCATIONAL SCHOOL WAS DESEGREGATED ON JANUARY 28. SMITH-HUGHES, WHICH IS ADMINISTERED BY THE ATLANTA BOARD OF EDUCATION, IS FINANCED LARGELY BY STATE AND FEDERAL FUNDS AND ALSO SERVES AS THE VOCATIONAL SCHOOL FOR THE FULTON COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION.

EMORY UNIVERSITY HAS TWO NEGRO STUDENTS IN THE SCHOOL OF NURSING AND HAS ANNOUNCED ADMISSION OF A NEGRO STUDENT TO THE SCHOOL OF MEDICINE FOR 1963-64.

TWELVE HOSPITALS LOCATED IN FULTON AND DEKALB COUNTIES, INCLUDING ONE OPERATED BY THE STATE OF GEORGIA, DO NOT ADMIT NEGROES AS BED-PATIENTS, AND AN ADDITIONAL THREE (NOT INCLUDING GRADY HOSPITAL) HAVE SEGREGATED WARDS FOR NEGROES AND WHITE PATIENTS. OF THE TWELVE WHO DO NOT ADMIT NEGROES AS BED-PATIENTS, THREE ADMIT NEGROES TO OUT-PATIENT CLINICS ONLY. ONE OF THESE IS THE GEORGIAN CLINIC, OPERATED BY THE STATE OF GEORGIA, AND ONE IS ST. JOSEPH'S INFIRMARY, WHICH STATED THAT NEGROES ARE ADMITTED AS OUT-PATIENTS "IN SOME CASES". THE OTHER IS THE PEACHTREE HOSPITAL. THESE AND OTHER FACTS ABOUT THE OPERATION OF HOSPITALS IN THE GREATER ATLANTA AREA WERE REVEALED IN A SURVEY CONDUCTED BY THE GREATER ATLANTA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS.

THE ADMISSIONS OFFICE AT GEORGIA BAPTIST HOSPITAL STATED THAT THE HOSPITAL WOULD ACCEPT A NEGRO PATIENT IF REQUESTED TO DO SO BY THE ATTENDING PHYSICIAN, BUT THE SPOKESMAN DID NOT KNOW OF ANY SUCH REQUEST. UNOFFICIAL SOURCES STATE THAT ONE NEGRO WAS ADMITTED TO GEORGIA BAPTIST THROUGH THE VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION DEPARTMENT VIA THE VETERANS HOSPITAL. (THIS IS A CHANGE FROM THE POLICY OF 1961, OF NO ADMITTANCE OF NEGROES).

THOSE WHICH DO NOT ADMIT NEGROES ON ANY BASIS ARE CRAWFORD LONG, EMORY UNIVERSITY, HENRIETTA EGLESTON FOR CHILDREN, JESSE PARKER WILLIAMS, SCOTTISH RITE FOR CHILDREN, PIEDMONT, DOCTOR'S HOSPITAL, FULTON HOSPITAL AND PONCE DE LEON INFIRMARY. (DOCTORS ON PONCE DE LEON STAFF SEE NEGRO PATIENTS IN THEIR OFFICES LOCATED IN THE INFIRMARY BUILDING).

DEKALB GENERAL, AIDMORE FOR CHILDREN AND FREE CANCER HOME, MAINTAIN SEGREGATED WARDS. A SPOKESMAN FOR THE NEW HOLY FAMILY HOSPITAL, SCHEDULED TO OPEN IN 1964, STATED THAT 14% OF THE 128 BEDS WILL BE SET ASIDE FOR NEGROES, AND THAT NEGRO AND WHITE PATIENTS WILL BE SEGREGATED. SOUTH FULTON COUNTY HOSPITAL WILL BE OPEN IN MAY, 1963, WITH A TOTAL OF 150 BEDS AND WILL ADMIT BOTH NEGRO AND WHITE PATIENTS ON A NON-SEGREGATED BASIS. A SPOKESMAN STATED THAT THEY EXPECT TO HAVE "LOTS OF NEGRO DOCTORS AND NURSES ON THEIR STAFF".

ONLY THE U. S. VETERANS HOSPITAL HAS INTEGRATED FACILITIES AND BEDS. THE VA HOSPITAL ALSO HAS NEGRO NURSES, BUT NO NEGRO DOCTORS ON ITS STAFF. ST. JOSEPH'S REPORTS NEGRO NURSES AIDES ONLY, AND DEKALB GENERAL REPORTS ONE NEGRO PHYSICIAN AND A FEW NEGRO NURSES. NONE OF THE OTHERS HAS ANY NEGRO STAFF MEMBERS.

OF THE 2424 HOSPITAL BEDS NOW AVAILABLE FOR PAYING PATIENTS IN THE AREA, 817 (THIS DOES NOT INCLUDE GRADY AND VA, BUT DOES INCLUDE 457 BEDS AT GEORGIA BAPTIST) ARE AVAILABLE TO NEGROES. THESE INCLUDE 135 BEDS AT HARRIS AND MCLENDON HOSPITALS WHICH ARE PRIMARILY "NEGRO HOSPITALS". (MCLENDON HOSPITAL STATES THAT THEY WILL ACCEPT WHITE PATIENTS, WHEN REFERRED BY A PHYSICIAN AND HARRIS WILL ACCEPT WHITE PATIENTS ON AN EMERGENCY BASIS). NEGROES COMPRISE 22.8% OF THE POPULATION OF THE METROPOLITAN ATLANTA AREA; 39.9% OF THE CITY OF ATLANTA.

CHICAGO COMMISSION ON YOUTH WELFARE NEWSLETTER

JANUARY, 1963

Richard J. Daley, Mayor

KIDS CHRISTMAS

The "Spirit of Christmas" had a special meaning for thousands of Chicagoans this year as they opened their hearts to let needy youngsters know that someone cares.

With thousands of toys, games, and boxes of candy stacked in the lobby, the building housing the Commission on Youth Welfare resembled Santa's warehouse. Donated by the United States Marine Corps Reserve, the Chicago Tribune Good Fellows and the Curtiss Candy Company, the gifts were furnished for distribution by the Commission to underprivileged kids.

The Near North area saw more than 2,000 parochial and public school youngsters receive gifts of games and toys from laymen of the Christian Family Movement of the Catholic Archdiocese of Chicago, and from private citizens who heeded radio and TV appeals for gifts.

Three hundred needy youngsters from all over the city had a great time as the Chicago Junior Association of Commerce and Industry took them on a Christmas shopping tour. The 6 and 7-year olds were each given $5, and each was accompanied by a Jaycee couple. The six major loop department stores had the kids as their guests for breakfast, and provided a gift for each child. Various youth-serving agencies and the Commission on Youth Welfare cooperated with the Jaycees in the venture.

In the Uptown area, the Comets 4H Club gave several cartons of toys to the Youth Welfare Commission for distribution to some of the less fortunate among the community's American Indian children.

That many families still are in great need was typified by a south-side mother and 8 children who faced a bleak Christmas indeed. Without food or fuel, the family was helped by donations of food, fuel, money and toys given by the Salvation Army, a local minister and members of the Youth Welfare Commission.

All over the city, the spirit of Christmas was exemplified by similar acts of giving as youth-serving agencies, religious institutions, business organizations and individual men and women of good will made a special effort to see that every known needy youngster was remembered.

REPORTING CYW ACTIVITIES to Mayor Daley, City Department Heads and members of city's commissions, Chairman Patrick H. Hoy lauded the increasing cooperative efforts between public and private agencies serving youth.

YOUTH OFFICERS MEET

The entire youth officer force of Police Area 4, more than 40 strong, joined Dr. Dietrich Reitzes, Deputy Director of the Commission on Youth Welfare and key staff members at the Police Training Academy recently. Together they discussed joint efforts for youth with special emphasis on services of the area's Cooperating Services Center.

Criteria for referral of youth to the center by the youth officer, an outline for the social study of individual youth problems, and an explanation of processing of referrals from the youth officer were reviewed.

Coordinated action such as this is increasing steadily among the various agencies, public and private, which are working in areas where youth needs are most pressing.

HOPES FOR YOUTH GOOD IN 1963

Chicago's progress in urban renewal has earned international recognition, deservedly. Striking modern buildings, residential and commercial, excellent roads and parks, police, fire and street lighting systems name but a few advances evident in all parts of the city.

But Chicago is great for more than bricks or mortar, steel and glass. Chicago is the home of more than a million children. Their world is the world of the neighborhood. The important thing in their lives is not the gleaming city adults see, but the city we don't see—one of love, of people who care about them — of parents, of teachers, of neighbors, of persons who help them form clubs and go to camp, and make a ball team. This is the city that teaches children the values, the skills, the attitudes and the faith on which a free society lives.

The pertinent point is that this living city doesn't persist as long as do the bricks and glass unless it is renewed and revitalized, not every generation but every day—day after day—by people who will make the sacrifice in time and patience and money to begin, and to complete, the tasks that make a neighborhood live. Through the schools, the parks, health and recreation agencies, public and private, the basic facilities and programs for youth are provided. But this costly outlay of personnel and build-

CHICAGO HOST TO PUBLIC YOUTH AGENCIES

For the first time Chicago will welcome the Midwest Region Meeting of the Conference of Public Youth Agencies. The Chicago Commission on Youth Welfare and the Illinois Youth Commission are jointly serving as local hosts.

A special luncheon, Thursday, January 17, open to all key leaders in youth work, will inaugurate the 2-day session at the LaSalle Hotel. CYW Chairman Patrick H. Hoy will chair this opening luncheon which features Shelton Granger, Children's Bureau Director of Youth Development of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Subsequent sessions will focus first on the importance of sharing youth program research and evaluation to avoid duplication of efforts. Stress also will be on coordinated efforts. IYC Chairman John A. Troike's talk on "The Total Community in Youth Welfare and Delinquency Prevention," will key a panel discussion on the role of both public agencies, local, state and federal, and private resources, volunteers, groups, or organizations. Participants will include experts such as William Bruchner of Chicago Commons and Henry McKay of the Institute for Juvenile Research.

Program Chairman for this Midwest Regional Meeting is Erwin France, Community Organization Director of the Youth Welfare Commission.

YOUTH HOPES GOOD

ings can function only when local citizens and parents work together, bringing integrity and unity and order to the world of the child, and making each neighborhood an expression of concern for every child's individuality.

The Commission on Youth Welfare was established not to replace parents and local citizens in this responsibility, but to make the city a partner to efforts of people in their own community to renew and strengthen this invisible yet vital world of children.

Despite the complexity of this less tangible renewal effort, Chicago is making remarkable progress. All around the city there is substantial evidence of increasing cooperation between the many forces working for more actively organized community effort. Both public agencies and private organizations and institutions should be proud of the added awareness of youth needs, acceptance of responsibility, and the willingness to join forces to get the job done.

That is why the Commission on Youth Welfare and its community organization work is so satisfying. In every part of the city, but especially in the areas where the need of strengthening is greatest, such aid is paying off.

By its very nature, community organization work has to cover a wide variety of efforts. Each has a particular effect on people and on institutions important to children. More important, like a mosaic, each of these varied community organization efforts is a cumulative part of a comprehensive whole. Together the stronger institution, plus the newly concerned citizen, plus the more able parent, plus other rich resources available in the city, are able to function more effectively. Together they can accept and successfully carry out the responsibilities which create good neighborhoods in which to raise children.

Although youth needs differ to some extent, the examples described here are purposely varied to demonstrate the range that CYW efforts cover. Behind each example, however, is the same consistent and basic long-range community organization plan to accelerate the local community's ability to assume responsibility and to help key institutions function more effectively on behalf of youth.

ARMED FORCES APPLICANTS

Concerned with the high number of North Lawndale young men frustrated by failure to pass Armed Forces tests, CYW staff sought the interest of the Army, Board of Education, and the Cook County Department of Public Aid. Together they organized a special course to prepare boys to pass Armed Forces and civil service tests.

Held twice weekly at Manley Evening School, the course accepts boys from 17 to 21 years of age. So helpful that the original 34 students has swelled to 44, the practical training is now set up to receive new course members every week.

CLERGY IN ACTION

The Lawndale Clergy for Community Action must be given a large measure of credit for 1962's marked improvement in youth relations in Lawndale.

Initiated and assisted by Youth Welfare Commission staff, this interracial and interreligious organization of clergymen was formed to help break down the barriers to interracial communication in the community through friendly contacts. Sports for local youth was one activity.

Eight church-sponsored softball teams culminated their season with an awards banquet in late fall, and the LCCA Athletic League's 1962-63 basketball season was tipped off December 17 by teams representing 12 churches.

Acting to help the churches carry out this joint youth activity more effectively, the CYW drafted the league constitution, arranged for the use of parks, and helped recruit churches, players and adult volunteers for the program.

A further benefit occurred when all clergymen took part in a concerted neighborhood Brotherhood campaign. On the same Sunday recently, each pastor issued a letter signed by all stressing community cooperation and based his sermon on it.

NBC RADIO SERIES, produced by CYW this fall, stressed Education, Jobs, and Dropouts. Sixteen experts from organizations such as Board of Education, Chicago Youth Development Project, and Carson Pirie's "Double E" program joined discussion with neighborhood youths and moderator Harry Volkman.

CONTINUE SCHOOLING

Offering another service to Woodlawn residents, the Board of Education recently set up a new program offering non-credit evening classes in parent-child training, money management, sewing, arithmetic, shorthand and typing at Hyde Park High School. The classes, formed to help residents better understand their children and become more self-reliant citizens, were planned for those adults who are least easy to reach.

At the request of school officials, the Commission on Youth Welfare assisted promotion by working with the Associated Clubs of Woodlawn to organize ways to make the program known to local residents. Commission staff also explained benefits of the program to other local organizations such as church congregations, tenant councils and block groups.

TAYLOR HOMES SUCCESS

An imaginative approach to the problem of helping the 28,000 new residents of Robert R. Taylor Homes prepare to take an active role in community affairs resulted in the establishment of a citizens' committee to welcome the new tenants. It explains resident responsibilities, acquaints new families with available resources, and urges participation in local programs of health, welfare, recreation, as well as informal educational activities.

The committee, organized through efforts of the Chicago Housing Authority and the Commission on Youth Welfare, is composed of local civic, religious, business, and political leaders. This reflects the belief of many experienced community workers, including the Youth Welfare Commission, that youngsters are helped most when the community, institutions and the family assume a full share of responsibility, and its success is now being duplicated in other similar situations.

HULL HOUSE STARTS IN UPTOWN

Hull House and the Commission on Youth Welfare have been working together as the renowned settlement house prepares to open a new center in Uptown. Robert Mulligan, who will be Director of the Uptown Center, has made the Uptown office of the Commission his headquarters until the new center is opened.

According to Mr. Mulligan, the time needed to establish the center has been cut in half by the cooperation of youth-serving organizations and local civic, religious, school and business leaders.

GOOD NEIGHBOR COMMITTEE

When problems began to develop between young Negro and Puerto Rican neighbors, adults of one Woodlawn neighborhood formed a "Good Neighbor Committee" with the help of St. Cyril's Catholic Church and the Commission on Youth Welfare.

Now basketball and social functions are fusing the youngsters' congenial relations far more effectively than previous unplanned efforts, and the adults, by working more closely together, are developing more understanding also.

MIDWEST PARENT EDUCATION

A decrease in gang activity and a strengthening of community life has been noted in the Rockwell Homes area since the Commission on Youth Welfare's Midwest Unit, in conjunction with the Rockwell Area Advisory Council, organized a project in early 1962 aimed at building closer relationships between parents and community agencies.

Sixty-six parents and 62 youngsters participated in a series of 6 workshops which featured expert advisors and special films. They dealt with such subjects as community responsibility, sex education in the home, resources for families in trouble, and recreational facilities.

A decrease in the number of local youth incidents involving boys whose parents participated indicates a strengthening of parental responsibility. Also, the Commission has been pleased to see indications of increasing cooperation between the area's youth-serving agencies and communications between parents and the agencies.

The Rockwell Advisory Council consists of representatives of the Chicago Board of Health, Cook County Department of Public Aid, Chicago Housing Authority, Chicago Park District, Grant School, Jackson Boulevard Christian Church, Rendu House, Saint Malachy's Roman Catholic Church, Salvation Army, Senior Citizens, Social Security Administration, Tuberculosis Institute of Chicago and Cook County and the Commission on Youth Welfare.

ENGLEWOOD YOUTH CONFERENCE

For the first time 19 youth-serving agencies joined forces to set up exhibits, explain their program, and to invite Englewood parents to encourage their children to participate.

The Englewood Youth Services Conference, held at the Low School, was sponsored by the Commission on Youth Welfare. It acquainted more than 150 responsible adult residents and community leaders with the wealth of activities now available to Englewood young people.

Commission staff worked with local leaders to organize the conference, plan and promote the program, recruit participants, and provide for the school and the luncheon.

PATRICK H. HOY, Chairman of the Chicago Commission on Youth Welfare, congratulates Seymour Schnitzer, 18, new International President of the B'nai B'rith Youth Organization as Phil Gershman, 18, President of B'nai B'rith's Chicago region looks on.

MUSIC FOUNDATION

The Chicago Community Music Foundation's musical opportunities program provides lessons and loans instruments to local kids from 8 to 18 for a nominal fee and furnishes free neighborhood concerts of serious music.

Students from 3 parochial and 3 public schools in Uptown are receiving lessons on clarinet, trumpet, and flute in a series of 32 classes while graduates of earlier classes play in school bands and orchestras.

The success of the Uptown program reflects combined efforts and funds of community residents, schools, churches, youth-serving agencies and civic-minded organizations.

At the request of the Foundation and local organizations the Commission on Youth Welfare led organization work to promote and publicize the program, set up classes, and register students.

COMMISSIONER KAHLER WAS HONORED recently by Public Relations Society of America. Here its president, Warren Thompson, presents his long record of civic services.

As Mr. William V. Kahler, retiring Illinois Bell Telephone Board Chairman, leaves city, Mayor Daley and this Commission regretfully accepted his resignation and expressed city's deep appreciation for devoted service.

YOUTH AID EFFORTS TO COMBAT VD

For the first time, active participation by 50 young people marked the Annual VD Conference held here in November. To combat the rising incidence of the problem among the nation's youth, student editors from Chicago area high schools and colleges, class leaders, and members of youth-serving agencies met with some 1,000 adult representatives of community, industry, labor and school groups.

The Commission on Youth Welfare working with the Board of Health helped in planning the Conference, recruited young participants and recruited community people to serve as hostess assistants to the Conference Program Committee. S. Dolores Branche, Commission staff member, was a discussion leader.

All interested in youth can receive this Newsletter. Please send your name and address to Commission on Youth Welfare, 185 N. Wabash, Chicago 1, Ill. If your address changes, please inform us as soon as possible.

COOPERATING SERVICES

The Commission on Youth Welfare's Adjustment Services Division is directed toward the delinquent, dependent, or neglected child. The Division is concerned with providing for early detection of children presenting symptoms of social maladjustment, and with mobilizing community forces, organizations and agencies to provide private services for these children and their families. The Division is also concerned with the inability of some families to use existing resources. Focussing on these three problem areas, a community-centered program has been designed to provide maximum help for the youth in trouble at the time it is most needed.

Functioning primarily through its Cooperating Services Center at 1306 South Pulaski Road in Lawndale, the Division works with existing youth-serving agencies and institutions, with parents, and with responsible individuals to develop community resources to help and support the individual youth in trouble. In addition, the Cooperating Services Center attempts to reduce duplication of services, provide continuity, and expand the use of existing community and neighborhood resources.

The Center receives referrals directly from the Youth Division of the Police Department, the schools, community agencies, parents, individuals, and Neighborhood Workers of the Youth Welfare Commission's Division of Community Organization. Referral might be for a variety of reasons relating to delinquency, dependency or neglect. In no way will the Cooperating Services Center intrude upon or accept the responsibility of the referring agency or other community organizations.

The Center consists of a Director and a professionally trained casework staff which studies each family referral for social and psychological factors to provide service at a neighborhood level. This is consistent with the Commission's belief that the major responsibility for the child rests with parents and the community.

ADJUSTMENT SERVICES STAFF meets regularly. Here the Director of Cooperating Services Center, John Sanchez, Division Director Betty Begg, and Neighborhood Worker James Ries check progress reports. Their combined professional experience totals approximately 25 years. Both Miss Begg and Mr. Sanchez hold Master's degrees in Social Work.

COVERAGE OF SOUTHERN AREA is task of Southern Area Service Staff. Here Neighborhood Workers John LaMotte and Vernon McNeal stand by with Unit Director Charles LaPaglia (seated).

AREA SERVICES

Two CYW Area Services Units now cover two-thirds of the city. They offer a non-intensive program of community organization for relatively stable and socially organized areas which require less concentrated effort than those with new populations, weak community organization, or delinquency.

These Area Services provide community organization aids, such as aiding schools and police find community resources to help individual youngsters, aiding youth-serving institutions, agencies and communities to function more effectively, and working on the problem of law and order among youth.

The Area Service Units are currently active in the south and southwest sections of the city.

AGAIN AVAILABLE

For example, in the Southwest Area, a pastor requested help in reopening the church's community youth center which previously had closed due to lack of adult volunteers to run the program.

Extensive work by CYW in helping the church find, recruit, enthuse, and train members of 2 community groups now has resulted in an extensive program again available for all youngsters at Immaculate Heart of Mary Roman Catholic Church.

SPECIAL SERVICES

A comprehensive program to further respect for law and order is being developed by the Commission on Youth Welfare's newly-organized Special Services Unit. The Unit, which evolved from the Emergency Services Unit, is organizing an internal system to assist in the prevention of gang conflicts and strife. It will develop workshops for Commission staff, mass education programs dealing with control of juvenile delinquency, and will work with outside agencies on a city-wide level to support law and order.

SELF HELP URGED

Three hundred Chicago Housing Authority tenant leaders, attending the Authority's Fall Leadership Training Program in November, heard Charles P. Livermore, Executive Director of the Commission on Youth Welfare present a challenge to the community leaders assembled at Robert Taylor Park.

Stating that "there are more jobs for qualified people today than there are people to accept them," Mr. Livermore urged that every resident make sure "that their children are ready when opportunity arises," and that "their kids feel that school is important, that a good job is an honorable achievement, that the dignity of working hard for a family is one of life's pleasures."

Speaking especially to the many young people who attended, he urged them to try to influence other young people to stay in school and to build respect for parents.

Indicating that while literally hundreds of services, public and private agencies, the schools, religious groups and individual citizens are ready and anxious to help prepare youngsters for the opportunities of today, Mr. Livermore stressed that the initiative must come from individuals in the local community.

He pledged the assistance of the Youth Welfare Commission to "every community interested in rolling up its sleeves and organizing to accept and carry out its responsibilities."

STAFF TRAINING

The entire CYW professional staff, Supervisory and Field, is now completing the first 3-month phase of a 3-hour weekly training program. Designed to develop clarity and consensus about the objectives of the Commission on Youth Welfare, the training also helps staff members to increase their understanding about operational procedures of the 5 divisions of Commission program and to share and exchange experience gained in the total operation of the agency.

A committee, composed of the Executive Staff and representatives of each Division insured flexibility and determined that the program content covered essential points.

Five discussion groups, each a cross section of Division Heads, Unit Directors, and Neighborhood Workers, meet weekly. Each session features a scheduled subject presentation or discussion guide, plus a subsequent questionnaire for each participant. Results and unresolved issues at each gathering were studied by the Training Committee to help in programing subsequent sessions.

Climaxing this first training phase will be an all-day, full-staff meeting. Here each group will present a practical one-hour program about one specific community organization which plays a basic part in the lives of Chicago's children.

Future training phases will emphasize similar practical application of the basic principles developed and explained in this initial phase.

EXECUTIVE TRAINING

Amplifying general staff training, the Commission's Executive staff has started to meet with other experts on community organization and related fields. This interchange of ideas is aiding the Commission to provide services which aid local institutions to function most effectively. Further, it enables CYW staff to share their field experience with interested experts in the field.

Initial guest in this program was Thomas D. Sherrad, Assistant Professor in the University of Chicago's School of Social Service Administration.

GEORGIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS - 41 EXCHANGE PLACE, ATLANTA, GEORGIA

THE MACON STORY

Interpo HR Com.

On Sunday, March 25, 1961, the Atlanta papers asked, "Will Macon be the next Georgia city to experience tension and racial conflict?" January, 1963 - the answer is, "No, Macon will move with reason and foresight toward equality and justice for all."

> And I said to the man who stood at the gate of the year:
> "Give me a light that I may tread safely into the unknown!"
> And he replied: "Go out into the darkness and put thine hand into the hand of God."
> That shall be to thee better than light and safer than a known way.
> M. L. Haskins

The Negro community with a few white friends has worked for the last 18 months toward opening employment in the retail stores. Today about 100 Negroes are employed in new jobs. How was this accomplished?

1. Conferences with individual merchants showing concern for their problems.
2. Negotiating step by step - for 18 months.
3. Refresher Courses for 150 Negroes to enable them to fill the new positions with excellence.
4. 125 well trained pickets used for 2½ days as a last resort.
5. Extensive buying where merchants had cooperated.

Many people are responsible for this. There is a climate that allows at least 40% of the white people to show that they are sympathetic. There is unity in the Negro community - the NAACP, the Negro ministers, the social clubs, professional people all working with a single thought - to get the job done. In February 1961 the Macon Council on Human Relations issued a daring statement for that day - calling upon city and county officials to join immediately in planning to meet the new era with sense and realism on the local scene. Since then, things have been slowly but surely moving. In June 1961 the golf courses were opened. In October 1961 the lunch counters were opened. March 1962 the buses were desegregated. March 1962 the polling places were desegregated. Now the last weeks of 1962 show a wonderful beginning to a carefully planned and well executed employment program.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR and CONGRATULATIONS to MACON, Georgia!

Negotiations concerning the removal of this barricade that symbolizes deteriorating race relations in Atlanta are in progress.

MISSISSIPPI:

Used to be hard to spell, now it's HARD TO BELIEVE!

The Mayor of Jackson declared last Monday, January 14, 1963 as "WILLIE RICHARDSON DAY," with all fanfare - parades, etc.

WHO IS WILLIE?

Willie was the first Negro to play in an annual game where Southern players compete against Northern.

Willie made TWO TOUCHDOWNS...

THE SOUTH WON!

UNILATERAL ACTION

ACTION

Georgia's 26th largest county recently let the contract for the renovation of its COUNTY COURT HOUSE.

A concern about superfluous facilities designated by race prompted a local Negro citizen to request a study of the plans.

As expected, the drawings included the controversial Negro accomodations - (balcony, toilets, water). STRATEGY!!!

He contacted a Commissioner of long acquaintance and said, "You white folks will never learn. In past years Negroes have dropped peanuts, ashes, paper, etc. on your heads from the balcony, but now the objects might get heavier! "

"About the extra toilets, etc, you people are the only regular users of the Court House, so why waste money putting up extras?"

RESULT

A REVISION OF THE DRAWINGS EXCLUDING BALCONY AND SIGNS DENOTING RACE.

Brunswick, Georgia - the 100th Anniversary of the Emanicipation Proclamation had a meaningful celebration in Brunswick, Georgia. On January 2, 1963 all lunch counters opened with no troublesome incidents. White and Negroes were served at the same counters. Congratulations to the City Officials, the merchants, the Reverend Julius Caesar Hope, the local NAACP Chairman, and the Brunswick Council on Human Relations and the many other citizens who have cooperated.

From the EMANCIPATION DAY ADDRESS given by Attorney D. L. Hollowell, noted Civil Rights Leader in Atlanta,
Georgia on January 1, 1963.

Drs. John W. Davis and Harry W. Robinson made the following recommendations for freedom of Negroes in the 2d Century after the Emancipation.

1. Develop and find the secure unintimated, cooperative attorneys to defend non-white and white defendants in civil rights suits.

2. Challenge and fight all oppression, especially in the schools, eating places, churches and other places of public accomodation, and wherever it is found.

3. Eliminate bias and racial restrictions in public and private housing.

4. Use education as an instrumentality to fix definitely and logically, self-respect for others, economic and social acceptability, responsible citizenship and cultural and religious balance for purposeful living.

5. Develop social and economic power which guarantee to the Negro and others a full measure of unabridged citizenship and freedom. This includes the use of economic strength and power inherent in the increasing purchasing power of the Negro.

6. Use high quality writing and scholarly research to reveal the truth about the past and present of the Negro and also make contributions in other fields for the intellectual and scientific interests of people.

7. Crusade to make Negroes, as well as other citizens, a voting people so as to develop within them a political conscientiousness for use in their own self-interest and also in clearing the blurred image of American Democracy in the minds of the peoples of the world.

8. Broaden the scope and power of an inspired, thoughtful and trustworthy leadership among Negroes specifically, but maintaining a concern for all leaders - realizing that we have a responsibility to and for all of them.

9. Cultivate, improve, revitalize and integrate the church and all education as keys to the moral, spiritual and intellectual progress of Negroes and other Americans.

10. Open to Negroes all employment opportunities and aids to employment which are now open or will be open to other Americans.

11. We must continue to fight for citizenship rights for the well being of ourselves and the total community, and for the preservation of governmental idealogy of America. Increasingly, we must become world and internationally-minded. Destiny has decreed that no man or nation shall go "his way"

RELIGION AND RACE - Religious leaders of three major faiths in America met in Chicago on January 14th for a four day conference to discuss the moral and spiritual aspects of race relations.

"Religious Bodies and The Supreme Court Decisions" compiled by the Birmingham Council on Human Relations in July of 1957 is still relevant in 1963 in Alabama. This supply of this document has been exhausted but could be mimeographed again if there are requests for it. Over 45 denominational statements are reprinted commending their members who accept the Supr me Court Decision.Southern Baptist Convention in session in St. Louis, Missouri, on June, 1954, states in part "in the light of the recent decision handed down by the Supreme Court of our nation declaring segregation of the races to be unconstitutional and in view of the position of this convention and adhering to the basic moral principles of our religion as they apply in race relations, we recommend: 1. That we recognize the fact that this Supreme Court decision is in harmony with the Constitutional guarantee of equal freedom to all citizens and with the Christian principles of equal justice and love for all men." Other religious bodies affirming their belief in the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man and urging their members to remove all discrimination from local practice include, Presbyterian Church U. S., Presbyterian Church U. S. A., Methodist Church, Episcopal Church, Churches of Christ, Lutheran Church - Missouri Synod and other Lutheran denomination.

Your local religious leader will be able to show you or obtain for you statements of your church group dealing with the religious and spiritual aspects of race relations.

"Alabama Religious Leaders Stand Against Court Defiance.

Eleven top Alabama religious leaders, representing Protestant, Catholic and Jewish faiths, yesterday issued a statement that "defiance is neither the right answer nor the solution" to Alabama's desegregation problems.

"In these times of tremendous tensions, and change in cherished patterns of life in our beloved Southland, it is essential that men who occupy places of responsibility and leadership shall speak concerning their honest convictions.

We the undersigned clergymen have been chosen to carry heavy responsibility in our religious group. We speak in a spirit of humility, and we do not pretend to know all the answers, for the issues are not simple. Nevertheless, we believe our people expect and deserve leadership from us, and we speak with firm conviction for we do know the ultimate spirit in which all problems of human relations must be solved.

It is clear that a series of court decisions may soon bring about the desegregation of certain schools and colleges in Alabama. Many sincere people oppose this change and are deeply troubled by it. As southerners, we understand this. We nevertheless feel that defiance is neither the right answer nor the solution. And we feel that inflammatory and rebellious statements can lead only to violence, discord, confusion and disgrace for our beloved state.

We therefore affirm, and commend to our people:

1. That hatred and violence have no sanction in our religious and political tradition.

2. That there may be disagreement concerning laws and social change without advocating defiance, anarchy and subver-

Your local religious leader will be able sion.

3. That laws may be tested in courts or changed by legislatures, but not ignored by whims of individuals.

4. That constitutions may be amended or judges impeached by proper action, but our American way of life depends upon obedience to the decisions of courts of competent jurisdiction in the meantime.

5. That no person's freedom is safe unless every person's freedom is equally protected.

6. That freedom of speech must at all costs be preserved and exercised, without fear of recrimination or harassment.

7. That every human being is created in the image of God and is entitled to respect as a fellow human being with all basic rights, privileges, and responsibilities which belong to humanity.

It is understood that those who strongly oppose desegregation may frankly and fairly pursue their convictions in the courts, and in the meantime should peacefully abide by the decisions of those same courts.

We recognize that our problems cannot be solved in our own strength nor on the basis of human wisdom alone. The situation which confronts us calls for earnest prayer, for clear thought, for understanding love, and for courageous action. Thus we call on all people of goodwill to join us in seeking divine guidance as we make our appeal for law and order and common sense.

A T.V. newsman of Montgomery was quoted Monday, January 14th, on a national news cast as saying, "The issue was clearly before us." He had reference to two speeches made earlier that day. Governor George Wallace in his inaugural speech said, "I throw the gauntlet before the feet of tyranny" and "I draw the line in the dust and say segregation today, segregation tomorrow and segregation for ever. State Attorney General Richmond Flowers earlier that day made the statement that Alabamians should distinguish between "a fighting chance and a chance to fight."

On Sunday, January 20th, a minister in Birmingham said, "Last Monday we heard our governor say segregation today, segregation tomorrow and segregation forever Why are the Christians not saying loudly Jesus Christ TODAY, Jesus Christ TOMORROW and Jesus Christ FOREVER!!"

ADDITIONAL NOTES ON EMPLOYMENT WORKSHOP. The Alabama Council on Human Relations will be glad to co-operate with individuals in other communities who are interested in setting up workshops to discuss "expanding employment opportunities.

The following groups of individuals have a real stake in the employment patterns in their community and in our state:

Merchants
Bankers
Industrial recruitment Laborers
  Tradesmen
  Carpenters
  Bricklayers
  Electricians
  Mechanics, etc.
Union Leaders
Industrial Management
Federal Employees
Federal Employers
Persons responsible for implementing Presidential Order 10925
Employees and Owners of all companies having federal contracts.
Professional people who depend upon full employment for their clients to be able to afford their services.
City Officials
State Officials
Representatives
All men employed in various federal agencies in Alabama.
Military personnel
Employed persons qualified for better jobs.
Unemployed

This may seem to indicate that in our opinion every wage earner and potential wage earner in Alabama has an ECONOMIC, SELF INTEREST CONCERN with the education and training of workers and the employment practices in our communities in Alabama. It is to be noted that Governor Terry Stanford of North Carolina has presented an image to the nation of a state that is interested in an approach of massive intelligence instead of massive resistance and has stressed that all people in the State of North Carolina must be trained, must be given all the training that they can absorb for industry that he expects to be moving into North Carolina. He further states that persons must be employed according to their abilities to produce rather than according to the color of their skin or their religious creed if North Carolina is to prosper.

Booker T. Washington, founder of Tuskegee Institute has been widely quoted by segregationists because of his statements that the races must remain separate, taught that no individual can hold another man down without holding himself down.

The story is told of a labor leader from one of the midwestern states visiting a local labor union in the Deep South. He stated that the people in his local were making 40¢ an hour more than they were. In a discussion with the Local the workers maintained that they were just as efficient, industrious, well trained and had just as good equipment as the union farther north. The visiting union leader daid, "There is only one difference that I can detect between this Local and mine and that is the way you are seated in the hall. It is perfectly alright for you to continue to remain seated with whites on one side of the aisle and Negroes on the other as long as it is worth 40¢ an hour for you to remain a segregated union,

PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY.
The Executive Director is John G. Feild. Mr. Percy Williams who will speak at the Annual Meeting of the Alabama Council is one of two Division Chiefs. John Hope is Chief of the Division of Government Employers. Public Members include the very Rev. Francis B. Sayre, Jr., Washington, D.C.; Rabbi Jacob Joseph Weinstein of Chicago; the Very Rev. Monsignor George O. Higgins, Washington, D. C.; Geroge Meany, Washington, D.C.; Walter Reuther, Detroit, Michigan. Government representatives in addition to the Vice-President of the U.S. include Secretary of Defense Air Force, Army, Navy, Commerce and others.

ECONOMIC EXPANSION is of direct personal concern to every person living in Alabama. The availability of grocery money is directly related to the manner in which Alabama makes use of the productivity of each person in the state. Across our state employment policies will directly affect the economy. Community leaders will be able to benefit by hearing Mr. Percy Williams speak on employment.

SUMMARY OF CCD MASS MEDIA COMMITTEE MEETING, FEBRUARY 27, 1963

Intergroup Org. Pg. Comm.

Among those present: Vincent Bowditch and Lillian Cohen, National Conference of Christians and Jews; Ivis Calvet, Catholic Interracial Council; Louisa Hager, Young Women's Christian Association; Sonya Kaufer, American Jewish Committee; Edith Macy, National Urban League; Alan Reitman, American Civil Liberties Union; Henry Schwartzchild, Anti-Defamation League; Joel O'Brien, Joel O'Brien Productions; Harry Fleischman and Evelyn Kirshner, National Labor Service, American Jewish Committee.

1. Instead of having regular meetings of the Mass Media Committee, in the future we will hold meetings only when some emergency situation requires one. Should any member of the Committee feel that a meeting is needed, he is asked to call me at PL 1-4000. All members are urged to send me copies of any new literature or mass media plans of their organizations in the field of desegregation.

2. A report was made on the Mass Media Committee's effort to stimulate educators to take up the question of the effect of harassment and intimidation on learning at the University of Mississippi. The Society for the Psychological Study of Social Issues, a committee of the American Psychological Association, has asked one of its members to prepare an article on the subject for a scholarly journal, which organizations might quote in future educational work. The preparation of this article, reports Dr. French, chairman of the Society, will take several months. Even though James Meredith has returned to the University of Mississippi, the article may have far-reaching significance in the effort to inform the public why desegregation must be accomplished in other schools without the kind of harassment that confronted Meredith.

3. The Association of University Professors does not initiate an inquiry unless there is a specific request from an aggrieved party, and also deals only with denials of academic freedom in a particular one. Attempts will be made to bring the facts about harassment and intimidation on the University of Mississippi campus to the attention of several college presidents who might stimulate their fellow educators through their professional associations to make representations to the Southern Accrediting Association. A summary was prepared of the press clippings and is now being reviewed by Professor Robert Bierstedt, chairman of the Department of Sociology of New York University, to make sure that the content and tone comports with academic standards. Professor Bierstedt also suggests that we may wish to broaden the point of our statement to say that not only learning but teaching is affected by an atmosphere of intimidation and harassment. He may have some other suggestions for the use of this summary statement.

4. The Committee helped Charles Butts, editor of the Mississippi Free Press, contact various people who could aid the paper's expansion program. Butts said our contacts were rewarding not only for money but for giving his newspaper additional credentials. Nine thousand dollars has already been pledged by various unions, foundations and individuals toward the twenty thousand dollars needed.

5. Clyde Kennard, sentenced to seven years in prison in Mississippi for "stealing" five bags of chicken feed, has been released from prison. Governor Ross Barnett ordered Kennard, who is suffering from cancer, transferred to the University of Mississippi Hospital and later suspended his sentence and set him free. The Governor explained, however, that the suspension would be revoked if Kennard was not good. If Kennard still wants to go to a white university, Governor Barnett may decide that it is "bad" conduct.

After his release, Kennard underwent an eight-hour operation in Chicago for the removal of a section of cancerous intestine, and is now convalescing.

6. William Higgs, a Mississippi lawyer who is leading the legal and political fight against civil rights violations in Mississippi, was convicted of contributing to the delinquency of a minor and sentenced to six months in jail and a $500 fine. Hinds County Judge Russell Moore passed sentence after an all white male jury deliberated 35 minutes to find the Jackson attorney guilty. It was reported that the Hinds County Bar Association will probably move to disbar Higgs.

He was convicted on the testimony of William McKinley Daywalt III, 16, of Collegeville, Pennsylvania, who said that Higgs had committed unnatural sex acts with him, even after Higgs' housekeeper, chief defense witness, testified that the boy told her that the story was not true. Daywalt was picked up after he hit an automobile with Higgs' car. He gave police the phony name he had been using in Jackson -- Tom Bono.

Higgs, who flatly denied the charge, said that under present conditions in Mississippi he would have no real chance to prove his innocence in the Mississippi courts and that his conviction would be automatic by a white Mississippi jury presided over by a Judge who is on the Board of the Citizens Council. Added Higgs:

"In effect I have been forced to leave my home state because I believe that the Constitution of the United States means that Negro citizens deserve the same rights as white citizens, and I have tried to implement my belief. The charge against me, which is completely false, has in my opinion been manufactured to stain my reputation because I am so involved in the civil rights movement. I would not hesitate for one minute to have this charge heard by a jury any place in the United States where its members would not face economic reprisal, social ostracism and possible physical harm by returning a verdict of not guilty.

"I speak not as a martyr, but on the basis of my arrest last summer in Clarksdale for traveling in an integrated group where I was threatened with death by local police for my civil rights activities. I believe that if I returned to Mississippi the simple misdemeanor charge would be changed to one or more felony charges that would result in a very long prison sentence. The record shows that civil rights proponents in Mississippi who have served prison terms have been the victims of physical abuse and cruel treatment."

Higgs related the following facts about the charge brought against him on February 1.

"On February 1, 1963, I was arrested in Jackson on the charge of contributing to the delinquency of a minor. The 16-year-old boy who made this charge is a native of Pennsylvania who had been given emergency temporary lodging by me. I have had many people stay over at my house in the last few years who have been in Mississippi to assist me in my civil rights work.

"This youth on several occasions asked me if he could borrow my car but I refused. Finally on January 29 the boy took my car without my permission and wrecked it in an accident. After his arrest and lengthy questioning by police, he made his accusation against me. He is still in jail in Jackson.

"I was arrested on Friday, February 1, and released on $500 bail. Trial has been set on the charge which, under Mississippi law, is punishable by a fine of up to $500 and imprisonment for not more than 6 months, for February 14, 1963."

Higgs based his statement that the charge against him was reprisal for his civil rights activity on these facts:

1) He was one of the attorneys for James Meredith in the successful suit for Meredith's entrance into the University of Mississippi.

2) He is the attorney for Dewey Greene, the second Negro student seeking admission to the University. He had filed the Greene case only 3½ hours prior to his arrest.

3) He is representing a Negro, William Smith, before the United States Supreme Court on a rape conviction where the confession was coerced through brutal beatings.

4) He was legal advisor to the Reverends Merrill Lindsay and R.L.T. Smith, in their 1962 congressional campaigns, the first two Negroes to run for Congress since the Civil War.

5) He has filed suit in Washington, D. C., along with seven Mississippi Negroes, seeking to compel the Department of Justice to provide federal marshals to protect Negro citizens and to require the government to prosecute Mississippi officials who have denied Negroes their civil rights.

6) He was counsel for many Freedom Riders in 1961.

7) He is counsel for four Episcopal ministers presently suing three Jackson policemen and the city judge for $44,000 damages under the federal civil rights acts.

Higgs emphasized that he hoped some day to return to his native state and resume the practice of law in an atmosphere of freedom. "I was born in Mississippi and planned to live my life there. But under the present conditions, I am convinced that my life is not safe in Mississippi."

Higgs, whose parents still live in Mississippi, was graduated at the age of 19 from the University of Mississippi as the top man in his class. After his graduation from the Harvard Law School, he returned to practice law in Jackson. He was voted by Life magazine a few months ago as one of the 100 most outstanding young men in the nation. Higgs was a recipient of a Lasker Civil Liberties Fellowship at Brandeis University and was honored with the annual Florina Lasker award of the New York Civil Liberties Union, and a similar award from the Civil Liberties Educational Foundation of Los Angeles.

7. Politics Is Our Business, a new 26-minute educational film, sponsored by the Institute for Political Education at Morgan State College, Baltimore, Maryland, was shown to the members of the Committee. Its purpose is to fill some gaps not filled by existing political films. For instance, the film gives a rather full description of the operation of a voting machine, on the premise that "most people are afraid of a voting machine and do not trust them." It also pays more attention than usual to the subject, "How to Organize and Work a Precinct." The film also portrays politics as an activity for all citizens, regardless of race or color. It reflects present-day urban America and includes more Negroes registering and voting than are found in other existing political films. The film was produced by Samuel L. Schulman, Inc., 23 Livingston Street, Trenton, New Jersey for the Institute for Political Education at Morgan State College. Dr. G. James Fleming, professor of political science at Morgan State College, is writer of the script and director of the film. It may be rented from any agency or library which usually rents films. Politics Is Our Business is one of several projects in a citizenship education program assisted by a grant from the Ford Foundation to Morgan State College.

8. The ethical intent and the true meaning of such present-day behavior as prayer vigils and freedom rides were considered on a television program, "The Ethics of Integration," which was presented on Directions '63 on Sunday, March 3rd on the ABC-TV Network. Participants in the program were noted author Lillian Smith; Rabbi Everett E. Gendler, spiritual leader of Princeton Jewish Center, who participated in a 1962 prayer vigil in Albany, Georgia; and Father Robert L. Pierson, Vice-Chairman of Christ the King Foundation, Assistant Priest of Grace Church, White Plains, New York, who traveled South with other clergymen from the North to discuss the religious aspects of integration with their Southern colleagues. (Father Pierson is the son-in-law of Governor Nelson Rockefeller).

HUMAN RELATIONS NEWS OF CHICAGO

Vol. 5 No. 1

PUBLISHED PERIODICALLY BY THE CHICAGO COMMISSION ON HUMAN RELATIONS

Realtors Open Fair Housing Discussion

Two significant developments indicate that the real estate industry in Chicago is concerned with opportunities—or the lack of them—available to Negro families in the purchase of homes.

One was the recent admittance of four Negro real estate brokers to membership in the Chicago Real Estate Board. The second is wider discussion among realtors about fair housing practices.

The four Negro brokers named to the Chicago Real Estate Board were the first since the Board's founding in 1883. They are: George A. Anderson, assistant vice president of Draper and Kramer, Inc.; Ripley B. Mead Jr., who has operated his own firm for 16 years; Benjamin H. White, secretary and sales manager of Julian A. Black, Inc.; and William Y. Browne, president of Riley and Browne, Inc., who has been in the real estate business for 35 years.

Recent articles in three Chicago realty weeklies—Real Estate News, Realty and Building and Real Estate Advertiser—openly discussed the issue of housing for minorities with a view to finding a possible solution.

Advance Mortgage Corporation, with offices in Chicago and 11 other cities across the nation, issued in December a special report on "Midwestern Minority Housing Markets." In it, Earl B. Schwulst, chairman of Bowery Savings Bank, recommended that the housing industry adopt five steps to eliminate the dual housing market and to create a single housing market in which homes and apartments would be available without racial or religious discrimination:

1. Builders, mortgage lenders and real estate brokers conform to the principle of a free housing market and study the experience of financially successful interracial housing for guidance.

2. Builders in a market area act in concert to open all housing to qualified buyers or tenants, thus eliminating any disadvantage to an individual builder.

3. Mortgage lenders not limit loans to non-white borrowers in certain residential districts. Mortgage credit should be extended to non-whites in any location on the same terms as to other borrowers.

4. Local boards of the National Association of Real Estate Boards declare that realtors should offer listed residential properties to any qualified purchaser or renter without regard to race.

5. Trade associations of the housing industry, including real estate boards, drop color bars to membership and admit any qualified businessman.

Arthur F. Mohl, former president of the Chicago Real Estate Board, offered one solution to the problem in a speech before the Presbytery of Chicago: "I propose that in some suburban community we find one, two, or three church congregations whose leadership would invite an enlightened realtor to conduct a selling campaign which would result in an affirmative invitation being extended by the community to a Negro family to buy a home, move into the community, and become a part of the community in most of its activities or, preferably, to invite three such families."

In the January 28 Real Estate News, columnist Fred A. Joyce, Jr., stated that pressure is being exerted from

Mayor Names John Johnson To Serve on Commission

John H. Johnson, president of Johnson Publishing Company, Inc., has been nominated by Mayor Daley as a commissioner of the Chicago Commission on Human Relations. Johnson is publisher and editor of Ebony, Tan, Jet and Negro Digest magazines.

Johnson

In 1951 Johnson was selected by the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce as one of the ten outstanding young men of the year. He was the first Negro businessman selected for this honor.

He is a director of the Magazine Publishers Association, Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry, National Conference of Christians and Jews, Chicago Branch American Red Cross and a member of the Chicago Press Club. He is a trustee of Tuskegee Institute and Fisk University; vice president of the National Urban League; national vice-chairman of the United Negro College Fund, and vice-chairman of the board of Supreme Life Insurance Company of America.

Real Estate Discussion

three directions on the savings and loan industry here to break its general policy of not financing Negro purchases of homes in all white blocks:

- Policies of the federal government.
- The generally soft home sales picture and corresponding slack mortgage market which makes the increasing Negro potential look better to conventional lenders every day.
- Charges by Negro mortgage customers and potential customers of discrimination in the mortgage money market.

Wrote Joyce, "The long standing unwritten policy of mortgage men, not to finance the Negro unless his is the fifth house to go black in a white block, is currently being adjusted to the third or even the second house. Realtors can no longer fall back on the excuse of lack of mortgage finance funds for Negro buyers in order to get themselves out of the middle of a black and white transaction."

In its 1963 annual forecast and review edition, Real Estate News stated that providing decent housing for all families—regardless of race, religion, or national origin — is one of the major problems facing the real estate profession in Chicago. The News commented, "There is no one who would challenge the desirability of decent housing—the challenge comes when method is to be considered. . . . The most effective block to 'forced housing' legislation would be proof that it is not necessary. In this case the burden of proof is on the ability of realtors to prove that the job can be done without a legislative club."

A statement of Walter R. Kuehnle, president of the Chicago Real Estate Board, appeared in Real Estate News, Realty and Building and Real Estate Advertiser. In it, Kuehnle praised those realtors and other brokers in Chicago who are quietly assisting in the stable integration of racially changing neighborhoods.

He said, "They are acting as agents for sellers who prefer dealing on an equitable basis with responsible brokers rather than leaving their properties and those of their neighbors to the tender mercies of unethical speculators and panic peddlers. If all realtors and other reputable brokers in areas of racial change are to maintain the future stability of their marketing areas, they would do best to pre-empt the speculator and panic peddlers by imitating the prudent leadership exercised by some of their colleagues in certain local communities.

"Community organizations in Marynook, South Avalon and Hyde Park-Kenwood have enlisted realtor cooperation not only in preventing panic but also in making the communities desirable enough so that white families will continue to move in."

Incidental Intelligence: A recent request for the Commission's study of unscrupulous real estate operators, "Selling and Buying Real Estate in a Racially Changing Neighborhood," is postmarked "New Delhi, India."

Rev. Leo T. Mahon, left, former executive director of the Cardinal's Committee for the Spanish-speaking was honored at a recent dinner before leaving for Panama where he will establish an Archdiocesan-sponsored parish. Also cited at the dinner was Gov. Luis Munoz Marin, second from left, who received the Knights of St. John "Man of the Year" award form Cesar Rivera, Knights' president. The Rev. Gilbert Carroll, chairman of the Committee, and the Rev. Donald J. Headley, at right, who succeeded Father Mahon on the Cardinal's Committee, look on.

Milestones of Negro Progress in Illinois

Dating forward from January 1, 1863, when the Emancipation Proclamation became effective, are the following milestones reflecting the strides which Negroes and other citizens of Illinois have made for their mutual benefit, their city, their state, and their country:

—In 1865, Illinois became the first state to ratify the 13th Amendment to the Constitution, which prohibited slavery.

—Passage of the Illinois Civil Rights Act of 1885.

—In 1893, Dr. Daniel H. Williams, a Negro, performed the first successful operation on the human heart at Provident Hospital in Chicago.

—In 1905, Robert S. Abbott founded the Chicago Defender, giving the Negro community its most effective and enduring voice.

—In 1908 Jesse Binga became Chicago's first Negro banker.

—The Chicago branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was founded in 1913.

—The Chicago Urban League was founded in 1916.

—In 1917, the Julius Rosenwald Fund was established in Chicago, directing its efforts toward the improvement of education, the development of greater opportunity for Negroes, and the betterment of race relations.

—In 1927, Mrs. Maudelle B. Bousfield was the first Negro appointed school principal in Chicago, at Keith Elementary School. Mrs. Bousfield became principal of Wendell Phillips High School in 1939.

—In 1929, Oscar DePriest became the first Negro Congressman from the North.

—In 1933, the Negro Chamber of Commerce, predecessor of the Cosmopolitan Chamber of Commerce, was founded.

—In 1943, Mayor Edward Kelly established the Chicago Committee on Race Relations, the first of its kind in the country and forerunner of the Chicago Commission on Human Relations.

—Chicago poet Gwendolyn Brooks won the Pulitzer Prize in 1950.

Mrs. Edith S. Sampson, a Chicago attorney, became the first Negro member of the American delegation to the United Nations when President Truman named her an alternate delegate in 1950. Mrs. Sampson is now a Municipal Judge in Chicago.

—The 1960 U. S. Census reported remarkable growth of a Negro middle class in Chicago, with more than one-third earning $6,000 or more annually, more than 15,000 having completed four or more years of college, some 37,000 home-owners (median value of homes: $16,700), and more than 81,000 holding "middle-class" occupational status.

—In 1961, Illinois passed a Fair Employment Practices Law.

—In 1961, Judge James Parsons of Chicago was appointed the first Negro U. S. District Judge both with life tenure and in the continental United States.

Pilot Cities to Fight Bias

Pilot cities for interreligious campaigns against racial discrimination, these 10 cities have been earmarked for drives by Protestant, Roman Catholic, Orthodox and Jewish agencies in the country's first interreligious program designed to combat racism. Announcement of the work was made following endorsement of a "Declaration of Conscience" by some 670 delegates at the first National Conference on Religion and Race in Chicago. Sponsors of the conference were the National Council of Churches' Department of Racial and Cultural Relations, the National Catholic Welfare Conference's Social Action Department, and the Synagogue Council of America's Social Action Commission. These ten cities were chosen because each has local leadership willing to work on the problem.

Community Leader Institute Begins in Lawndale

An Institute for Community Leaders, sponsored by Citizen Information Service and the Chicago Board of Education, moved into Lawndale community in March.

First meeting was at 7 p.m. March 5 in the Manley School, 2935 West Polk Street. Eleven weekly sessions will be held Tuesday evenings. Dr. George Ricks, assistant director of the Board of Education human relations bureau, is in charge of the program.

Cooperating are the Greater Lawndale Conservation Commission, Chicago Commission on Youth Welfare, Chicago City Missionary Society, Chicago Youth Centers and the Mayor's Committee on New Residents.

The course is designed to develop understanding and skills of community leaders within their own groups and in their relations with public officials.

Contractors Accused of Bias Agree to 4-Point Program

Six city contractors accused of filing discriminatory job orders with employment agencies have agreed to follow a four-point merit employment program laid down by the Chicago Commission on Human Relations.

The six were named along with other firms in a recent study conducted by the Bureau on Jewish Employment Problems. The Bureau examined 2,289 job orders received by two private commercial employment agencies and reviewed application blanks used by a sample of 13 private employment agencies.

Each of the six denied submitting discriminatory job requests and felt that the notation under fire probably was made by an employee of the employment agency. They have, however, agreed to do the following:

1. Write a letter to all of the company's recruitment sources informing them the company will accept people without regard to race, color or creed.
2. Notify all persons in the company who hire that their policy is one of non-discrimination.
3. Recruit new employees from sources able to send qualified minority group people.
4. Tell the Commission about any positions filled and the racial identity of the new employee.

Each of the city contractors now employs members of minority groups against whom discrimination was alleged.

Human Relations Conference

A Conference on Human Relations will be sponsored by the B'nai B'rith Women's Council of Greater Chicago from 9:15 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday, April 1, in the Morrison Hotel. Twenty-eight religious, civic and human relations organizations are cooperating. Theme will be "Advancement-Dignity-Liberty." John Johnson, president of Johnson Publishing Company, will be keynote speaker.

The Executive Director's

REPORT FOR FEBRUARY 1963

MFRC TRUSTEES MOVE TO SUPPORT RELIGION AND RACE MOVEMENT HERE Seven delegates to the National Conference on Religion and Race were invited to our Board meeting on the 27th. Four were unable to come: Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, Rev. L. V. Booth, Rabbi Murray Blackman, Thomas Luken. But the other three moved our Trustees by their accounts of the historic Chicago gathering of Americans of all faiths, seeking unprecedented unity, as well as divine guidance, to end the sin of racism in America. C. E. Israel said he went with some skepticism, "..but I stayed to pray," convinced that it produced a living document for action by the 70 millions who profess a religious faith.

Daniel Kane said it was a real triumph that the assembly was held at all; moreover, that the participants met and mastered many serious differences; what began in argument ended in a powerful spirit of love and faith. He added that his eyes were opened to the reality and role of the Negro church, which he now feels has an on-going contribution to make to American life and values. Fr. Jovian Weigel, agreeing with the others, said the racial problem is at a critical stage: our future depends upon what is planned and started now.

Immediate reaction of the Trustees was to be part of any local follow-up effort. They were told that 'little Chicago' pilot conferences in 10 cities were part of the follow-up plan; that Cincinnati was the only other city that had already talked of making a like effort. A motion was made by Mrs. Joseph Heiman, seconded by Ralph Zeigler, that "MFRC express an interest and desire to cooperate in a local conference on religion and race; this expression to be sent to religious leaders in Cincinnati and on a national level." Passed. In discussion it was noted that since 1944 MFRC has brought together leaders and members of all faiths in teamwork on civic problems; that such contacts could contribute much to a new, larger effort 'in the spirt of Chicago'.

Make a date... April 18...With MFRC & a lot of folks.

MFRC's ANNUAL DINNER MEETING will be held Thursday, April 18 at 6 P.M., at Central High School

MFRC's Board and staff are inviting city officials, community leaders and people from every walk of life.

At your service, we also need your counsel. MFRC in January began its 20th year. Much has happened in intergroup relations, and in Cincinnati, since 1944... Let's eye the advances on which we can build further-- but especially the "unfinished business." Come, listen, talk; help our city to meet its problems creatively.

More program details later. But mark April 18.

OTHER YEASTING IN CHURCHES, TEMPLES (1) Women leaders from most Methodist churches of the metropolitan area attended a Seminar on Race on Feb. 8 to hear Rev. David Sageser state the religious imperative, then get information from Prof. Arthur Hinman of UC, Edward McCroom, Charles Judd and Rev. Bennie Whiten, on sociological trends, housing, employment and problems of youth. The following discussions suggested that most of the women would take back to their groups a challenging report. (2) On the 28th, the Basin Strategy Committee spent three hours of intense interchange with Prof. Gibson Winter, University of Chicago sociologist, author of "The Suburban Captivity of the Churches."

(3) Episcopal clergy and laymen heard reports from three outside conferences mainly concerned with urban challenges to the church, at a 3-hour meeting on the 13th. (4) The United Churches of Christ's regional youth rally, held here Feb. 10, found 170 adults and youths listening intently to Alvin Wesley's talk on "Population Movements--Whither and Why?" Many said his facts opened a new world to them. (5) Lay leaders and clergy of one church spent a weekend 90 miles from town discussing and planning what it should be and do in its problem-filled parish during the next 5 and 10 years. Their proposals will be taken to the whole congregation. One recommendation: That a Negro clergyman be found to help carry on its growing ministry to all races in its area.

(6) MFRC's director and Msgr. Lawrence Walter of the Board had a conference with the Dean of the Cathedral Deanery, Msgr. Cletus A. Miller, to cooperate with and serve more fully the Deanery's 33 parishes, in the city's central area. (7) The Unitarian-Universalist Fellowship of the Northern Hills area called on MFRC's staff for consultations as well as a speaker, in a conscious effort to equip and move its members to aid intergroup progress. (8) The Board of the Jewish Community Relations Committee on the 28th heard Mr. Wesley talk on changing intergroup relationships, and the meaning of the Muslim movement. (9) Certain Protestant leaders were planning an experimental workshop, to be interfaith and interracial, modeled upon one tried near New York in 1962. (10) The "Church Integration" course sponsored in January-February by the Council of Churches did not attract a big enrolment, but it is likely that a radio program will share its "good news" with many listeners, soon.

HOUSING & RENEWAL (1) With others, we were drawn into discussion of occupancy patterns in new public housing on Liberty Street. Nearby Park Town Homes residents properly felt that their hard-won colorblind community was not helped if Stanley Rowe Towers on the north and Richmond Village (private housing) on the south were to be segregated racially. A what-to-do conference was set in March by the Better Housing League. (2) Another meeting brought together Park Town leaders with intergroup agencies to ask what more the latter could do to help Park Town's success. Four MFRC Trustees and staff participated in this session.

(3) With one community we had three contacts: a talk with a veteran clergyman on housing and racial trends; a visit by three women who wanted guidance in "contaging calmness"; a call by another resident, keeping in touch on trends.

(4) Urban Development leaders invited our staff to a stimulating bull session on the blight-fight, with visiting federal officials putting in their ideas.

IT'S CONFUSING On February 13 a brief news item come over the press wires and into a local daily paper, telling readers that the Chicago Real Estate Board had admitted four Negro brokers....Five days before, the nine directors of the Cincinnati Real Estate Board had voted into membership Mrs. Allene Reed, Negro, a saleswoman employed by a CREB member. Their action was far from routine; the facts of the matter were not boring or unprintable; problems and progress of interest to all citizens--of varied views--were involved. But the only people informed of that local event were those who saw the Negro weeklies. A majority faced discrimination; they missed news they needed, to be informed citizens.

TRAGEDY, RUMORS, EMOTION--& FACT-FINDING Death of a well-known Negro editor, several hours after his auto crashed, came as a shock to thousands. Hundreds soon began to hear questions and rumors about the circumstances of treatment at a hospital, and his transfer to another where he died. A Negro member of MFRC alerted us. We quickly called an MFRC Trustee having an institutional relationship to the hospitals, and other means of pressing an investigation. He went to work, getting records, checking with staff and doctors, working toward a fact-finding conference. After two days he reported to our Board meeting what he had so far learned, promising a full report later. He also consulted frequently with our initial informant, as a liaison later to be used to help convey to concerned and upset people an accurate accounting.

Three different rights are visible in this situation. There is the right of bereaved family and friends to know the facts, to end uncertainty: was death unavoidable? The hospital, beside the responsibility of full inquiry, has the right--if all or part of the rumors are found in error--to have that finding somehow circulated where the rumors have run. Not least is the right, and need, of people generally to escape cartoon views of other persons, groups, institutions and conditions in the community. False stereotypes cripple our mental health and our relationships...Not yet knowing the truth of the above situation, MFRC when the facts are in will work to clarify this tangled case.

COUNSELLING AGAIN For Potluck meeting speaker we enlisted William A. Briggs, educator director of the Ohio Civil Rights Commission, co-author of its manual, "Counselling Minority Group Youth." Tapping his field observations in Ohio, he stressed that schools must re-evaluate curriculum, teacher training and counselling, in relation to minority, low-income and culturally deprived youth; also that school administrators need all the help and understanding that other agencies and leaders can give them. The large crowd kept Mr. Briggs talking... Incidentally, OCRC has recently published, beside "Counselling", three other items of interest: its Third Annual Report; its Report on Discrimination in Housing in Ohio; and a study on "De Facto Segregation" affecting the schools. Phone OCRC's office here (CH 1-6605) if you wish to get copies.

AT THE PUBLIC LIBRARY James Baldwin's much-discussed article of last November in the New Yorker is now in a book, "The Fire Next Time." Not unsympathetic to the Black Muslims, he rejects the 'remedy' of racial separation: "We, the black and white, deeply need each other if we are really to become a nation." "My Negro Problem--and Ours" in Commentary (Jan. '63) is a candid, self-searching response by its editor, Norman Podhoretz. Recalling his childhood prejudices and fights in a Jewish-Negro part of Brooklyn, he examines honestly the conflicts and felt differences which must be resolved enroute to integration.

ATTENTION TO TENSIONS (1) Mr. Sparrow continued work on the situation of juvenile rowdyism and pilfering in and near a Basin supermarket. Interviews with businessmen in the area took many hours, but drew them into a collective hunt for remedies. Several managers met with ES on the 27th, some remedial ideas were aired and set for a trial. Meanwhile it was agreed that schools and social agencies would be called together, on area needs, by Mrs. Coffey of Seven Hills Neighborhood House, on March 13. The teamwork started well.

(2) An envoy from a "protest" group told us that parents in a low-income area had complained that school busses were cancelled to "punish" their children. With the envoy listening in, we phoned the manager of the housing project nearby, and learned much more about the situation, and previous efforts to check bad behavior on the busses. We also called a social agency setting up a much-needed program in that area. We saw the bus incident as part of a complex of problems, which are receiving additional, competent attention.

MISCELLANEOUS: (1) 'Over-worked' by the Junior League, Mrs. Ralph Haile, Jr., regretfully left our Board; was transferred to the General Committee; hopes to be more active later. (2) In However (its subtitle: "Cincinnati's Journal of Unpopular Topics and Discordant Opinion") we stubbed our nerve ends on this sentence: "If we do not quickly send the hillbillies back where they came from, we are all of us in serious trouble." The Institute on Appalachian Migrants, however, had already been scheduled, based on the opposite view of hill folk.

(3) From the UC YWCA came thanks for financing*, last July, workshop training for Miss Pat Zeigel, fitting her to set up a UC Human Relations Committee which has developed meetings and programs on campus (*from a special fund, not tax-$$). (4) Two UC Preventive Medicine students came to examine social aspects of local health problems which their class was investigating. We sent them to a pastor, policeman, etc., in one area. (5) A Councilman asked, could he keep for future use the housing material borrowed for a speech? Yes, sir.

HUMAN RELATIONS COMMITTEES PLAN CLINICS

During the month of March the Human Relations Committees of the 24 churches in the Hill District and surrounding areas will be sponsoring a series of clinics in housing, employment and law enforcement. The clinics are designed to help members of the various congregations who are interested in preparing to take advantage of their equal rights in these major areas of concern.

The clinics will be planned by committees from the various churches. Miss Bernice Baynes and Vann Johnson are the co-chairmen for the committee planning the housing clinics. Chairman of the committee to plan the law enforcement clinic is Alton Harris, while Mrs. Gladys McNairy is chairman of the planning committee for the employment clinics. Staff members of the Commission on Human Relations and the Urban League will assist the planning committees.

The employment clinic will assist individuals interested in entering the job market. Job-seeking methods and techniques, and suggestions helpful in adjusting to new employment opportunities, will be covered in these clinics.

The law enforcement clinic will acquaint all participants of the provisions and enforcement procedures of the various civil rights legislation. This clinic will also relate information that will assist the participant in securing equality of opportunity when confronting discrimination.

The Housing Consultants began laying plans for the future Housing Clinic at two meetings held in January. To obtain some indication of need for and interest in such a project, as a first step they formulated and distributed a questionnaire among the various church congregations.

Beginning in March, the Housing Clinic will be made up of four sessions over a four-week period, with an evening a week devoted to each session. The overall program theme will be how to go about buying or renting a house or apartment in attempting to obtain better housing.

General areas to be covered in the program are: where the Negro stands in housing today, where a person should look for housing in light of urban renewal, what aspects to consider in buying or renting a house or apartment, financing aspects and resources of buying a house, and what to do if racial discrimination is encountered when renting or buying.

RECREATION STAFF TRAINING PROGRAM

The City of Pittsburgh's Bureau of Recreation, in cooperation with the Mayor's Commission on Human Relations, plans an In-Service Training program for Recreation personnel on March 20 and 27. Involved will be individuals who supervise and administer the City's widespread recreation program, which includes parks, playgrounds, swimming pools, recreation centers, and tennis and basketball courts. Highly qualified professionals from agencies and universities have been selected to participate in the program.

CHR Rules in Housing Case

The Mayor's Commission on Human Relations announced on February 6 that the Stanton Land Company and Francis X. Totten, respondents in a fair housing case, have been ordered to sell a residential lot in the Stanton Heights Manor Plan to Dr. Oswald Nickens, an East End Negro obstetrician and gynecologist, on or before February 18, 1963. This order was issued pursuant to a public hearing held December 14, 1962, before the Commission, on a complaint filed September 11, 1962, by Dr. Nickens, in which he alleged that the Stanton Land Company, through its president, realtor Francis X. Totten, refused to sell him a residential lot in Stanton Heights for reason of race.

Acting solely upon the record produced at the hearing, the Commission based its opinion upon findings of fact and conclusions of law, to the effect that the Stanton Land Company, and Francis X. Totten, individually, violated Sections 6 (a) and (b) of the City of Pittsburgh's Fair Housing Ordinance Number 523 of 1958, by refusing to sell a housing accommodation as defined in Section 3 (c) of the law. Francis X. Totten was also found to have violated Section 6 (i).

Witnesses who presented testimony on behalf of the City were Louis Mason, Jr., executive director of CHR, and Leonard Karter, CHR staff investigator, both of whom presented the results of the Commission's investigation. Other witnesses were the complainant, Dr. Nickens, attorney Byrd Brown, Jr., Fred Kunkle, and Robert L. Hamm. Both Mr. Kunkle and Mr. Hamm are associated with Ryan Home Sales, Inc.

Presenting testimony on behalf of the respondents, Stanton Land Company and its president, Francis X. Totten, who was not present at the hearing, were real estate salesman Floyd A. May, who is associated with Huss Brothers Real Estate Company, and Mr. Kunkle of Ryan Homes.

Counsel representing the case for the City of Pittsburgh were City Solicitor David W. Craig and Assistant City Solicitor Marion E. Finkelhor. Counsel representing respondents was attorney Robert J. Dodds, Jr.

In interpreting the Commission's role, with respect to the Fair Housing Ordinance of the City of Pittsburgh, the Commission stressed the fact that the primary goal of the law is not punishment for discrimination based on race, color, religion, ancestry, or national origin, but rather, the achievement, through calm and conciliatory methods, of a fair and open housing market to enable all citizens of this community to

SPOTLIGHT ON AJCommittee

A massacre of Jews in Kishinev, Russia, in 1906, brought into existence the American Jewish Committee. Since its formation, AJCommittee has grown into a national agency with fifteen regional offices in the United States, and offices in Europe, Israel, and South America. The Pennsylvania Regional Office in Philadelphia, of which the Pittsburgh Chapter is a part, serves as the secretariat of the Pennsylvania Equal Rights Council (PERC), which stimulated the successful drive to obtain passage of fair housing and fair educational laws.

On the community level, the AJCommittee's eighty-two chapters and units cooperate with scores of national and local organizations, Christian, Jewish and non-sectarian, civic and church groups, schools, universities, government agencies, mass media, industry, labor, and especially with commissions on human relations and Jewish community councils.

The Pittsburgh Chapter, with unit memberships of over 900, was founded in 1944 to give grass roots validity to AJ Committee's programming. Attorney Allen H. Berkman is the Chairman of the Pittsburgh Chapter, which is currently focussing on discrimination in executive employment in major industry.

Findings based on special research studies on "executive suite" discrimination, conducted at Harvard, UCLA, and the University of Michigan, are hopefully expected to stimulate important changes in discriminatory patterns of executive recruitment and promotion practices. Through discussion and negotiation with industry leaders, the AJ Committee is seeking to overcome barriers and discriminatory practices in these areas.

In addition, both the national and local AJCommittee are helping focus attention on current persecutions of Jews in the Soviet Union. Many Pittsburgh leaders of the Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish faiths have joined in sending a cable of protest for transmittal through the Soviet Embassy in Washington.

As the oldest human relations agency in the United States, the AJCommittee has pioneered in the field of human relations and intercultural activities, being primarily concerned with obtaining security, equality and dignity for Jews and other minorities within the framework of equal opportunity and dignity for all. Their uppermost aims and objectives are to promote better understanding among all faiths; to combat bigotry and religious and racial discrimination; to strengthen our democratic institutions; to achieve with all Americans of good will a complete realization of the ideals of America; and, above all, to guard and foster human rights throughout the world. The Institute of Human Relations of the AJCommittee is a unique research laboratory dealing in depth with the fundamental aims and objectives of the organization.

From an agency concerned primarily with prejudice and discrimination against Jews, AJCommittee's concept of its role has advanced so that it now conducts pioneer research in the social sciences to understand and overcome bigotry, discrimination, and group hatred. New insights are being developed in such research studies at major universities — Columbia, Harvard, Yale, Michigan, UCLA, and Cornell. The Authoritarian Personality, an AJCommittee study published in 1952, was a first ground-breaking analysis of the psychological causes of prejudice. It sparked the three major religious faiths to investigate harmful religious texts and materials used in educational programs and to make revisions, where necessary, to avoid an improper image of other racial and religious groups. Commentary, an independent monthly magazine, is published and distributed by the national AJCommittee as a public service. It is a journal of significant thought and opinion on Jewish affairs and contemporary issues.

Presentation of the Louis Caplan Human Relations Award is a highlight of the Annual Meeting of the Pittsburgh Chapter. Given each year to the Allegheny County high school senior who has demonstrated outstanding leadership in promotion of understanding and intergroup harmony among his classmates and community, the Award was established in 1955 to honor a founder of the Pittsburgh Chapter and former national, now Honorary, President of The American Jewish Committee.

CORE EXEC ADDRESSES INTERGROUPERS

Mr. James Farmer, Executive Director of the Council on Racial Equality, spoke before members of the Clearing House for Intergroup Relations Organizations on January 15. His visit to the city was sponsored by the Pittsburgh Chapter of the American Jewish Committee, at whose program meeting he was the featured speaker in the Webster Hall Hotel.

Lack of Probable Cause. LPC. With these three letters, the Commission on Human Relations often writes "finis" to a complaint brought by an individual who, because he cannot perceive his own human shortcomings, sincerely believes he has been discriminated against solely because of his race or religion. CHR files are replete with such cases.

In one case, a Negro employee claimed he was dismissed as crew chief on a molding machine of a local factory because of his race. His dismissal was based on his foreman's allegation that complainant was negligent in failing to tighten a mold as it was being processed through its working cycle. But, to complainant's knowledge, other crew chiefs, white, who had committed similar acts of negligence, had not been fired. Finally, according to complainant, in a discussion about the dismissal, the foreman told him, "You're a Negro and you talk too much."

Field investigation at the factory revealed that many Negroes were employed there in diversified occupations. An interview with the foreman brought forth his statement that it was complainant who repeatedly raised the issue of race as the main factor in his dismissal; in exasperation, finally, the foreman told him, "If you want to feel that it was your race, it's okay with me." According to the foreman, the real reason for complainant's separation from his job was that he had been lax many times in exercising caution to double-check the mold to make sure it was properly secured, and had been repeatedly warned therefor. The ease with which the machine is operated allows the operator ample time to perform his work adequately and thus permit little margin for error. Producing a personnel folder on the individual who replaced complainant in the job, foreman indicated that the new employee was a Negro hired the day after complainant's dismissal, which nullified complainant's claim that the reason for his dismissal was based solely on race.

To some complainants, the many factors surrounding a refusal in housing or employment, a dismissal from a job, or failure to receive a promotion, often seem to revolve around a racial factor — and in many instances, they do. However, occasions arise when this is not the case, and the field investigation yields overwhelming evidence that the reason for dismissal from a job was other than race. The complainant, emotionally upset and lacking objectivity, may not have been apprised of all the reasons for his dismissal, and therefore, erroneously, believes his dismissal was caused by his employer's biased views.

PRESIDENT SIGNS HOUSING ORDER

On November 20, 1962, President John F. Kennedy signed an Executive Order entitled, "Equal Opportunity in Housing." The Order became effective November 21, 1962, and is designed to end discriminatory practices in housing owned or operated by the Federal Government, housing guaranteed by Federal loans or contributions, property insured or guaranteed by Government credit (FHA and VA), and property obtained from a state or local government agency receiving aid from the Federal Government (urban renewal).

In January, Ex-Governor David L. Lawrence, former Mayor of Pittsburgh under whose administration Pittsburgh's Fair Housing Ordinance was passed, was named Chairman and Executive Director of the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing. The Committee will be composed of certain Cabinet officers and public members.

The Committee is charged with coordinating activities of all the agencies as they relate to the Order, to examine their rules and regulations, to make such recommendations as it desires, and to report to the President.

Violations, if conciliation fails, can lead to cancellation of contract for Federal aid, denial of further aid to a violator until compliance is secure, and refusal to approve a financial lending institution or lender under any program.

At press time, the Committee had not yet been named. The Pittsburgh Commission has offered its assistance to the President and as a result, liaison has been established with the Housing and Home Finance Agency in Washington, D. C.

Conference of Commissions Scheduled Here

The Conference of Commissions on Human Rights will meet in Pittsburgh on May 22-24 at the Penn-Sheraton Hotel. The conference membership is composed of state and municipal commissions with legal mandates of law enforcement in housing, fair employment practices and public accommodations.

Representatives, both at staff and commissioner levels, will be present. Such states as New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Minnesota, Washington, California, Pennsylvania and Oregon, and cities such as Toledo, Cleveland, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Pittsburgh, St. Louis and Philadelphia, will send delegates.

The conference theme is, "Fair Practices Laws: New Devices." Discussions will center on new methods and techniques of coping with new problems of enforcement and with problems of broader community intergroup relations.

Details of the conference will be carried in the April Human Relations Review.

How to Add Skilled Workers to the Labor Supply by Really Trying

According to the January issue of a bulletin issued by the National Labor Service of the Institute of Human Relations in New York City, in dealing with employment discrimination, apprenticeship training is the toughest nut to crack. Less than 2% of apprenticeship positions throughout the United States are filled by Negroes, despite a U. S. Department of Labor report that hundreds of thousands of workers are needed for "hard-to-fill" skilled jobs.

California industrialist Eddy Feldman, head of the Los Angeles furniture mart, views the problem not so much as thinking up new ways to combat discrimination as it is to create adequate numbers of on-the-job training opportunities. Mr. Feldman is therefore calling for administrative action and legislation by the State of California to require that all state contracts, in which journeymen would be employed, include clauses providing for non-discriminatory hiring of at least one apprentice or trainee for every five journeymen.

Should this proposal be expanded to cover the entire nation, mandatory training quotas for Federal, state and local public works, public service, and defense projects would go a long way toward filling this gap and strengthening equal opportunity in training at the same time.

have access to decent, safe, and sanitary housing. The same equal access to the housing market is also the stated policy of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and many cities and states throughout the country, as well as the policy of the National Government.

The Commission's Opinion, which contained 27 Findings of Fact, included a finding that refusal to sell was for reason of race. In their Conclusions of Law, the Commissioners noted that, throughout the entire series of negotiations between Dr. Nickens and Mr. Totten, the record contains no instance of bickering or honest disagreement over the price or details of sale or construction. The record also shows general agreement that Dr. Nickens was recognized by all parties as a person of excellent community repute. Since the crux of the case hinged on the reason for refusal to sell Dr. Nickens a lot, after a thorough examination of all possible reasons for the refusal, the Commission concluded that Dr. Nickens' race was the only reason for his rejection by the Stanton Land Company and Mr. Totten, as supported by all testimony, evidence, and exhibits.

It was noted that Dr. Nickens remains ready and willing to purchase the lot in question from the Stanton Land Company, and has an agreement with Ryan Home Sales, Inc., for the construction of a home on the lot should it be sold to him by Stanton Land Company. The agreement, dated December 12, 1962, is valid for ninety days.

The Commission concluded that there was "no probable cause" for a complaint originally filed against Mrs. Francis X. Totten, who was formerly the secretary-treasurer of the Stanton Land Company, and the C. L. Totten Realty Company, and therefore dismissed the complaint against them.

NICKENS VS. STANTON LAND CO.

The photo above sets the scene minutes before the Commission's public hearing on December 14, 1962. The hearing was held to hear allegations by Dr. Oswald J. Nickens, local obstetrician and gynecologist, that racial discrimination was the reason for refusal by the Stanton Land Company, through its president, Francis X. Totten, to sell him a lot on which to build a home in Stanton Heights.

On January 28 the Commission concluded that the only reason for refusal of respondent to sell Dr. Nickens a lot was because of his race, and issued an Order on February 6 to the Stanton Land Company to sell the lot in question to the complainant by February 18, 1963.

Despite icy streets and sub-zero weather, friends and professional colleagues of CHR Deputy Director Michel G. Iskander turned out for a last farewell luncheon on January 23 at the Oliver Restaurant. Effective in February was Mr. Iskander's resignation to assume a post with the United Nations as a Technical Assistance Expert in Social Welfare to the government of Jordan. This new assignment grew out of Mr. Iskander's work as an advisor to the West African government of Cameroun the past summer, during which he spent a four-month leave of absence from the Commission. Accompanying him to Jordan, where he will reside for at least a year in the capital city of Amman, are his wife and two daughters.

Mt. Mercy Workshop

Mount Mercy College, in cooperation with the National Conference of Christians and Jews, will sponsor a second workshop in intergroup relations from June 24 to July 16, 1963.

Entitled Education and Human Relations: A Workshop on Intergroup Problems, the workshop will be under the direction of Jeanne E. Brooker, assistant professor of education at Mount Mercy College, and William Neal Brown, associate professor and Director of the School of Social Work Training Project, Graduate School of Social Work, Rutgers University.

Designed to explore intergroup problems of particular concern to public and parochial school educators and community leaders, the workshop program will include lectures, group discussions, readings, individual consultations, and field trips. Consultants from school, church, and community agencies will bring practical experience in the areas under study.

Carrying 3 units of undergraduate credit, the workshop is open to advanced undergraduate and graduate students, and others who wish to enroll without academic credit. Teachers may apply the credits toward permanent certification requirements.

The costs are $83 for tuition and $90 for room and board, which include use of library, swimming pool and gymnasium facilities, and campus housing in Frances Warde Hall.

Pittsburgh public school teachers may apply for Frick Scholarships, the deadline for which is March 15. The deadline for application for scholarships from other available sources is May 31. Complete information may be obtained by writing to: Miss Jeanne E. Brooker, Workshop Director, Mount Mercy College, Pittsburgh 13, Pa.

Child Hostility Probed

In cooperation with the National Conference of Christians and Jews, six other organizations are sponsoring an Institute on Rearing Children of Good Will at Chatham College on March 27, from 9:30 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.

Concerned with the reality of hostility development in children and how parents can deal with it, the Institute's program is designed to give better insight into growth and development patterns in children, and to provide leadership ideas for programs and action. Plans include presentation of a well qualified expert on hostility, Dr. Gordon Jackson, Dean of the Pittsburgh Theological Seminary; the first Pittsburgh performance of a new play in the Plays for Living series; and discussion groups with competent leadership.

The registration fee, including lunch, is $4.00. For further details, write Mrs. Ralph E. Tygard, Chairman, 711 Vermont Avenue, Pittsburgh 34. Or phone her at 563-2189.

Airline Stewardesses Wanted

The Urban League of Pittsburgh is in receipt of a job order from one of the nation's foremost airlines, requesting the services of that agency to assist in recruitment of qualified candidates for positions of stewardess.

Applicants should have some college and/or experience in public contact employment. Other requirements are: age, 20 to 26; height, 5'2" to 5'8"; weight, 140 lbs., maximum.

SEPARATE AND UNEQUAL

February, 1963

Why desegregate - "Why do you want to go to our schools?"
In Georgia there are 8 area Vocational and Technical schools. Six designated white and two Negro. There is not a single subject made available to Negroes that is denied whites, but there are 17 courses available to whites that are denied Negroes. They are: (1) Air Conditioning and Refrigeration, (2) Aviation Mechanics, (3) Diesel Machines, (4) Dry Cleaning, (5) Electrical Construction and Maintenance, (6) Laundering, (7) Machine Drafting, (8) Machine Shop, (9) Office Machine Repair, (10) Photography, (11) Shoe Repair, (12) Small Gasoline Engine Repair, (13) Watch Repair, (14) Welding, (15) Electrical Technology, (16) Mechanical Technology, (17) Medical Lab Assistant.

The following is a compendium of the case of Columbus Scott vs. the Atlanta Board of Education et al.
In October 1962 Columbus Scott, Negro, 23, graduate of Turner High School and a veteran of five years in the Armed Forces asked us (GCOHR) to help him get some courses in Machine Shop or Die Making. The courses were scheduled at Smith-Hughes Vocational School (white), but not at Carver Vocational School (Negro). He filed application for Smith-Hughes (no answer).

In November Scott visited Carver to find machinery on order and courses planned for January - 1963. The equipment arrived at Carver and a few people were invited to view same and listen to ambitious plans for use (estimated value $150,000).

EVALUATION of EQUIPMENT and PLANS, etc.
A close survey revealed that the equipment was minus component parts, unlevelled, and without electricity - hence, not useable.
DECISION - Carver, at this point, is not equipped to compete with Smith-Hughes.

Early January - 1963 a new application was made to Smith-Hughes accompanied by a letter of desire to the Superintendent of Education (no answer). Scott visited the Deputy Superintendent of Education who offered weak objections to desegregation - "wrong time" - "possible violence" - "possible adverse effect his admission might have on proposed new facilities, etc" -. Nevertheless, he agreed to present the case to the Board.

RESULT
Scott and Thomas McPherson (Assistant Director of the Greater Atlanta Council on Human Relations) - the other applicant - were admitted. They expect to enjoy all the hidden advantages offered such as -- job placement, apprenticeship opportunities, subject variety, etc.

OBSERVATION:
Perserverance made possible now what patience might have accomplished in three years!

STATE COUNCILS

Macon, Georgia
The Macon Council on Human Relations had its last meeting January 28, 1963 at Christ Church. 25 were present.

The Action Committee reported concerning discrimination in the Macon Hospital. William Randall reported inadequate bath facilities for Negroes, non-employment of Negroes in the Admitting and Business offices, and non-admittance of Negroes to the Nurse's Education Program. Mr. Randall stated the matter had been brought to the attention of the Management and a meeting is being arranged with the Hospital Commission. We hope Macon can solve this problem as it has others - over the Conference Table.

Rome, Georgia
Our Council met on January 14, 1963 at the Carnegie Library. It was the first time we had had the privilege of meeting in this Library with a room equipped for meetings of this kind. The screen and projector were available with someone to operate it. The whole atmosphere was ideal and provided the perfect setting. It was, I felt, one of our best meetings. Miss Boas, a wonderful Chairman, presided. Miss Parish, our new Secretary, had secured "The Baltimore Story" for us to see and this film was taken to the City School Superintendent - who promised to show it to the Board of Education.

Our progress seems slow, but we realize we have so far to come from. Our next meeting will be held at the First Presbyterian Church on Third Avenue.

Savannah, Georgia
The Savannah Council again enjoyed a family covered dish supper. This provided fun for all and a chance for the children to get acquainted. The Reverend O. W. Holmes will accompany his nephew, Mr. Hamilton Holmes - who will be the speaker at the next meeting.

Atlanta, Georgia
The Atlanta Council's Scool Committee continues to work diligently on school integration. They are providing tutors for 28 of the Negro transfer students. The Council reports less emotional tension than last year. Some Negro students are playing on basketball teams and some are participating in Glee Clubs, Dramatic Clubs, etc.

Brunswick, Georgia
Brunswick hits the news!
January 28th issue of NEWSWEEK...
"Georgia's seacoast city of Brunswick put its own big dent into the old order - -- it has the quiet good offices of a Council on Human Relations ---"
And in the Atlanta Journal, February 8th, a summary of accomplishments is given. Signs down - library desegregated - lunch counters open, etc. The article ends with, - "Observers also credit the Georgia Council on Human Relations, a biracial organization, and local branch with exerting strong influence in favor of negotiations."

WHY?

Why? Why?? Why???

This word becomes a mournful wail. What does man have to lose? What is the foundation for his fear? Is he willing to sell his soul - for what? Why will he not act on a point that he admits is right?

We understand why some people think they cannot act ... but many middle and upper middle class people seem to have little they can possibly lose if they behave according to the principles they profess ... profess both publicly and privately.

In Columbus, Georgia we have a small Council of wonderful people. Everyone of these members has the respect of the community because of his integrity, stability, and methods of working to improve the community. They are not "outsiders", "radical", or "troublemakers".

Why is it so difficult for these people to find a meeting place in the "white" meeting room in Columbus? There is no welcome in any church, - Baptist, Methodist, Roman Catholic, etc.

Many public agencies - including Fort Benning - find excuses.

"We believe in what you are doing - but NO - you cannot meet here."

Columbus is a fine city in the United States of America that claims to be a free country. Why cannot an intelligent respectable group of citizens not only be allowed to meet - but be encouraged to meet?

NATURAL PREJUDICE

Alexis De Tocqueville, French historian, author of "Democracy in America," which is described as the "greatest book ever written on one country by the citizen of another said, -

"There is a natural prejudice which prompts men to despise whomsoever has been their inferior long after he is become their equal; and the real inequality which is produced by fortune or by law is always succeeded by an imaginary inequality which is implanted in the manners of the people ... this prejudice continues to draw an invisible line between the races."

Mortgage Loans Up For Negroes, CCHR Finds

Mortgage loans for non-white home buyers are increasingly available in Chicago, but patterns of racial discrimination continue, a study by the Commission on Human Relations revealed April 5th.

Ely M. Aaron, chairman, said the report shows that "at least 91 lending institutions—including the top 15 savings and loan associations, by assets—currently arrange mortgage loans for Negro home buyers in the Chicago area.

"The Commission was able to discover only about a dozen financial institutions, other than Negro-owned ones, which made mortgages to Negroes in 1950."

Aaron noted that although mortgage funds are available to qualified Negro home buyers in stable areas of the city and suburbs that are predominantly Negro, few financial institutions (though the number is increasing) process loans for qualified non-white borrowers wishing to purchase in any neighborhood in the city or any suburb on the same terms as for white borrowers.

The five-month study titled "Mortgage Availability for Non-Whites in the Chicago Area," attempted to answer the question: How available are mortgage funds for non-white home buyers?

This question was raised at the Commission's public hearing in the City Council last summer which sought remedies for abuses that often accompany real estate and financial transactions in racially changing neighborhoods.

The Commission's report is based on interviews with community leaders, mortgage lenders, and mortgagors. Unwillingness of financial institutions to make known their lending practices in regard to non-white applicants made it difficult to establish how many of the more than 500 lending institutions operating in the Chicago Metropolitan area actually make mortgage loans to Negroes.

Mortgage lenders have modified their practices in recent years because of the growth of the Negro middle class, and because lending institutions need new outlets for their money as white loans decrease, the Commission said. Mortgage lenders told the Commission that their experience with Negro home buyers was not substantially different from their dealings with white home buyers.

Copies of the complete report are available by writing the Commission.

Study Gives New Facts About Prairie Shores

The story of Prairie Shores has never been told in its entirety—at least, not publicly.

Participants in the high-level Princeton Conference on Equal Opportunity in Housing at Princeton University last October read the full story in a report prepared by The Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies (1726 Pennsylvania Avenue NW, Washington 6, D. C.) for exclusive use of conferees. The Conference was co-sponsored by the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials and the National Housing Center. In attendance were top level human relations officials and leaders in the real estate and housing industry. The Commission on Human Relations has obtained permission to report the findings of this 24-page study.

It is not giving away the ending of the story to state that developers of Prairie Shores, a housing development of five high-rise buildings with 1,678 apartments at 29th and South Parkway, accomplished what they set out to do: Construct middle-income housing with racially mixed occupancy in a formerly depressed area and make it financially successful. Almost everybody knows that part of the story. How it was done is another matter.

"Case Studies in Racially Mixed Housing — Prairie Shores," written by Eunice S. Grier, staff member of the Washington Center and co-author of a book on interracial housing, tells it in part this way:

"Prairie Shores is a major element in the overall renewal of Chicago's once-prosperous Central South Area, which had been on the decline since before World War I. During the war period and the decades which followed it, the area became a primary focus of settlement for Negro newcomers to Chicago. By 1950 it was bursting at the seams with almost 60,000 persons per square mile, living for the most part in severely inadequate and deteriorated dwellings. Social and health problems were rampant. The population, 97 per cent Negro, worked predominantly at the lowest-skilled and worst-paying jobs.

"The first new private residential construction in the South Central Area was Lake Meadows, an apartment development built by the New York Life Insurance Company. Located on a 100-acre site just to the south of what is now Prairie Shores, Lake Meadows contains about

2,000 dwelling units in ten buildings. . . . Site clearance was begun in 1949 by the Chicago Land Clearance Commission. Construction by New York Life started in 1952, and was completed in 1960.

"Open from the outset for Negro occupancy, the first five of Lake Meadows' ten buildings were rented almost entirely to Negroes. From this point on, in a reversal of the customary trend of racial progression, each succeeding building had a higher proportion of whites. The tenth, a luxury building, was about 75 per cent white. Observers ascribe this phenomenon largely to the increasing desirability of the area as renewal progressed."

While Lake Meadows was under construction, other plans were being made for additional residential development in the Central South Area.

After the land on which Prairie Shores now stands was cleared of existing structures, it was sold on May 1957, after competitive bids, to the firm of Draper and Kramer, Inc. (which had been consultants to the Lake Meadows management from the beginning) at a cost of 50 cents a square foot.

Author Grier writes, "Several respondents for this study estimated that a comparable site on the lake front would have cost at least $5.00 a square foot if acquired privately.

"From the start, it was planned that apartments in Prairie Shores would be available to both whites and Negroes in all five buildings and on all floors."

Every effort was made to keep rental costs as low as possible in order to insure the availability of the apartments to middle-income employees of the adjacent Michael Reese Hospital, employees of other institutions located nearby, and to assure as large a market as possible for a development . . . open to both whites and Negroes.

"The management believed that it was essential that rentals be kept attractive enough to whites to make them forget any prejudices or fears they might have about co-occupancy by Negroes. . . . Prairie Shores' rentals run between $32 and $34 a room."

Lower than average rentals in similar housing was achieved partly by the low price of the land. "In addition, the development was designed in such a way as to make more efficient use of the land than before. When Prairie Shores was completed, there were nearly twice as many households living on the 20 acre residential site as had previously resided on the entire 55 acres allocated for both residential and institutional use.

"Although Draper and Kramer has an interest in each of the five buildings, their interest is a minority one and most of the equity capital has been put up by others. According to Ferd Kramer, president of Draper and Kramer, this was no easy task for the first of the five structures. . . .

"Kramer said: 'We have in our office formed all kinds of syndicates for conventional deals both in the residential and commercial fields but I never tackled a program as difficult as this one. I drove myself almost to the breaking point getting hold of this equity money in dribs and drabs of $5,000 on up.'. . .

"Some of those who invested in the first building, Kramer believes, probably did so because they wanted to accomplish something of benefit to the city rather than for speculative gains. Among their number were some of the foremost businessmen in Chicago.

"Equity capital came far more readily as the building program progressed. On the second and third buildings, investments ran from $50,000 to $100,000 each; in the last two buildings each investor put up $100,000, making only five or six partners per building. Whereas it had been necessary to persuade and cajole each prospective investor in the first building, Kramer found it necessary to turn away capital on later buildings.

"One investor called Kramer shortly after he received his first dividend to say that he had invested solely because he believed this development was good for Michael Reese Hospital. 'He was astounded,' Kramer reported, 'to see how profitable it was.'

"Mortgage money has been provided by a combination of government and private sources. Mortgages of all five buildings have been insured by the Federal Housing Administration under Section 220 of the National Housing Act which provides 40-year mortgages for middle income housing. Kramer experienced some initial difficulty in getting a commitment from F.H.A. on the first Prairie Shores building, on the grounds that it was located in a slum area. Section 220 was, of course, designed to assist with the elimination of slums; yet it required a special appeal to Washington before the commitment was issued. All future commitments were forthcoming with little difficulty.

"Draper and Kramer anticipated two major problems in the early stages of its rental program; the fear of whites that they would be isolated in a largely Negro project, and the difficulty in demonstrating to prospective tenants the desirable middle-class residential neighborhood the Central South Area was destined to become. . . .

"The problem of overcoming whites' fears of Negro co-occupancy was perhaps the more difficult. In the first place, there was very little experience with stable interracial occupancy in Chicago to which the developing firm could point. As a matter of fact, all the evidence pointed to neighborhood after neighborhood in which entrance of one Negro family was inevitably followed by many more until the area became wholly or almost entirely Negro-occupied.

"Renting on the first building was begun in mid-1958 with a private showing for personnel of Michael Reese Hospital. This pre-selling procedure to a largely-white potential market enabled salesmen to inform prospects who came later that the applications were running about 80 per cent white, a fact which management considered important to overcome fears of Negro inundation. Nonetheless, applicants came slowly at first, and intensive efforts were necessary to rent the 342 apartments with a racial composition approximately 75 per cent white and 25 per cent Negro.

"In addition to continuous newspaper advertising and a site rental office staffed daily from 10 a.m. in the morning until dark, Kramer undertook other efforts to

Ely M. Aaron, right, chairman of the Chicago Commission on Human Relations, presided at the Commission's conference on discrimination in cemeteries and crematories which was held February 28. Others participating were from left, Ald. Robert H. Miller (6th), Ald. Nicholas J. Bohling (7th), who is chairman of the City Council Committee on Judiciary and State Legislation, and Atty. Jerome J. Friedman, chairman of the law and order advisory committee of the Commission.

Urge Stronger Action Against Burial Bias

The Chicago Commission on Human Relations has called for a stronger city ordinance against racial discrimination in cemeteries and crematories and stricter enforcement of the state law.

It recommended that the City Council amend Chapter 199A of the Municipal Code to correspond to the Illinois Civil Rights Law.

State law specifically includes cemeteries and crematories as places of public accommodation and prohibits them from denying service to any person on account of race, religion, or place of national ancestry.

The civil rights section of the Municipal Code does not specifically list cemeteries and crematories as places of public accommodation, nor does it prohibit refusal to sell cemetery lots because of the race of the purchaser. It merely states that there shall not be any racial discrimination in the price charged for lots or graves.

The Commission's recommendations were made in a report issued at a conference on discrimination in cemeteries and crematories in the Chicago metropolitan area. The conference was held February 28 in City Hall. Ely M. Aaron, chairman of the Commission, presided.

The Commission's report was based on research and staff interviews with clergymen, funeral directors, cemetery managers, and representatives of cemetery and funeral management associations.

The report noted that discrimination against non-whites centers in non-sectarian cemeteries, many of which are members of the Cemeteries Association of Greater Chicago. The Cemeteries Association is an organization of 26 non-sectarian cemeteries in the city and suburbs. Commission staff interviewed the managers of all seven cemeteries within Chicago which are members of the Association, plus five outside the city limits. All of the managers but two expressed unwillingness to sell cemetery plots to Negroes, explaining that they feared losing potential business.

Prominent spokesmen for Oriental citizens' groups informed the Commission that Orientals have not experienced any racial discrimination at Chicagoland cemeteries. By choice, most deceased Orientals are cremated or interred in a cemetery on Chicago's northwest side. Spokesmen for American Indian groups said that Indians have experienced relatively little difficulty in obtaining burial plots.

All Catholic, Jewish and Protestant cemeteries in Chicago and suburbs are open to members of their respective faiths regardless of race. There are five cemeteries in the Chicago area that are used almost exclusively by Negroes, but none of these is within the Chicago city limits. There are also other cemeteries in Chicago and suburbs which made their facilities available to all persons, regardless of race.

Several months ago, the Commission received a specific allegation of racial discrimination against Oak Woods Cemetery, 1035 E. 67th Street. The Commission was unsuccessful in its attempt to negotiate a solution. Consequently, with the assistance of Commission staff, the complainant presented his case to the State's Attorney of Cook County. The State's Attorney has filed suit against this cemetery, charging violation of the Illinois Civil Rights Law. The case is now awaiting trial.

promote Prairie Shores. One member of his firm was assigned to visit personnel managers of firms located in the Loop area as well as on the south side to tell them about Prairie Shores and to provide them with brochures for employees. Advertising through a local FM radio station with a reputation for reaching people 'of culture and education' was also used.

"After the first building was completed and occupied, renting of succeeding buildings became progressively easier. The advertising campaign was continued, but the special canvassing of business firms no longer seemed necessary. Building Number 2 was on the market for six months, and Building Number 3 for about five and a half months. Buildings 4 and 5 were opened for rental applications on the same day, thus putting almost 700 apartments on the market at one time. Building Number 4 was completely rented in less than ten months, and Building Number 5 two months later."

Tenancy in the latter buildings is about 80 per cent white and 20 per cent Negro.

"In the early days of Prairie Shores, there were a few charges by civil rights proponents that the management had an inflexible limit on the proportion of Negroes who would be accepted, and that some otherwise qualified Negro customers had been turned away because the Negro quota had already been filled for the building being rented. According to the management, just the opposite was the case with the last four buildings of Prairie Shores.

'Had we let nature take its course,' Kramer states, 'these buildings would have ended up almost 100 per cent white because of the larger proportion of qualified whites among the applicants.'"

Case Study Shows Need For Fair Housing Law

"Complaint valid. Case closed with no conciliation possible."

With that notation, the Commission on Human Relations closed a recent case of racial discrimination in housing.

The story is retold here because it points up the limitations of efforts to prevent racial restrictions without a fair housing law which would make certain types of housing available without regard to race.

Involved in the case were James Gradolph, a white graduate student at the University of Chicago; his two roommates, one of whom was Negro; and managers of the Hyde Park apartment building where he lived.

Gradolph had lived at the Hyde Park address for more than two years, sometimes with one, sometimes with two roommates who shared living expenses. Gradolph said his landlord knew of his roommates and had been acquainted with them. Then Gradolph took in a roommate who was Negro.

On July 16, 1962, Gradolph was told by his roommates that, while he was out, the building manager and his wife came to the apartment and inquired if Gradolph had taken in "a colored person." When they were told he had, they said the Negro must move out immediately. They claimed the lease prohibited more than two persons from living in the apartment. The lease did not. Gradolph said there were other apartments in the six flat building and in the adjoining building, also managed by the same people, in which lessees had taken in roommates, without advance permission, and the landlord had not objected.

On August 3, the building manager told Gradolph his lease would not be renewed when it expired on September 30, 1962.

Gradolph called upon the Congress of Racial Equality which asked the Chicago Commission on Human Relations to intervene. Both did what they could to help. The Commission negotiated a meeting between the two feuding parties and their attorneys. It ended in a deadlock.

Stan Williamson, art director of Follett Publishing Company, designed graphics of Commission's 1963 exhibit. Exhibit had been displayed in lobby of Commonwealth Edison Company and is being shown at City Hall during April. Organizations wishing to have exhibit shown on their premises during 1963 should contact the Commission.

Meanwhile, Gradolph continued to live in the apartment. During this time, his electricity was turned off and the apartment was rented to other tenants—three young women students at the University of Chicago. The women declined the apartment when they learned of the incident. The building manager filed a suit in Municipal Court for forcible eviction.

The case finally wound up in court. Gradolph's lawyer asked for a jury trial. Meanwhile, the court had ordered Gradolph to pay double rent—according to a provision in the lease—until the litigation was completed. By December 3, with Gradolph unable to pay double rent, the complaint had for all intents and purposes died and Gradolph moved out of the apartment.

* REPORT for APRIL 1963 *

HOUSING QUESTIONS INVOLVE THE CITY & CITIZENS IN MANY WAYS City Council on April 24 unanimously voted that "...passage of House Bill 308 in its present form would be of general and substantial benefit to the citizens of Cincinnati," and directed the City Manager to so inform the legislative subcommittee holding H.B. 308 at Columbus. Council acted after requesting the City Manager's recommendation. Concerning the bill (which would prohibit discrimination in selling, leasing and renting both public and private housing), Mr. Harrell concluded: "If the principle of integration is accepted as the ultimate democratic goal of our American way of life, then fair housing legislation such as H.B. 308 should be supported. It is therefore the recommendation of the City Manager that Council go on record as endorsing the passage of H.B. 308."

This 9-0 vote on a controversial question was not reported to readers of either daily newspaper. But on May 1 WCKY picked up the hot potato, "knowing full well that our editorial today is highly controversial." It brushed aside the idea of exempting housing built privately or financed by conventional loans, adding: "If the ideal of integration--equal opportunity for all American citizens, regardless of religion or color of skin--is generally accepted as the ultimately desirable goal of the American way of life, then fair housing legislation will support our constitutional form of government. About 19 states now have fair housing laws on the books, and we think Ohio should have such a law...We believe that discrimination in housing should be prohibited; and we applaud Council for their endorsement of House Bill 308."

(Prospects were dim for passage at Columbus as April became May. But win or lose now, the issue won't 'get lost'; as in FEP's history the battle will be fought until a workable remedy is found. As MFRC's Board on April 24 was "strongly supporting" H.B. 308, other events supported that assumption.)

Parktown Homes' protest to Council about segregative practices in public and private housing nearby--this led to a hearing before Council's Housing Committee on the 15th. A succession of groups and persons rapped the threat to Parktown's gallant integration effort, and public housing officials were closely questioned by the Committee, and asked for further information. MFRC's statement noted: "Many people feel that the question is not yet answered, can any family 'prefer' any CMHA project? So long as Winton Terrace and English Woods have only white tenants, the question remains." The weeks following the hearing were marked by a crisscross of contact and consultation among public and private organizations. Controversy was leading to cooperation.

On the 22d, Council's Housing Committee heard more critical voices, this time aimed at conduct of the Avondale-Corryville conservation project, and its 'citizen participation' aspects. Without getting into the detailed argument, we wonder if one 'villain' of the piece escaped due discredit: namely housing discrimination and segregation everywhere, which has chronically hindered and at points defeated the renewal efforts of this and many other cities.

Public housing had an eloquent interpreter here on April 4. The Commissioner of PHA, Mrs. Marie McGuire, spoke on "The Harsh Realities of Urban Growth," at the annual meeting of Seven Hills Neighborhood Houses. One quote: "Since its inception the public housing program has been controversial. This controversy nationally revolves around our unwillingness to accept poverty as a neighbor or to admit the potentials of the economically disadvantaged. While the public housing program does not create the families with serious social or adjustment problems, the housing program in the public mind is held responsible for the quality and behavior of all its residents..." (Note: For a copy of this meaty 5-page paper, call MFRC; we have printed a limited supply.)

At April's end, our staff, officers and Trustees were developing new, more flexibly effective deployment of MFRC resources to deal with housing frictions in specific places. Responding first to calls from two areas, we set up teams of MFRC members to work with residents, intensively, on their situation. The early response was hopeful. As someone said, "Maybe we have to take the world as we find it--but we don't have to leave it that way."

AN INTERGROUP HOW-TO-DO-IT; THEY DID IT, WE HELPED This is the step-by-step log of a suburban church group who sought that novelty, interracial acquaintance, and found it with our aid. It began Feb. 3 when MFRC's director spoke at the Sunday service, and some members talked to him afterward over coffee. One of these later phoned Mr. Sparrow, asking: "How can we get to know Negro people, if we don't meet them in church, in informal gatherings and face-to-face discussion?" Into the assistant director's mind jumped the name of an MFRC member, a Negro living in that same suburb, who had told us: "I moved here four years ago; in the neighborhood my acquaintances are still limited to the merchants." But Mr. J soon found himself talking at the church about "A Negro in Suburbia," then making new friends who were asking, "How can we continue contact? How can we lower the barriers?"

The answer came soon in a home, where several church members had an evening of talk with Mr. & Mrs. J., MFRC's Mr. Sparrow and Mr. Wesley, and a young woman from Parktown Homes. The latter, as people opened up, began to talk of her life as a Negro in the deep South, and why she joined the protest movement. Spontaneously someone asked: "Would you please share, with our entire church group, your experiences?" She did, one April Sunday. It was very moving. It moved 15 church members downtown, four days later, to get acquainted with 20 tenants of Parktown, the interracial housing cooperative. The exploration continues...

P.S. In another neighborhood, a morning coffee club of housewives started on a similar odyssey. After inviting MFRC's director to sip and chat, they called in Better Housing League's executive--and then a prettier 'pro' from the Urban League. At their request she gave them leads to women of her race who she felt would be congenial, and interested in meeting with them. What happens next depends upon the individuals and how they click...But in both instances, the people are picking new friends without regard to labels. The individuals are supported in this 'daring' venture by doing it together, in a group. It works.

FEDERAL EQUAL-OPPORTUNITY EFFORTS HERE On the 30th Postmaster Joseph J. Scanlon called the first meeting of his new Advisory Committee on Equal Opportunity. Composed of a cross-section of employees, it will help to implement the Executive Order of 1961 to end bias in federal employment. At the regional post-office level, Francis J. Lang is similarly responsible. He has indicated his desire to work with local groups. Also scheduled was a meeting on May 2 of local intergroup agencies with executives of the Army's Cincinnati Procurement District, and David Traub of Philadelphia who oversees "equal opportunity" compliance by contractors who supply the Army in 10 states...All this indicates that federal departments are taking equal job opportunity seriously.

EVEN THE COMPLAINTS WERE HEALTHY AT MFRC'S ANNUAL MEETING A voting majority of Council (Bachrach, Collins, Gilligan, Gradison, Spraul) were most welcome at our 19th Annual Dinner on the 18th--but the people did the important talking. Time ran out during their table discussions at Central High School, adjournment was called by the clock. Then we caught it! Reactions were pointed:-

"Not enough time for discussion".."Not enough time to even start breaking barriers"."Fine speeches..but give us more time, next time"."Suggest MFRC conduct an all-day workshop next fall to discuss further ways to "Break Down the Walls"."I propose a program of interracial home visits, such as started by Friendship House, Chicago"."Let's have a little less talk, more prayer, a few good definite plans, and some action"."Such programs bring together a desirably heterogeneous group of 'old pros' and others of us more limited in knowledge; a unique opportunity for citizens to become more informed, for coordination of related efforts"..."..Inspiring talks by Dan Kane & Mike Israel--can we continue Chicago?"

The last referred to the deeply moving reports by two of seven local men who attended the Conference on Religion and Race at Chicago in January. Regrets of a third delegate--Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth, detained in Birmingham--were brought by his wife. "If in the struggle for justice we feel hate instead of love," she said quietly, "we shall have lost half the victory."

Capt. Elmer Reis's talk on ways of reducing police-citizen misunderstanding got an attentive hearing, but the audience of 190 seemed most intent upon applying the "spirit of Chicago" to many local problems. The table discussion range of topics ran like this: housing in general, touched by 6 groups; neighborhood intergroup work, 5; home financing, 3; urban renewal, 2; mass media's role, 2; employment, 5; schools--integration, and intergroup education, 2; Religion & Race, application here, 4; churches' responsibility to improve racial and interfaith relations, 3; the annual meeting itself, 2; police, 1.

Notes of the discussion, and Trustees' impressions from leading the table groups, will be analyzed to profit from the suggestions--and complaints, too.

OF THIS & THAT (1) MFRC's officers and staff held their third monthly evening meeting of strenuous discussion; running as usual to midnight!

(2) In the Post & Times-Star of April 20, an editorial page article by George Bidinger (two-time Trustee) sketched the origin and approach of MFRC. Title: "Friendly Persuasion: A Group at Work for Civic Harmony."

(3) The NAACP Recognition Luncheon on the 7th, honoring William Bowen, Lloyd Trotter and Martha Holt, was attended by MFRC Board-staff members.

(4) At two meetings in April, Mr. Sparrow continued to work with social services, schools and other agencies pooling resources in the West End.

(5) The possibility of another type of interfaith, interracial workshop experiment in Cincinnati was discussed here on April 1, involving several of our members and alumni. A second session is scheduled in June.

DAYTON CHR PICKS EXEC Last September, Dayton's new Commission on Human Relations called in MFRC's director for two hours talk on intergroup work. It then took until April, in a tight market for intergroup workers, to find an executive director: Edward A. King, Neighborhoods Division head in the Pittsburgh Commission's staff. After five years with that excellent agency, Mr. King brings tested talent to a city which seems desirous of using its new instrument effectively. Some 19 years ago, Dayton set up a short-lived 'MFRC'. The 1963 infant looks sturdier. We wish it many birthdays.

AT THE PUBLIC LIBRARY Attention is called to some recent magazine articles. "Prejudice Hurts Everyone" in February Parents' Magazine sensitively appeals to parents to realize how much they influence a child's attitude to prejudice, by words and actions...Educators face problems of "The Disadvantaged" in a special section of April NEA Journal which cites programs for improving the educational level of the culturally deprived and underprivileged of all ages...

In Saturday Review, April 13, Chester Bowles' "A Century: The New Commitment" examines progress toward racial equality since the Emancipation Proclamation... "The North and West Have Problems, Too" (Saturday Review, April 20) analyzes how housing patterns affect school segregation, as seen by Wisconsin U. Law Professor G. W. Foster, Jr.

GEORGIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS - 41 EXCHANGE PLACE, ATLANTA, GEORGIA

GEORGIA POLITICS

May, 1963

VISIT to the GOVERNOR

Your officers spent a most informative 45 minutes with Governor Carl Sanders last week. We discussed with him matters of our common concern. It was the unanimous decision of those present that it is possible and probable that Georgia can weather the storm of change and build a more democratic state in which man can live with pride.

Voter's Registration

Is your town working on Voter's Registration? Have you offered your services? Only 26.8% of Negroes of voting age are registered in Georgia. Far too small a percent of white liberals are registered. Check your fellow members and your neighbors. Offer to take a car load to the Registrar's Office. Recently Negroes in Baker County influenced an election. This influence goes far beyond whether a certain man wins or loses. About 300 Negroes are now registered in Baker County where two years ago not one was registered. If this can be done in Baker County, what can you do in your County? The political future of Georgia depends on YOU.

PRISON REFORM

One of the first steps necessary in accomplishing Georgia's goals of Justice is the recognition of the necessity for prison reform. The State Administration is to be complimented on the speed and straight forward manner in which the facts have been accepted and changes planned.

Political A ppointments

Mr. A. T. Walden and Senator Leroy Johnson have recently been appointed to the State Democratic Executive Committee.

Mrs. P. Q. Yancey, Mr. Warren Cochran, Chief W. H. Aiken, Dr. C. A. Bacote were appointed as members of the Fifth District Congressional Democratic Committee.

We are seeing the beginning of the end of taxation without representation in Georgia.

COUNCIL GROWTH

The Council membership continues to climb. We have passed the 900 mark. This is fine when we think two years ago we had around 300 members. But when you compare 900 with the population of Georgia, it makes us see that we must get busy.

You find one new member and return the enclosed blank with the money. We would than have 1800 people in Georgia learning more, taking more action - toward the day when we have a real democratic society in our state.

- NEWS FROM THE COUNCILS -

Saint Simon Island, Georgia

Some people become more and more useful as the years pass. This is true of Mr. and Mrs. Emmett Johnson. They are leaving to spend the summer in Wisconsin with their daughter and from there they plan to work in Southern Rhodesia in the educational field. Georgia is still staggering from the blow of the loss of these wonderful workers in our Council. However, Mrs. Johnson writes:

> "We plan to keep up our membership dues and would like to feel that you will let us be your representative in Africa."

Macon, Georgia

Congratulations on the Second Annual Fund Raising Dinner for the Georgia Council. Just the time gray hairs were multiplying over figuring how to pay the monthly bills, the check came in! Thanks for the vote of confidence, as well as the generous check.

Atlanta, Georgia

Addition to staff of Southern Regional Council. You will be happy to know that Mr. Vernon Jordan, Field Secretary for the NAACP, has joined the staff of Southern Regional Council. We welcome Mr. Jordan into the SRC family! We look forward to working with Mr. Leon Cox who will be succeeding Mr. Jordan with the NAACP.

Schools

We have reason to believe that Junior Colleges and Area Vocational Trade Schools will offer little resistance to desegregation.
What can you do about the one nearest you?

SUJAID SHOID

SUMMER ACTIVITIES

PUBLICATIONS: Rome is preparing cool facts for distribution in their town. They believe that much misunderstanding can be explained and that many people can receive a needed shake when they know the truth. Do you know your town and county?

RECREATION: As you take recreation during the summer, make special efforts to ascertain if public parks are open to all. Share with us your experiences. Georgia has 75 state parks and innumerable local parks. Help us keep a box score on their use.

ARTS: The Quaker House in Atlanta has delightful summer programs for children and youth in the arts --- painting, acting, music. New friends are discovered as well as new experiences in the arts.

EDUCATION: Are there High School students who need a bit of coaching before entering college this fall? Are there High School Juniors who might have extra work and counseling concerning entrance to colleges or trade schools next year? Offer your services to your Principal.

New Court Rulings

Sit In - Playgrounds - Student Expulsion

1. What do they mean to your community?
2. Are there segregation ordinances in your city?
3. Are you prepared to cope with Demonstrations?
4. Are you discussing these things?

If the State Office can lend assistance, please call us. We will try to come or send an expert.

DECLENSION OF A SHIBBOLETH

Interesting data from an address by the Honorable Berl I. Bernhard, Staff Director of the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, (to Wakefield High School in Arlington, Virginia) titled "Slogans, Semantics, and Shibboleths":

"You've heard that the District's crime rate is the highest in the Nation and that this rate continues to soar. Here we have two untrue assumptions that have been taken as gospel by people who don't bother to question the source of their information. Instead of being first, Washington actually ranks thirteenth among America's 25 largest cities in the number of crimes per population thousand, according to FBI Uniform Crime Reporting statistics. Further, compared to a national crime increase of 7 percent for the calendar year 1962 over the year 1961, the crime rate in Washington increased only 4.9 percent.

GEORGIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS.

GAINESVILLE, GA.

SYLVAN MEYER

The Crusade Consumes Their Lives

Near Brunswick at a church conference grounds beneath the moss-hung water oaks and the tall pines of the marsh country, a group of whites and Negroes stood in a circle. They held hands.

Many of the Negroes were young college students. They sang "We Shall Overcome" and their zeal for freedom from the burdens of race rang with a near religious fervor. No early patriot by Concord's rude bridge burned with greater intensity of purpose.

The people at the small meeting were all workers in the field that is called "human relations." Their organizations, which are myriad these days, labor for such causes as equal employment opportunity, Negro voter registration, better schools. One of the Negroes is a Mennonite, supported by the Mennonite church.

With a number of volunteer aides, white and Negro, he visits the crucibles in which the new attitudes of the South are smelted: Montgomery, Birmingham, Oxford, Albany. He preaches "reconciliation" and talks to whites and blacks alike of tolerance and love. Sometimes he can help with communications between antagonists in a crisis; sometimes this little band meets abuse itself. "We are a witness to the real unity of the family of Christ," he said. This man seems to have no race of his own, People say. He has only his mission.

Reading of marchers accosted by rowdies, of police breaking up the demonstrators with fire hose and dogs to protect them from mobs, one thinks of the singers and the Mennonite and all the others who have taken up a cause.

Oddly enough, they are mostly gentle people. Yet, they have a determination and a moral courage that is most remarkable. They have identified with something they consider more important than themselves, a crusade, if you will, more meaningful to them than anything else in their lives.

Whether their banner, to each personally, is God, America's image, the philosophy of liberty, freedom or whatever isn't as important as the drive and the rallying energy it bestows on them.

Being true to this cause consumes their lives. No police dog, firehose or ignoramus' bludgeon will stop them. Indeed, such treatment steels their hearts and brings them fresh troops by the hundreds.

This is one of the reasons they are winning. They find a fulfillment in their crusade while the truth is the other side is basically sick at heart of the whole business.

The subject of the Conference was "Can Man Get Along With Man." The meetings proved that eighty people, ages from 17 to 70, with economic backgrounds just as varied, could not only get along together but have a tremendous never-to-be-forgotten experience.

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDING BISHOP OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Recent events in a number of American communities---Birmingham, Chicago, Nashville, New York, and Raleigh, to mention only the most prominent--underscore the fact that countless citizens have lost patience with the slow pace of response to their legitimate cry for human rights. Pleas of moderation or caution about timing on the part of white leaders are seen increasingly as an unwillingness to face the truth about the appalling injustice which more than a tenth of our citizens suffer daily. While we are thankful for the progress that has been made, this is not enough.

Our Church's position on racial inclusiveness within its own body and its responsibility for racial justice in society has been made clear on many occasions by the General Convention. But there is urgent need to demonstrate by specific actions what God has laid on us. Such actions must move beyond expressions of corporate penitence for our failures to an unmistakable identification of the Church, at all levels of its life, with those who are victims of oppression.

I think of the words we sing as we hail the ascended Christ, "Lord and the ruler of all men", and of our prayers at Whitsuntide as we ask God to work His will in us through his Holy Spirit. And then in contrast to our praises and our prayers our failure to put ourselves at the disposal of the Holy Spirit becomes painfully clear. Only as we take every step possible to join with each other across lines of racial separation in a common struggle for justice will our unity in the Spirit become a present reality.

It is not enough for the Church to exhort men to be good. Men, women and children are today risking their livelihood and their lives in protesting for their rights. We must support and strengthen their protest in every way possible, rather than give support to the forces of resistance by our silence. It should be a cause of rejoicing to the Christian community that Negro Americans and oppressed peoples everywhere are displaying a heightened sense of human dignity in their refusal to accept second class citizenship any longer.

The right to vote, to eat a hamburger where you want, to have a decent job, to live in a house fit for habitation: these are not rights to be litigated or negotiated. It is our shame that demonstrations must be carried out to win them. These constitutional rights belong to the Negro as to the white, because we are all men and we are all citizens. The white man needs to recognize this if he is to preserve his own humanity. It is a mark of the inversion of values in our society that those who today struggle to make the American experiment a reality through their protest are accused of disturbing the peace--and that more often than not the Church remains silent on this, our greatest domestic moral crisis.

I commend these specific measures to your attention: 1) I would ask you to involve yourselves. The crisis in communities North and South in such matters as housing, employment, public accomodations, and schools is steadily mounting. It is the duty of every Christian citizen to know fully what is happening in his own community, and actively to support efforts to meet the problems he encounters.

2) I would also ask you to give money as an expression of our unity and as a sign of our support for the end of racial injustice in this land. The struggle of Negro Americans for their rights is costly, both in terms of personal sacrifice and of money, and they need help.

3) I would ask you to take action. Discrimination within the Body of the Church itself is an intolerable scandal. Every congregation has a continuing need to examine its own life and to renew those efforts necessary to insure its inclusiveness fully. Diocesan and church-related agencies, schools and other institutions also have a considerable distance to go in bringing their practices up to the standard of the clear position of the Church on race. I call attention to the firm action of the recent Convention of the Diocese of Washington which directed all diocesan-related institutions to eliminate any discriminatory practices within six months. It further requested the Bishop and Executive Council to take steps necessary to disassociate such diocesan and parish-related institutions from moral or financial support if these practices are not eliminated in the specified time. I believe we must make known where we stand unmistakably.

So I write with a deep sense of the urgency of the racial crisis in our country and the necessity for the Church to act. Present events reveal the possible imminence of catastrophe. The entire Christian community must pray and act.

LITTLE ROCK TAKES A GIANT STEP FORWARD

Last September a field secretary of the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC - pronounced snick) appeared on the campus of Philander Smith College to help students plan their protests against discrimination. Sequence of events followed the pattern established in other upper-South communities: students ask businesses to desegregate, business men say "I will when the others do" but do not move to organize with others, students demonstrate, business organizes, committees negotiate plans and time tables, period of controlled desegregation, open facilities. (Some of these steps are more necessary than others!)

Although the white citizen's council held terror for individual business men, it proved completely ineffectual. A picket at Blass carrying a racist and anti-Semitic sign each noon hour for several weeks had no effect on business. Neither did an organized effort to close accounts. The picket subsequently moved to the Marion Hotel, headquarters for Arkansas' new and integrated baseball team, and finally to the ball field where he was all but stampeded by the crowd hurrying to find seats in the desegregated stadium on opening night. Few read the picket's sign: "Mr. Faubus plays ball with Negroes." The Travelers won!

Pub. Accomm. for BP.

For the record, the following facilities in Little Rock have opened since the first of 1963: Eating facilities at Blass, McClellan, Walgreen's and Woolworth; Rest rooms and water fountains in all downtown department stores; hospitality at the four hotels in the Southwest chain, Marion, Grady-Manning, Lafayette, and Albert Pike. (Dining facilities are open only to Negroes staying in the hotels) Still to be negotiated are restaurants and theaters.

ACHR served in both mediating and negotiating capacities and took the occasion to report discrimination of housing and eating facilities for Army, Navy and Marine inductees to the Defense Department. Complete desegregation was reported back within a week.

PINE BLUFF ASKS FOR GIANT STEP

With the help of two SNCC field workers students at A.M. & N. College in Pine Bluff organized to protest segregation in Pine Bluff. Their original number, about 30, was reduced to about 15, when President Davis warned he would expel any participants in demonstrations. Protests began the first of February. Attendance at Sunday evening rallies peaked at 900. A parade of adults and students included almost 500. 46 demonstrators (some of them high schoolers) were in jail at one time. The present peace would indicate that Pine Bluff prefers the pattern of Little Rock to that of Birmingham.

ACHR served as consultant and stimulator of communication.

TOYM

Still a thrill to recall is the annual Ten Outstanding Young Men Congress held in Little Rock under the sponsorship of the National Junior Chamber of Commerce. To a standing ovation the ten without exception spoke out on freedom and civil rights. Bob Richards, Olympic pole vaulter and master of ceremonies, summarized by crying out to the audience: "Do we need to emphasize that we stand for freedom? In Little Rock, Arkansas, tonight we have honored a man who stands for civil rights -- another who said that we can't be free until James Meredith is free. If you're not inspired tonight, friends, you can't be touched."

JACQUELYN EVANS HEARD ROUND THE WORLD

Former Congressman Brooks Hays told a Hendrix College audience that while making a speech during a recent tour of Africa he was handed a cablegram from the State Department that Jacqui Evans (a student member of ACHR) had been elected to the National Honor Society of Hall High School in Little Rock. We hope this international approbation encourages Little Rock school officials to eliminate the remaining barriers to the schools as well as inside the schools. It was just last year that Miss Evans was denied membership in Beta Club, a less exacting honor group, was not allowed in the band, and was not allowed to participate in the Science Club Field trip.

Negro Parents Await Next Step

The 8th Circuit Court of Appeals said thusly in its March 2, 1961 Little Rock School decision:
"This injunction further requires that they (the School Board) 'take affirmative steps, on their own initiative' to facilitate and accomplish operation of the school district on a non-discriminatory basis."

It stated further, "We also appropriately observe that integration was to be effectively completed not later than 1963."

Now is the time for the School Board to make a public announcement ('affirmative step') that Negro elementary students are eligible to attend the school nearest their homes.

Summer Workshop for State Staffs

SRC is cooperating in a summer meeting for staffs of the Southern States' Human Relations Councils at the Blue Ridge Conference Grounds, Asheville, N.C., July 19-23. The directors of ACHR plan to participate. Out of it may come closer correlation and helpful cooperation among the states.

Catholics Study Race Relations

St. John's Catholic Seminary in Little Rock is taking a leadership role in education in human relations. In February it conducted an Institute on Race Relations for some two hundred laymen with four professors giving the lectures.

College Students Hold Race Conference

An interdenominational interracial conference for students was held at Aldersgate Camp, April 20-21. Some sixty-five students from nine Arkansas colleges joined in the program planned jointly by the Student Christian Associations, the Baptist Student Union, the Methodist Student Movement, and the Westminster Fellowship. Mrs. Edna Anderson, with the special student project in human relations of the national YWCA, took the initiative. Two ACHR directors, one Board member; two Advisory Council members and one member were used as resource leaders.

A Communist and States' Rights

"Karoly Csatorday, Communist Hungary's Ambassador to the United Nations, stopped in Dallas .... and told newsmen that Mississippi's racial problems should be left up to the state's officials 'just as the problems in my country are internal affairs.'"
-- ARKANSAS GAZETTE, April 27, 1963

Little Rock Institutes Interfaith Conference on Race and Religion

Continuing the Interfaith Conference on February 5 at Lasker Auditorium which was initiated by ACHR and co-sponsored by the Arkansas Council of Churches, the steering committee effectively instituted the Greater Little Rock Conference on Human Relations at a meeting, April 22, at Holy Souls Catholic School. One hundred and eight representatives from twenty-three Protestant affiliated groups, two Jewish congregations, one Greek Orthodox congregation and many Catholic institutions had the approving presence of six bishops and other church leaders for this interfaith movement to confront problems of race together. The steering committee was authorized to go forward with plans for the next session of the Conference.

Fayetteville Tackles Some Problems

Progress in desegregation of facilities continues well ahead of the rest of Arkansas but remains uneven in the home of the University. Theaters are desegregating. Some hotels and motels are taking Negro guests. University housing is not yet available on a desegregated basis, if at all. A one-room school for Negroes is still in existence.

Jim Loudermilk, Assistant Director of the University Wesley Foundation weathered the storm which resulted from his participation in a quiet protest against University discrimination in housing. He will be back next year as Director despite the efforts against him. Major objections to Loudermilk's activities came from the Board of Central Methodist Church of which Frank Broyles, the football coach, is chairman. (The day may come soon when the athletic department will have to work toward the desegregation of University and community facilities in order to attract Negro athletes.)

Jonesboro

Nothing is desegregated in Jonesboro but the college where a handful of Negro students attend classes but live off campus. A few of them were integrated into the Wesley Foundation program, directed by Don Franks. Unsuccessful in an attempt to modify a college policy against planned social activities which include Negroes, the Wesley students voted against having any planned social activities. Don Franks' future at the college is still uncertain.

Nat Griswold was speaker for the annual meeting of Pi Gamma Mu honorary social science fraternity at Arkansas State College. J. E. Griner, a professor of social science, said he heard nothing but complimentary remarks about the speech on "Trends in Race Relations."

TENNIS, ANYONE ???

Spring weather is bringing to light the results of the court order desegregating recreation facilities in Little Rock. As a recent visitor to the ACHR office said after seeing some of the medical students playing at the Walker Tennis Center, "Suddenly 'mixed doubles' has ~~a~~ new meaning."

Paul Anthony Visits Little Rock

"Many thanks for making my visit to Little Rock so worthwhile...I would like to return soon." So wrote the Field Director of SRC in regard to his visit April 10-12. His schedule here included a meeting with the Finance Committee; an evening with Fred Darragh, Elaine McNeil, Roy Reed, Bev and Del Fisher, Jim and Pat Youngdahl at the Arnolds'; a luncheon at the Albert Pike with twenty-seven members of the Advisory Council with George Gunn presiding; the monthly meeting of the Board of Directors; a meeting of Negro leaders at the Suttons'; conference with Pat House and Irene Samuel of the Women's Emergency Committee; lunch with Messrs. Hugh Patterson, Grainger Williams, Frank Duff; and a visit with Ted Lamb.

The Director Visits Fayetteville

Margaret Griswold went to Fayetteville April 5-7 to plan for study at the University of Arkansas during the first summer session. Nat Griswold went along and thanks to alert members had profitable conferences and sessions: with the Religious Workers at their "sack lunch" - thanks to George Gunn; with the Fayetteville Council on Community Relations and Students for Freedom at dinner with the Petersens'; with leaders of the United Church Women; with Elaine McNeil at lunch; with students at the Wesley Foundation - thanks to Jim Loudermilk and A. W. Martin.

JUNE LUNCHEON CANCELLED

Because of extra activities at this particular time of the year, and because more than 50 members of the Council are working on the finance campaign, and because we were not able to work out a satisfactory arrangement with a speaker from Grady Hospital, no June membership luncheon will be held.

As has been reported, in March we invited Dr. Jarman, Medical Advisor at Grady Hospital since last August, to speak to us in May. He agreed tentatively but when we called him for confirmation in April, he said that the pressure of business was too great. We then wrote asking him to speak on June 1, on any phase of Grady's program but pointed that the Council's special interest is that race not be a factor in the availability of all the hospital's facilities to all persons. On May 13, Dr. Jarman wrote "My position at Grady is one of advisor to the Hospital Authority on professional matters and as such, I do not consider it my prerogative to speak on subjects related to Grady that you appear to be interested in." Mr. Duvall, chairman of the Hospital Authority, was willing to meet with us but said he could give a more complete report in the fall.

AMBULANCE SERVICE - WHITE OR COLORED

Atlantans are shocked when reminded periodically that before answering an emergency call, Grady Hospital asks if the victim is white or colored. The explanation has always been that Grady calls on local funeral homes for supplementary emergency ambulance service and the funeral homes are "segregated." After such a report some weeks a go, a GACHR representative made a telephone survey of all the funeral homes listed in the classified section of the telephone directory. There are 41 in the metropolitan area, 17 Negroes and 24 whites. Although the normal business is completely segregated, all but 1 of the 41 agreed that they would provide emergency ambulance service to anybody without regard to race or color - and that 1 did not say that he would not. This information has been forwarded t o the Hospital Authority.

RESTAURANTS

Interviews with Operators: During the winter, GACHR representatives called on most of the eating places which are desegregated and asked for reports on their experiences. Without exception the reports were of good business and no unpleasantness with staff or customers. Armed with this, GACHR called quietly on various members of the Atlanta Restaurant Association (who made it clear they could not speak for the Association) urging that Atlanta take this step voluntarily and take it now before tension and bitterness mount. There was agreement on one thing - that "it is bound to come." The question seems to be when and how. The operators say they do not want "pressure" and yet they do not seem to have plans for moving on their own. GACHR has worked closely with other groups and individuals. During the last month, a number of GACHR members, Negro and white adults, have quietly gone to restaurants and asked for service. In most instances they have been refused, and quietly left, but in some instances they have been served - also quietly!

The interracial nature of the group has demonstrated that there are white people who are concerned and when service is refused, Negroes and white share the refusal alike. This seems to be one way in which individuals acting on their own and with their friends can demonstrate their hope to have Atlanta restaurants desegregated.

Greetings to an African Visitor: "We're happy to have you in Atlanta and glad that you are able to stay in a comfortable hotel. We must advise you, however, to stick to the hotel when you eat in this vicinity and not try any of the numerous other eating places closeby. There is a restaurant, about a mile downtown, and places in downtown stores where you may eat, but none of the places closeby.. We hope you enjoy your stay in Atlanta."

SCHOOLS

What Would You do?: A year ago several Atlanta senior Negro Transfer students were told by teachers and principals that they would not be able to go with their class on a trip to Callaway Gardens, because Callaway Gardens does not admit Negroes. GACHR pointed out to the Board of Education that the fact that all other class functions were open to those students was known and appreciated but that it did not seem proper for a school sponsored function to be planned or permitted at any place which would automatically exclude any member of the class.

This month a senior Negro Transfer student was told that she would not be able to go with her class on a trip to Callaway Gardens. The principal, when questioned, said that frankly they had not thought about it but he did not think this student would want to have the class miss the trip just because she could not go. GACHR again wrote to each member of the Board of Education, questioning the policy of permitting school sponsored function to be held at a place which would exclude Negro members of the class. (Correspondence with Callaway Gardens last year confirmed the policy of excluding Negroes).

When a GACHR representative telephoned the President of the Board of Education, Mr. Elmo Holt, he said he had not replied because he "couldn't think of anything to say".. As of this writing, the student still would like to go with her class on the trip.

Separate and Equal: From the Agenda for the April 8 meeting of the Atlanta Board of Education this information: While the average teacher load for Atlanta high schools dropped from 24 to 23, 8 of the 25 high schools still have 24 or over. It figures out that of 10,521 Negro high school students, 6924 or 65% are in schools with above average teacher load; out of 19,617 white students, 4,164 or 26% are in schools with above average teacher load.

DeKalb Schools: The Commission on Christian Social Concerns of Glenn Memorial Church has endorsed the Council's request that the DeKalb Board of Education voluntarily desegregate DeKalb schools.

Silence: From Westminster Schools about admission policies for summer school, in spite of a letter and telephone call to the principal. Lovett trustees are still wrestling with the matter whether they will accept for consideration any application from a Negro child.. still "no policy."

STEPS IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION

Congratulations to the Atlanta Constitution and The Atlanta Journal for removing any designation of race from listings of funeral notices, movies and classified "help wanted" ads! (We hope that Everybody will read All the ads and apply for jobs accordingly).

Welcome: to Charlotte Arnise Small, first Negro baby born at St. Joseph's Inf..

Reminder: that all courses at Smith-Hughes Vocational School and all training programs at Grady Hospital, including x-ray and medical technology, are desegregated. And for the summer - pops concerts, Theater Under the Stars at Chastain Park, Academy Theater and practically all local art, drama, and offerings are for everybody... also all city of Atlanta facilities. (Facilities of other parts of metropolitan area still segregated as far as we know. We hope we're wrong, would like to be corrected).

MISCELLANEOUS

Atlanta, Miami and Houston: In Atlanta, 191 Negro students applied for transfer to 14 (4 more than this year) white high schools for 1963-64... When Dade County (Miami) schools open in 1963-64, 32 schools, including senior, junior high and elementary, will be integrated, "with more than 2500 Negroes in attendance." (News item)... All hotels in Houston are desegregated, according to a recent traveler there.

Housing Authority: Although, the President's Executive Order on Equal Opportunity in Housing is not binding on projects already in operation, it "directs departments and agencies to use their good offices... to promote abandonment of practices of discrimination in housing heretofore provided with federal assistance.

A letter from GACHR to Mr. John O. Chiles, chairman of the Atlanta Housing Authority asking what affect the Order would have on the practices and/or policies of the Atlanta Housing Authority brought the reply that "to date (April 4) there has been no change in Board policy."

Well Said: "My claim to equality has its logical basis in the recognition of my fellow men's identical claim. Do I not forfeit my own rights by denying to my fellow man the rights I claim for myself." Abram Heschell in "Race: Challenge to Religion."

By Mayor Allen, after disagreement with 1 Atlanta hotel operator: "I expect to be going into Atlanta's hotels with respect and dignity for the balance of my life."..... Would that all citizens of Atlanta could voice the same expectation.

In the Works: Revised list of integrated facilities and a chronoligical summary of desegregation in Atlanta since 1954 we hope to send with the next Newsletter. If you could or would help with tracking down details, call the office.

COMMITTEE ON APPEAL FOR HUMAN RIGHTS
Post Office Box 202
Atlanta University Center
Atlanta 14, Georgia

AN APPEAL TO THE CITIZENS OF ATLANTA

Atlanta has set the example of good will in many areas of our city. Let's keep Atlanta a place where people want to live and where people outside Atlanta want to visit.

Three years ago, 500 students were arrested in Atlanta when they tried to buy meals at eating places which are licensed as PUBLIC PLACES of Business. They were refused service because they were Negroes and when they refused to leave the premises, were arrested for trespassing, under a Georgia state law passed that same year.

Since that time, many merchants have opened their service facilities of their stores, including eating places, to all customers. One new restaurant and two hotels have opened their doors to all regardless of race or color.

We have waited patiently now for three years for some indication from the restaurant operators that they have plans for changing their policy of not serving Negroes. The general attitude has been that they have no objections to Negro customers, but that their white customers would object. We cannot believe that citizens of cosmopolitan center like Atlanta, who travel to all parts of the world and welcome visitors from all parts of the world, want this situation to continue or would object to service to Negroes on the same basis as service to whites.

We appeal to the fair-minded people of Atlanta to express to individual restaurant operators to the Restaurant Association, the Chamber of Commerce and to city officials their conviction that public places of business should not grant service to some and deny it to others on the basis of skin color, and that they themselves, as individual customers, would regard desegregation of restaurants as a happy combination of good business and true Americanism.

We make a special appeal to the city officials who grant the licenses for these places to do business to lend their efforts to make Atlanta a truly progressive city.

If you would like to help your city, won't you mail the statement below to Ralph Moore; the Committee on Appeal for Human Rights: P.O. Box 202, Atlanta University Center, Atlanta 14, Georgia.

I earnestly recommend that all the restaurants in Atlanta admit people to their places of business without regard to color.

Signed: _____

NEW COMMISSIONER TAKES OATH

With an inch of snow on the ground, and Reds parading in Red Square, Pittsburgh area high school seniors observing Law Day on May 1 were privileged to witness Mayor Joseph M. Barr administer the oath of office to new CHR Commissioner Thomas M. Kerr, Jr.

Fair Housing Act Tested

The February 1963 issue of the "Human Relations Review" carried a story on the refusal of a realtor, who is the owner and developer of a parcel of lots for residential building, to sell a lot to a Negro doctor who wished to build a home there. Under provisions of Pittsburgh's Fair Housing Ordinance Number 523 of 1958, after all attempts at peaceful conciliation had failed, the Commission on Human Relations ordered a public hearing to be held in December, 1962, as a result of which the Stanton Land Company and its president, realtor Francis X. Totten, were ordered on February 6 to sell a residential lot in their Stanton Heights Manor Plan to Dr. Oswald Nickens.

The Stanton Land Company and Francis X. Totten, refusing to obey the Commission's order to sell the lot to Dr. Nickens, then requested Common Pleas Court to issue an injunction to prevent the City of Pittsburgh from enforcing its Fair Housing Act. This ordinance stipulates that any person who owns or controls five or more properties shall not discriminate in the sale or rental of these properties because of race, color, religion, or national origin.

The City of Pittsburgh filed a counterclaim, charging that the Stanton Land Company and Francis X. Totten were in violation of the City's Fair Housing Act.

Thus it is that the constitutionality of Pittsburgh's Fair Housing Act will be tested in a precedent-setting case. Lasting nine days, the trial began on July 16 and was heard by Common Pleas Judge Frederic G. Weir. Attorney Gilbert J. Helwig, counsel for the respondent, asked for, and was refused, a

Unions Accept Negroes

At the request of Mayor Joseph M. Barr, a meeting was held on June 17 to implement a program of wider employment of non-white craftsmen in the construction industry in the City of Pittsburgh. Representatives were present from the Mayor's Commission on Human Relations, the Human Relations Committee of the Building Trades Council, and the Master Builders Association. Chairing the meeting was Eric Springer, chairman of the Labor Committee of the Mayor's Commission on Human Relations, which was instructed by the Mayor to take immediate steps to integrate the construction industry within the City.

A resolution, to the effect that the Building Trades Council of Pittsburgh agreed to cooperate to eliminate discrimination in employment in the building and construction industry, was presented by Anthony Furlan, President of the Building Trades Council, which unanimously adopted the resolution on June 12.

A policy statement issued by the Master Builders Association of Western Pennsylvania was presented by their Executive Secretary, William C. Bowden. It indicated the desire of the construction industry to eliminate any presently existing discrimination, and complete willingness to cooperate with the Mayor's Commission on Human Relations.

In order to implement immediately these policies, a subcommittee was appointed to meet June 18 to further the integration of the construction industry by (1) opening up the apprenticeship program of the unions to all qualified persons, regardless of race, creed or color, and (2) to eliminate barriers,

CHR ELECTS

At its official meeting in May, the Commission on Human Relations elected new officers. Mr. T. Z. Korsak, an attorney with the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, was elected Chairman. Elected to serve with him as Vice-Chairmen were the Reverend Charles P. Robshaw and Eric W. Springer. Mrs. Louis J. Reizenstein was elected to the office of Treasurer, and Dominic F. Dornetto to the office of Secretary.

Mr. Korsak, a native of Poland, replaces Mrs. Jonas E. Salk, who served as Chairman of the Commission for the past four years and has left Pittsburgh for California.

Mr. Korsak became a United States citizen in 1946. He received his B. A. degree at Carleton College in Minnesota, M. A. degree at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy in Massachusetts, and a law degree from the University of Pittsburgh. where any exist, for all competent and qualified craftsmen.

Members of the subcommittee are: Representing the Mayor's Commission on Human Relations, Eric Springer and Joseph Sabel; representing the Master Builders Association, Lee Weed and William C. Bowden; representing the Building Trades Council, Anthony Furlan and Angelo Carboni. Serving as consultants to the subcommittee are Louis Mason, Jr., Executive Director of CHR, and Mrs. Marion Finkelhor, City Law Department.

By July 8, when the Interim Report was released to the public, the subcommittee had scheduled and held six meetings to confer with representatives of all major unions within the Building Trades Council, with the exception of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 5. The other unions agreed to cooperate with the subcommittee, either by opening up union membership to non-white workers, or by increasing non-white membership, in those unions which already have integrated membership. The Electrical Workers, Local 5, concluded a similar agreement with the City on July 23.

Anti-Discrimination Legislation. Because the public policy of the City of Pittsburgh has been embodied through legislation of the Pittsburgh Fair Employment Ordinance, No. 237 of 1955, to eliminate discrimination in employment because of race, color, religion, ancestry, national origin, or place of birth, by employers, employment agencies, labor organizations and other groups, the aim of the subcommittee in meeting with each union was to implement these prohibitions against discrimination by a positive program, and to enlarge the participation by non-whites in the building trades.

Variations in Unions. Because of differences in the membership procedures, hiring practices, apprentice-training programs, and the degree of integration of the various trade unions, emphasis was put on elimination of racial barriers within the building trades, rather than on requesting inclusion of a specific percentage or number of non-white members.

Agreements Reached. Essentially, all of the major unions of the Building Trades Council accepted the Council's resolution to cooperate with the Mayor's Commission on Human Relations, and to implement the extension of employment opportunities for the Negro worker. All of the participating unions tentatively agreed to the following proposals, subject to formal ratification by the union membership:

1. Journeymen (skilled craftsmen): Qualified craftsmen who can meet present standards of skill as established by individual unions will be accepted immediately for membership. As a protection to both the union and the applicant, where the union requires a written or oral examination, a neutral observer selected by the Mayor's Commission will be present, or such other safeguards will be taken as deemed necessary to insure fair and impartial testing.

2. Apprentice-Training Program: Because of widespread current unemployment in the building trades industry, many unions do not have an active apprentice program. However, each union agreed to accept an appropriate number of interested, qualified non-white applicants for their next apprentice program. In those unions wherein the trainee is selected entirely by the employer, the unions agreed they would set up no barriers to the selection of non-white applicants, and would welcome such apprentices.

Implementation. The subcommittee viewed the participation of the major craft unions as evidence of their desire to cooperate and to implement a positive program of training for, and participation of, Negroes in the building industry. However, because of the serious unemployment of trained and experienced craftsmen, both white and Negro, in the building trades, the ultimate solution of the unemployment problem will be realized mainly through new construction and an increase of total employment opportunities. At the same time, it is necessary to step up the training of non-white youth to be ready to take full advantage of skilled job opportunities when they come.

Future Recommendations. The work of the subcommittee to date has been with union representatives. In many trades, opportunities for employment and apprentice-training rest with the contractor, rather than the union. While the Master Builders Association has been a member of this subcommittee, other employers, such as the electrical and the roofing contractors, did not participate. Therefore, the subcommittee made the following recommendations:

1. The subcommittee should hold meetings with all affected employer groups to establish more specific procedures, particularly on apprentice-training programs.

2. The Mayor's Commission on Human Relations should specifically follow up with both unions and employers on each apprentice-training program, at the time of recruitment for same.

3. At the end of a 3-month period, each union will submit a progress report to the Mayor's Commission on Human Relations, to determine the effects of this program on journeymen applications for union membership.

Participants. Among those who participated in the agreements reached were the following: Representing the Master Builders Association, President Lee Weed and Secretary William C. Bowden. Representing the Pittsburgh Building Trades Council and their Human Relations Committee, President Anthony J. Furlan, Secretary Tim Crannan, Angelo Carboni, and Carl T. Westland. Representing the National AFL-CIO, Field Representative Victor A. Mills. Representing their Civil Rights Committee, Chairman James R. Thomas. Representing the City of Pittsburgh Law Department, Mrs. Marion Finkelhor. And finally, representing the Mayor's Commission on Human Relations, Commissioners John B. Warman, Joseph H. Sabel, Mrs. Florence S. Reizenstein, Dominic F. Dornetto, Eric Springer, and Executive Director Louis Mason, Jr.

Industrialists Tell How

Participants in the Conference of Commissions on Human Rights held in Pittsburgh in May were treated to an account of methods used by industry leaders to comply with the "letter and spirit" of anti-discrimination employment laws.

At a panel discussion, Edward M. Beck, General Personnel and Research Supervisor of the Bell Telephone Company of Pennsylvania, asserted that Bell Telephone has embarked on a program of "positive action," in recognition of the fact that it is not enough to simply have a policy of equal employment opportunity. Moving in a number of directions concurrently to provide equality of employment, the Bell Telephone Company informs public school guidance specialists that they hire without regard to race, and as part of their recruitment program, the company requests the presence of non-whites at the career conferences. The company works directly with the Negro community, through its ministers and other leaders, to interest Negro employees in their program, often utilizing present Negro employees to help recruit others. The internal phase of Bell Telephone's positive action program includes re-training of all personnel department employees to insure that they will carry out the program in an affirmative manner. When a complaint of racial discrimination is lodged against the company, they conduct an internal investigation and take appropriate action. Complete integration in all plants is fostered, including the social programs of the company.

Dr. Charles Scholl, Manager of Industrial Relations, Defense and Space Group, Burroughs Corporation, indicated that the Burroughs Corporation has undertaken a similar positive program. At its inception, the company's supervisors had it "spelled out" to them that the company could not afford a reputation of bigotry because of the adverse financial effect such a reputation would have; also, that their largest single customer, the United States Government, would not tolerate employment discrimination. Supervisors were impressed with the fact that the Burroughs Corporation needs highly qualified and skilled men regardless of race, because of the technical nature of their products.

MARC-NAHRO ANNUAL CONFERENCE

Not the least of important conferences held in May and June was the Middle Atlantic Regional Conference of the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials, held at the Pittsburgh Penn-Sheraton Hotel, June 16-19.

The keynote address, "The Task Before Us," was delivered by Adolph W. Schmidt, Vice President, T. Mellon & Sons; Executive Committee Member and former President and Chairman, Allegheny Conference on Community Development; Chairman, Pennsylvania State Planning Board; and President, Southwestern Pennsylvania Regional Planning Commission.

Asserting that the task before us is to increase our housing starts from 1,400,000 to 2,500,000 annually for the next ten years, and to double the current rate of our urban renewal activities throughout the entire United States, Mr. Schmidt indicated there are certain fundamentals without which the task cannot be accomplished:

● Political Organization. With increasing urbanization of population, the political structure under which we operate has been increasingly outdated, especially for the past fifty years. In Pennsylvania, whose legislature is dominated by the rural element, a Constitutional revision and re-apportionment are long overdue. Until this situation is fundamentally corrected, city planners cannot accomplish their tasks; without political tools, the job can't be done.

● Population Control. Citing impressive statistics, Mr. Schmidt stated that, at the present annual U. S. population growth rate of 1.7%, our 1963 population of 190,000,000 will double in 37 years. By the year 2000, there will be well over 350,000,000 people in this country. In the Southwestern Pennsylvania region, the population in 1960 was 2,600,000, and is expected to be 5,200,000 in 2000.

Noting that it has taken 200 years for us to build and produce everything we see today, Mr. Schmidt wondered if we can double all this in the next 37 years, or whether a population growth of these dimensions means we'll all have to do with less. We cannot expect Science to come to our rescue. Warning that we must "make no little plans," Mr. Schmidt suggested that (1) businessmen should study demographic facts and decide what's best in the long run, (2) businessmen should support all efforts to bring the seriousness of the population problem to all, (3) we must advocate and support intensive research by the National Institute of Mental Health and others for contraceptives acceptable to all religious groups, and (4) planning for national population goals should be advocated much as economic and business goals are planned for, since business is "interested only if its largesse is not increasingly atomized."

● International Organization. All planning can be erased in a few minutes if we fail to give this area our attention. We presently spend 83% of the federal budget for war preparation. Aside from these large amounts spent on appropriations for defense, cost of Veterans Administration and related programs, interest on federal debt as result of World War II, foreign services, and aid to underdeveloped countries, where then will money for housing starts come from?

The solution can only be a political solution, which is possible to achieve today. Though we should have no hopes of disarmament, and peace cannot be won by bribing underdeveloped countries which will become greater liabilities in the years ahead as their populations explode, we should take at least half of our tremendous budgets devoted to nuclear "over-kill" and utilize it to (1) prevent future wars among ourselves, by continuing the European Common Market, which can become a most divisive force if linked up with the U.S.S.R., and (2) make a common bloc in the 15 NATO countries against the Soviet bloc, which can only hope to win, even without firing a shot, if they can keep us separated and fighting among ourselves. This is a political, not an economic, problem. However, the Atlantic Common Market is our only hope for any chance of increasing our rate of economic growth; what could our businessmen do with a new market to reach of 450 million people?

Mr. Schmidt concluded that peace, like happiness, is only a by-product of other things being in tune and being right. It is not likely that we shall succeed in the task before us if we fail to take appropriate cognizance and action in the three major problem areas discussed.

Housing—A Case History

A Negro doctor applied for an apartment in one of Pittsburgh's highest priced apartment buildings. Shown several apartments by the real estate agent, the doctor could not make up his mind among them. Telephoning the agent several days later to inform him of his choice, the doctor was told he would have to make arrangements in person, as the apartment could not be reserved by phone. The doctor and the real estate agent agreed to meet at the apartment house to discuss lease arrangements.

The agent did not appear at the designated time, and when the doctor telephoned him next day, he was informed that the apartment had been rented. The doctor and the agent agreed to meet again to select a suitable apartment. This time the agent said that his application would be studied by a "committee" who would decide whether the doctor was qualified to be a tenant. They would notify him within two weeks of his acceptance or rejection.

At this point, the doctor filed a complaint with the Commission. The Commission decided to withhold investigation pending a decision by the "committee."

After two weeks, the complainant was accepted as a tenant, and presently resides in the apartment house. There has been no apparent difficulty, and the Commission closed the case.

This case demonstrates the necessity for vigilance in cases of suspected discrimination, while emphasizing the importance of knowing when to employ restraint.

jury trial of the case. Judge Weir upheld City Solicitor David W. Craig's arguments that a jury would sit only in an advisory capacity and its decision would not be binding upon the judge; and there is no constitutional right to a jury trial in an injunction case.

In refusing to sell a lot to a Negro, the respondents through their attorney contend:

- Their refusal to sell to Dr. Nickens was not based on racial grounds.
- The City of Pittsburgh does not have the power, under the Pennsylvania second-class city code, to confer on a commission the authority to require a seller to sell to any particular person.
- The order of the Commission on Human Relations will have no reasonable tendency to accomplish the purpose of the ordinance.
- The ordinance is inconsistent with the requirements of due process, because it has no provision for judicial review, and the Commission acts as prosecutor, judge, and jury.

Since testimony in the nine-day case will not be transcribed until October 1, Judge Weir directed the opposing attorneys to submit briefs by that date so that he may prepare his decision by October 31.

Similar demonstrations had been occurring for more than a week, but this was first time Negroes had been marching at a slow step. Fire trucks were used July 16 to break up a crowd of 500 Negro demonstrators. Trucks called out after four policemen were injured by flying bricks in first racial violence during a month of protests; crowd scattered at sight of trucks and no fire hoses were used. S.C. Governor Donald Russell ordered state troopers into Charleston July 17, and alerted certain national guard units.

During a march by 175 Negroes through downtown area July 20, three Negro ministers and Wilhelmina Gantt, mother of Harvey Gantt, first Negro admitted to Clemson, were arrested. Meanwhile, white and Negro leaders reported that two bi-racial conferences held July 19, had proven helpful, though no settlement was reached. Sixty-two downtown merchants agreed July 23 to integrate their stores, but the move did not placate demonstration leaders who said the series of demonstrations which began six weeks ago would continue. "We don't know who these 62 merchants are," commented one leader, "they will have to let us know specifically who will integrate and who will not integrate."

In another development, it was announced June 27 that Catholic hospitals in Charleston and Columbia will accept Negro patients in the fall; all services will be available to them, hospital officials said. But Negro doctors will not be permitted to practice in these hospitals.

July 10 - Federal Judge J. Robert Martin of Greenville, S.C., ordered desegregation of all state parks.

Florence - June 30 - A 20-man bi-racial committee has been formed here to establish lines of communication between white and Negro leaders. Its formation was endorsed by 82 community leaders.

Greenville - July 3 - The Greater Greenville Chamber of Commerce's Board of Directors urged the formation of a bi-racial committee, saying such a move should be taken in the best interests of local race relations.

Orangeburg - June 28 - The president of the S.C. Municipal Association called upon Negroes to refrain from demonstrating and urged them to try to solve racial problems in each community in "good faith."

Richland - County July 2 - Two Negroes were among four deputies hired by the Richland County sheriff's office. The two deputies are the first Negroes to be hired in Richland County.

Rock Hill - June 12 - The Rock Hill Chamber of Commerce recommended immediate integration of all city businesses serving the general public; resolution passed unanimously by chamber's 15-member Board of Directors.

Sumter - July 3 = The Carnegie Public Library here is now open to Negroes.

TENNESSEE

Bolivar - July 7 - a group of Hardeman County citizens met with Negroes from the County Improvement Assn. to discuss job opportunities and use of public facilities. Judge Max Frost told the group the jobs they were seeking are state and federal and that local citizens have no control over them.

Chattanooga - July 7 - The Board of Directors of the Chattanooga Chamber of Commerce unanimously issued an appeal to "the owners of the firms doing business with the general public to provide...equal treatment of all people."

July 9 - Officials announced that most of the city's leading restaurants, about 70%, had been or would be desegregated. This move was the result of negotiations that have been underway for weeks.

Knoxville - July 3 - Approximately 50 Knoxville restaurants and careterias have agreed to desegregate their facilities voluntarily. The desegregation move was worked out by an executive group of the Committee for Peaceful and Orderly Desegregation.

HUMAN RELATIONS REVIEW

Commission on Human Relations
518 CITY COUNTY BLDG

VOLUME 6, NUMBER 4 AUGUST, 1963

City Tightens Construction Contracts

The City of Pittsburgh in August inserted a rider into its construction contracts clarifying and tightening the City's fair employment requirements, with the Mayor's Commission on Human Relations designated as the compliance agency.

Under the rider, specific procedures are set up to insure compliance with the legal provisions that no contractors, subcontractors, or unions shall discriminate in employment on construction for the City of Pittsburgh because of race, color, religion, ancestry, or national origin.

CHR has been given authority to inspect relevant records of contractors, sub-contractors, and unions, and make necessary investigations, when discrimination is alleged. The findings will be then reported to a Contract Committee of three members, consisting of the Director of the City Department for which the work has been contracted, and two citizen members of the Commission on Human Relations.

Failure to comply with the City's non-discrimination laws can lead to contract termination with loss of all money due that contractor, under provisions of the Pennsylvania Public Contracts Act. While the new rider carries penalty clauses, it is not basically a punitive measure. Rather, it is an effort to develop creative and positive day-to-day implementation of fair employment legislation.

The new rider, included as part of every City construction contract since July 1, makes the following provisions: (1) Non-discrimination by contractors in hiring and personnel practices, including selection of employees for training, apprenticeship, promotion, etc. (2) All sub-contracts let by contractors must include the same provisions. (3) Formal and informal agreements between labor organizations, contractors and sub-contractors, if in violation of the Pennsylvania Public Contracts Act, the Pittsburgh Fair Employment Ordinance, or the new Rider. (4) Posting of notice by contractors and sub-contractors, in readily accessible places during construction period, of non-discriminatory employment policy. (5) Confidential access by CHR to books and records of contractors and sub-contractors, in connection with administration of the State and City Fair Employment Practices Laws. (6) Machinery for filing of complaint alleging discrimination, including provisions for immediate investigation and subsequent action. (7) Where finding is made of a violation constituting a "substantial breach of contract," provision that the

PA. HRC ISSUES ORDER

A continuing examination by the Pennsylvania Human Relations Commision of their racial policies was avoided by seven AFL-CIO crafts unions in Pittsburgh when, on July 10, the second day of public hearings scheduled to run for three days, they abruptly agreed to take immediate steps to admit Negro members and apprentices.

The State's integration order is substantially identical to a voluntary agreement reached between six of the union members of the AFL-CIO Building Trades Council and the Pittsburgh Commission on Human Relations on July 8. These six unions are: Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers, Local 751; Iron Workers, Local 3; Elevator Constructors, Local 6; Plumbers and Pipefitters, Locals 27 and 449; Asbestos Workers, Local 2. In addition to the above unions who signed an agreement with the City, the agreement signed with the State included the Electrical Workers, Local 5. The latter union concluded their agreement with the City on July 23.

The State agreement additionally applies to State contracts and to all territory covered by unions, which means beyond the City limits of Pittsburgh to much of Western Pennsylvania, in some instances.

St. Paul's Cathedral in Oakland was the scene of the first of a series of demonstrations urging stronger civil rights legislation, conducted by representatives of the Catholic Interracial Council during Sunday masses on September 22.

Placard-carrying demonstrators marched before the Cathedral armed with thousands of handbills which they distributed to parishioners and passers-by, with the approval of Bishop John J. Wright and Msgr. Andrew J. Pauley, rector of St. Paul's and a CHR Commissioner.

The handbills urged recipients to petition the President and House Majority and Minority Leaders Carl Albert and Charles A. Halleck, respectively, "expressing support of the administration's omnibus civil rights bill H. R. 7152, including an amendment establishing an enforceable Fair Employment Practices Act."

CIC Board Member Eugene Webb, of St. Richard's parish, Webster Avenue, is shown explaining the use of the CIC handbill to Virginia Hughes, of St. Edward's Parish, Blaw-Knox.

CHR GAINS SUBPOENA POWER

During the last session of the Pennsylvania Legislature, a law was passed giving subpoena power to any official of the City of Pittsburgh empowered to conduct public hearings. This action culminates years of effort on the part of the Commission on Human Relations to obtain the power of subpoena.

It was the belief of those concerned with the effective enforcement and administration of our local laws against discrimination that some power was needed to compel persons to attend and testify at public hearings to which they were a party. Since the formation of the Commission on Human Relations in 1955, three public hearings have been conducted and, in each case, the respondents have failed even to appear. It is obvious that a much more complete adjudication of a case occurs when respondents appear and present their defense to a charge of discrimination.

The bill (No. 1808) was originally introduced into the House of Representatives on March 18, 1963, by Messrs. Kramer, Kamyk, Clarke, and Fenrich, and referred next day to the Committee concerned with Class 1, 2, and 2A Cities and Counties. Under the new law, any person subpoenaed as a witness to attend a public hearing held by the Commission must attend. The law also gives the Commission power to issue subpoenas DUCES TECUM, which can compel the production of books, records, documents, etc., at public hearings.

Any person who refuses to obey a subpoena, or who refuses to be sworn or affirmed, or refuses to testify once he has appeared, may be cited for contempt, and for this purpose application may be made to the Court of Common Pleas of Allegheny County.

Seeking to learn whether Pittsburgh's manners have improved during the past thirty years, Editor Marion A. Keller interviews two Shrine leaders at their Hotel Penn-Sheraton Convention Headquarters in August. Shown agreeing that Pittsburgh's hospitality to outsiders was "most satisfactory" are, from left, James E. Denkins of Baltimore, Imperial Director of Public Relations, and Waynard H. Jones of Detroit, Convention Director, Ancient Egyptian Arabic Order, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

CITY RATES PRAISE

"Times have changed since 1933," recalled Mr. Waynard H. Jones in an interview with Editor Marion A. Keller on August 22 at the Penn-Sheraton Hotel during a Shrine Convention. Mr. Jones, Convention Director of the Ancient Egyption Arabic Order, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine (AEAONMS), remembered that the last convention held in Pittsburgh by the Shriners, thirty years ago, took place in the Hill District, with local residents offering their homes to the delegates, there being limited hotel accommodations then for the guests.

Since 1949, the Shriners have had an increasingly high rate of attendance at their conventions, held annually in different cities. In recent years, the Shrine Convention has been received well in all convention cities. Asked how Pittsburgh treated them by comparison with other cities, Mr. Jones stated that the reception in Pittsburgh was the "same or better; there is no known instance wherein anyone was refused service." No complaints regarding hotel accommodations or hotels were received by the Convention Director from any of the guests. There were approximately 8,000 Shrine members attending the 6-day convention in Pittsburgh, with representation from the total Shrine membership of 15,247, and Women's Auxiliary known as Daughters of Isis, whose membership is 6,400.

All in all, the Shrine Convention in Pittsburgh was considered by its own leadership to have been a "quite satisfactory" experience.

KABB COUNCIL ANNUAL MEETING

The KABB Community Council held its annual meeting in May and elected new officers. Mr. James V. Tortola presented some remarks based on his experiences during the past seven years while acting as Chairman of the Manchester Neighborhood Council. Mr. C. Howard McPeak was re-elected to serve as Council President for the 1963-64 program year. Other officers chosen to guide the activities of this citizen action group during the coming year include: Mr. Lee A. Harris, Sr., Vice-President; Mrs. Margaret Shaw, Recording Secretary; Mr. Budd Spangler, Corresponding Secretary; and Rev. Bradley Caddell, Treasurer.

The KABB Council is a broadly representative citizen organization brought into being through the joint efforts of CHR staff and interested area residents. The council brings together many social forces from the South Hills neighborhoods of Knoxville, Allentown, Beltzhoover and Bon Air, on a non-political, non-sectarian and interracial basis. CHR presently provides direct staff service to the council and its constituent committees.

The Commission decided to organize this action group only after a good deal of deliberation and study. Mr. Norman Taylor, a graduate student from the School of Social Work, University of Pittsburgh, carried out an in-depth exploration of intergroup relations in Beltzhoover from February until May of 1961, to determine whether or not there was a need for Commission activity in Beltzhoover and the surrounding South Hills neighborhoods.

Jobs Sought Under ARA

Recently organized by a group of Pittsburgh men and a woman to encourage new business and business expansion, the Business and Job Corporation hopes to create additional jobs in two areas having a high level of unemployment. Under provisions of the Area Redevelopment Act, this community non-profit corporation has as a goal the creation of increased employment opportunities in the Hill District and the Homewood-Brushton areas.

Having received its charter in July, the Business and Job Corporation already is sponsoring one project, which is expected to create eighty-two jobs. Two additional projects, involving manufacturing processes, have been suggested. Future plans call for consideration of ideas which will promote new business in the Pittsburgh area.

The Area Redevelopment Act (ARA) was enacted by Congress in 1961, and was designed to create a working partnership between private enterprise, the state, and the federal government. The purpose of the Act was to encourage new or expanding business to create new jobs, in areas which suffered economically due to high rates of unemployment.

For business firms, establishing or expanding in certified redevelopment areas, the Act makes possible low-interest, long-term loans. ARA loans from local commercial sources, and investment capital, provide the financial stucture necessary. In addition to loans being made available, the community must participate, through its willingness to invest in new or expanding business by supplying 10% of the needed capital in the form of loans. Repayment of the community loans occurs after all other fixed loans are satisfied. Because the Act states that the community must be involved, it is necessary to establish a legal entity.

The sixteen Incorporators of the Business and Job Development Corporation are: President, Russell Shelton; Vice President, Rev. Walter J. Hardaway; Secretary, Lenore E. Rainey; Treasurer, Leonard N. Browne; Harry Bray, James M. Burgette, Harry Fitzgerald, William Goode, Arthur Halloway, John V. Hicks, Luther J. Johnson, James Jordon, Silas Knox, Robert Lavelle, Luther Sewell, Henry Smith, Jr.

COMMUNITY TENSION — A CASE HISTORY

One Friday evening, a CHR field representative received a phone call at his home. The caller, a Negro mother, stated that her young son and a white boy who resided several doors away had had a fight, and as a result white teenagers were driving up and down the block threatening her family. An eruption of violence appeared imminent.

Arriving on the scene in short order, CHR investigator questioned the Negro family. Watching the scene, the white family sat on their doorstep five houses away. Tension and hostility, on both sides, were at a peak. Diplomacy of a high order was called for.

The story, later confirmed by the white family, was that the white boy accused the Negro boy of stealing his shoes at the high school they both attended. In the heat of the ensuing argument, the Negro boy struck the white boy in the face. His older brother, upon learning of this, went to the home of the Negro family, waving a screwdriver threateningly in the air, and cursing the Negro father to goad him into a fight. When the Negro father refused to fight, the brother left.

Soon after, two carloads of white boys drove up and down the street, shouting curses at the Negro family and warning them, "You'd better not fall asleep tonight." They carried baseball bats in their hands; it was suspected other weapons were hidden in the autos. To this, the Negro father's terse reaction was, "I have some guns upstairs—if they start trouble, I'll drop them in their tracks."

CHR investigator then talked with the white family, asking what they thought the solution to the problem might be. Agreeing as to the basic facts of the case, the young man with the screwdriver said, "Well, if they leave us alone, we'll leave them alone." They were reminded of their obligations as citizens to keep order in the neighborhood, and prevent racial outbreaks. The family agreed to accept this.

Returning to the home of the Negro family, CHR investigator told them of the white family's willingness to cease aggression, and suggested further contact between the two families be eliminated. The Negro family agreed to abide by the truce. Violence was averted, and the Negro family moved from the neighborhood, as they had planned for some time, seven days later. During this period, close follow-up was done by Commission staff, to make sure nothing could go wrong. Case was closed after the Negro family moved from the neighborhood and it was determined that no further community friction resulted from the original incident.

Getting into practice for a quick trip to the next 4-alarm fire, Battalion Chief Jack H. Harrison, of Sheraden, is ready to go with his driver, Chief's Aide James Flavin. Elevated in August to position of District #1 Battalion Chief, Mr. Harrison is the first Negro to be promoted to this position. He has 21 years service with the Fire Department, working as a "hoseman" until 1956, when he became Captain of #5 Engine Company in District #1. Chief Harrison's District begins at the Point; its boundaries include the Strip to 33rd Street, the Soho area, and the Bluff.

KABB Council Meeting . . .

In all, a full year of research, planning and discussion meetings preceded the Council's organizational meeting held during February, 1962. Representative committees of hilltop residents worked with Commission on Human Relations staff members in contacting and meeting with the various citizen organizations, agencies and institutions in the Allentown, Knoxville, Mt. Oliver, Beltzhoover and Bon Air area.

Council members feel that the KABB Community Council is serving a number of significant functions which benefit the hilltop neighborhoods it represents. It is providing a channel of communication through which individual residents and the various groups in the hilltop area may have an opportunity to make their wishes on neighborhood issues known to other groups and individuals in the area. The Council is also providing a means for the common discussion of community problems and for unified efforts directed toward the solving of these problems. The Council is affording an opportunity for the residents of the hilltop communities it represents to participate in community planning through contact with city-wide planning bodies. The Council also acts as a vehicle for promoting understanding by stimulating the community to look at and seek solutions to intergroup relations problems in the area as these arise.

Currently, the Council represents thirty-three South Hills agencies, institutions, civic and social groups. There are approximately 115 individual and group members on the mailing list. An average of 35 to 50 members have attended general membership meetings. Standing committee members have maintained a high level of attendance at committee meetings.

This past Spring, two project committees carried out programs agreed on by the general membership: (1) a traffic planning committee was successful in securing additional traffic control devices and is hoping to secure some changes in traffic patterns in the neighborhoods the Council represents; (2) a clean-up, paint-up committee is presently carrying out a community improvement program in cooperation with local Boy and Girl Scout groups.

The committee responsible for planning and carrying out the Clean-Up, Paint-Up program included the following KABB Council members and Boy and Girl Scout leaders: Mrs. Thomas Truax, Mrs. Iona Kraus, Mrs. Ann Linz, Mrs. Lucille Stockhausen, Lawrence Johnson, Minor Thomas, Milford Davis, Joseph Linz, Sam Campagna, Elwyn Weber, Charles Dobbs, Andrew Pottgeiser, Mrs. U. E. Dibble, E. T. Powell, Al Gorski, Mrs. Catherine Highgate and C. S. Whitaker.

Members of the Traffic Planning Committee are: Lee A. Harris, Sr., Budd Spangler, Mrs. Glenn Vensel and C. S. Whitaker.

The Permissive Area of State Anti-Discrimination Laws

We note with interest that the first volume of the Duquesne University Law Review (Spring 1963) carried an article on the subject of laws against discrimination. The article, written anonymously by a Duquesne University Law School student, deals with the thorny problem of how far state and local governments may legislate against discrimination before a conflict arises with federal law covering the same subject matter.

The article first analyzes the recent decision of Levitt and Sons, Inc., vs. Division Against Discrimination, a 1960 New Jersey Case involving the builder of Levittown, Pennsylvania. In the Levitt case a complaint was filed with the Division Against Discrimination alleging that the Levitt Company was guilty of racial discrimination in failing to sell houses to the complainant. The issue on appeal was "whether Congress' refusal to incorporate a policy of non-discrimination in national housing legislation indicated a specific policy, thereby precluding state action forbidding racial discrimination in federally assisted housing." The Supreme Court of New Jersey decided that the New Jersey law against discrimination did not conflict with federal law. The Court stated: "There is a considerable gap between Congress' refusing to adopt an express policy of non-discrimination in regard to FHA insured housing to be applicable under all circumstances and in all sections of the country, and a congressional policy prohibiting states from enacting laws prescribing such discrimination." Another recent decision analyzed in the article is Marlon D. Green vs. Continental Air Lines, Inc. In the Green case, unlike the Levitt case, the Supreme Court of Colorado held that the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commission had no power over the airlines doing business both in and outside of Colorado, because the federal government had pre-empted the field through the Civil Aeronautics Act and the Railway Labor Act. However, on further appeal the Supreme Court of the United States ruled that there was no conflict with the federal law and that the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commission has jurisdiction over an airlines engaged in inter-state commerce, doing business in Colorado.

The following sentence, in the conclusion of the article, cogently summarizes the policy basis for the actions of the New Jersey Supreme Court and the United States Supreme Court in sustaining the respective actions of the New Jersey Division Against Discrimination, and the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commission.

"The recent decisions stemming from Brown vs. the Board of Education, the 1961 ICC ruling banning discrimination in waiting rooms, the Presidential Executive Orders 19025 and 11063, and the widespread prevalence of state anti-discrimination statutes, are sufficient to indicate that the statutes in question actually aid in already existing national policy."

It appears that another legal attempt on the part of those who would seek to abrogate the laws against discrimination has failed. The argument that local and state anti-discrimination laws conflict with federal laws on the same subject matter, be it housing, transportation, etc., is without merit. As the article clearly points out, local and state anti-discrimination laws are in consort rather than conflict with federal policy and federal law.

HUMAN RELATIONS NEWS OF CHICAGO

Vol. 5 No. 6

PUBLISHED PERIODICALLY BY THE CHICAGO COMMISSION ON HUMAN RELATIONS

Chicago Now Has A Fair Housing Ordinance

The City Council of Chicago, by a 30-to-16 vote, adopted September 11 a Fair Housing Ordinance. Its preamble declares:

"It is . . . the policy of the City of Chicago to assure full and equal opportunity to all residents of the City to obtain fair and adequate housing . . . without discrimination . . . because of . . . race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry."

The ordinance amends the Municipal Code to prohibit real estate brokers licensed by the city, and those operating in Chicago but licensed elsewhere, from discriminating against a prospective home buyer or renter because of his race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry.

On September 12, the Chicago Commission on Human Relations, whose duty it is to carry out the purposes and provisions of the ordinance, indicated it would "consult with interested groups in determining rules and regulations to carry out the letter and spirit of the ordinance."

To speed up preparation of such procedures, Ely M. Aaron, chairman, appointed a special Commission subcommittee which will go to work immediately. Dr. Marshal L. Scott, dean of the Presbyterian Institute of Industrial Relations, chairman, and Attorneys Jerome J. Friedman and William R. Ming, Jr., are on the subcommittee.

The ordinance prohibits real estate brokers from:

1. refusing to sell, lease or rent any residential real estate,
2. exploiting or overcharging any person for residential housing accommodations,
3. discriminating or participating in discrimination in connection with borrowing or lending money or accepting mortgages,
4. refusing to show a listing because of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry.

It also outlaws "panic peddling" in racially changing neighborhoods by prohibiting real estate brokers from soliciting residential real estate on the grounds of loss

Commission Seeks Nominees For Seven Annual Awards

Nominations are being sought by the Chicago Commission on Human Relations for its seven annual awards in human relations.

Lee Schooler, chairman of the Awards committee, inviting persons throughout Chicago to nominate candidates for the awards, said:

"We need your help in locating those who deserve to be so honored. Your nominations are the basis for our selections."

Six awards are given to individuals and organizations that have made outstanding contributions to the improvement of human relations in Chicago. A seventh award, a memorial to the late Thomas and Eleanor Wright, is given to a professional human relations worker. Thomas Wright was at one time executive

Roundup of Illinois' New Rights Legislation

The 1963 session of the Illinois General Assembly approved legislation which marked some progress in human relations.

A roundup of bills passed and signed into law shows:

—Swimming pools were added to the list of places of public accommodations where it is unlawful to practice racial discrimination (House Bill 93).

—The Fair Employment Practices Act was broadened to include the State of Illinois as an employer and all other political subdivisions and governmental agencies (House Bill 137).

—Hospitals are now required to give emergency treatment or first aid to persons suffering serious medical disability as well as to the injured (House Bill 106).

—School boards are required as soon as practicable to change boundaries of school districts to take into account the prevention of racial segregation (House Bill 113).

—Business schools may suffer suspension or loss of certificate if they refuse to admit applicants on account of race, color or creed (House Bill 849).

—Reimbursement to the counties for care of children will be made only for care in those institutions which admit children on the basis of need without regard to race or ethnic origin (House Bill 54 and Senate Bills 310, 312).

—An Illinois Emancipation Centennial Commission was established for the observance of the Century of Negro Progress and was appropriated $73,350 (House Bill 783).

—A Commission on Spanish-speaking Residents was established to study the problems faced by Spanish-speaking peoples and make recommendations to lessen these problems (Senate Bill 919).

The proposed Fair Housing Practices Bill (House Bill 755), which failed to pass, generated the most excitement in the area of civil rights. It would have made racial discrimination unlawful in the sale or rental of all housing units in the state except owner-occupied dwellings with three units or less, and housing owned and operated for members of religious bodies and bonafide private clubs. It also would have established a Fair Housing Practices Commission empowered to investigate complaints, conciliate and persuade for a solution, and to seek court orders if necessary to carry out its decisions. This bill failed of passage in the House by just two votes. A similar bill was introduced in the previous session of the legislature and received 71 favorable votes as compared to the 87 this year.

Meanwhile, Governor Otto Kerner of Illinois has called for the elimination of racial and religious discrimination in all phases of state government. He issued a Code of Fair Practices as an executive order governing state services and facilities, employment, licensing, contracts for public works, financial assistance, state-supported training and apprentice programs, employment services and professional training.

Governor Kerner requested all executive agencies to post the Code in a conspicuous place and report to him by January 15 of each year on steps taken to implement its provisions.

The map on the opposite page shows the distributon of Negro population in Chicago's suburbs in 1960. It was produced by the Community Renewal Program of the City of Chicago, and published in "An Atlas of Chicago's People, Jobs and Homes." The atlas is available from the Community Renewal Program.

The map is based on the 1960 United States Bureau of Census' official tabulation. The census disclosed that 30 Chicago suburbs in Illinois, out of a total of 253, have 100 or more Negroes. In eight of these, the Negro population is swelled by resident domestics and caretakers or persons in state institutions.

Survey Finds Job Agencies Still Accept Biased Orders

Most private employment agencies in Chicago still accept discriminatory job orders, according to a survey conducted by the American Jewish Congress.

Elmer Gertz, local Congress president, said members of the Women's Division had contacted by telephone 122 private employment agencies in Chicago to find out whether they would accept a job order for a "white Protestant stenographer."

Of 95 agencies which gave clear-cut responses, 86 accepted the discriminatory job order in spite of the fact that nine of these believed the practice to be illegal. Only nine agencies refused to accept such an order, five of these specifically stating that they believed it to be illegal.

Results published in the report covered "usable" responses — that is, those in which the employment agency either accepted or refused the discriminatory request. "Non-usable" responses, which were not included in the final results, consisted of agencies that could not be reached or did not supply stenographers, or whose answers were ambiguous.

Chicago was one of six cities in five states where the survey was conducted.

SMALL MEMORIES

"The small memories of childhood can keep one from bitterness as an adult," suggests Mrs. Olive Snead, principal of a Philadelphia grade school. To prove her point, she tells about the kindergartner, invited for the first time to go home and have supper with a school friend. The children played while the mother fixed the meat and set the table. "Get ready for dinner" she said. The visiting child hesitated. "I'm colored," he announced. "I'm white," the mother replied. "Now let's wash up and sit down to eat." From: "Lets Be Human" - Institute of Human Relations

SUCCESS

A League of Women Voters in a small Georgia city accepted the membership of three Negro women. Results: one resignation; thirty new white members; net membership increase thirty two.

FROM THE AMERICUS JAIL

A young Negro girl was scrubbing the floor of the jail and talking to herself. "See that electric wire and me standing in two inches of water, I'll catch hold of it and get out of this mess." The jailer rushed to stop the threatened act - slipped and fell and as he slid across the wet floor he cried "Freedom".

MILITANT

A 6'10" Negro doorman named John Barrow, wearing a splendid $275 uniform, is now on duty outside the Van Ness showroom of Jim Wessman, the Lincoln dealer. Friday, a Little Old Lady sidled up to him and asked: "What army are you with?" Thinking she was putting him on, John smiled: "Why, the Lincoln army, of course." She wagged her head in dismay. "I'm sympathetic to your cause," she said, "but sometimes you go too far!"

More Near North Housing Opening up to Non-whites

Substantial advances in equal opportunity in housing in Chicago's Near North Side were revealed in a study by the Chicago Commission on Human Relations.

An increasing number of Near North Side apartment developments and apartment buildings, including the more fashionable ones, are renting to all qualified applicants, regardless of their race, creed, color or national ancestry.

Marina City, Carl Sandburg Village, Outer Drive East, DeWitt-Chestnut Apartments, Old Town Gardens Apartments, and a number of miscellaneous apartments on North Lincoln Avenue, East Oak Street and North LaSalle Street are being offered to all qualified tenants on an equal opportunity basis.

Hal M. Freeman, coordinator of housing and community services division of the Commission, said the major developments had adopted a non-discriminatory policy even before passage of the new Chicago Fair Housing Ordinance, which prohibits racial or religious discrimination by real estate brokers. Some voluntarily set up such a rental policy; others acted in compliance with President Kennedy's Executive Order on Equal Opportunity in Housing to admit Negro tenants.

Freeman said, "These apartment developments are paving the way for owners of various sized apartment buildings on the North Side also to offer vacant apartments to all qualified applicants on a non-discriminatory basis."

Marina City, a 60-story twin tower apartment complex at 300 N. State Street, has 896 apartments. It was privately developed by the Building Services Employees of America, AFL-CIO. The first tenants moved in October, 1963. Marks and Company, Real Estate, is the managing agent.

Carl Sandburg Village is situated at 1455 N. Sandburg Avenue, on land cleared and sold by the city's Department of Urban Renewal. When completed, Sandburg Village will contain six high rise and two low rise apartment buildings, and sections of town houses — a total of 1,875 units. Tenants now are occupying four completed high rise buildings. Arthur Rubloff and Company manages the development.

Church Home for Aged Affirms Non-Bias Policy

The Rev. John H. Scambler, vice president of the board of trustees of the Church Home for Aged Persons, 5445 South Ingleside Avenue, formally announced a non-discriminatory admissions policy in a letter to the Chicago Commission on Human Relations.

The letter came following a Commission investigation of charges the Church Home practiced discrimination in its admissions. The Department of Urban Renewal requested the investigation after objections were made to the possible sale of city-cleared land to the Church Home because of the discrimination allegations. A city ordinance states land cleared and resold in urban renewal projects must be used in a non-discriminatory manner.

Established in 1885 by the Episcopal Church Diocese of Chicago, the institution provides a home for aged persons.

Housing Body Endorses Policy of Fair Housing

The Metropolitan Housing and Planning Council has issued a statement, adopted by its Board of Governors, endorsing the policy of the City of Chicago as declared in the Fair Housing Ordinance.

The Council is a non-profit, non-partisan citizen organization concerned with improvement of housing and neighborhood conditions through code enforcement, urban renewal, new construction and sound metropolitan planning.

The Council's statement called the ordinance "a step in the right direction." It said, "The Council endorses and supports the policy of the City of Chicago as declared in this ordinance, that all people should be assured full and equal opportunity to obtain fair and adequate housing without discrimination and that no person should refuse to sell or rent or otherwise deny housing accommodations to anyone on grounds of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry."

But the Council stated, "No matter how fairly and vigorously the law is enforced however, the ordinance will fall short of achieving its declared policy for two principal reasons:

"First, the prohibitions laid down by the enactment apply only to licensed real estate brokers and the only direct penalty it provides is a suspension or revocation of the broker's license. Other persons who are involved in the market for housing accommodations including home owners, landlords, rental agents, building managers, mortgage companies and other lenders are beyond the reach of this law unless they also happen to hold city licenses as real estate brokers. At best, therefore, the ordinance is only a partial remedy.

"The second shortcoming of the law lies in the fact that as an ordinance of the City of Chicago, it has no effect in the metropolitan area beyond the city limits. The problems of adequate housing for people of all races and religions are not confined by the municipal boundaries. An effective solution will require unified action throughout the metropolitan area.

"We recognize of course that both of these limitations are beyond the control of the city government. However, the ordinance as passed cannot be accepted as a final solution. We therefore urge, as in the past, a vigorous campaign in the next session of the Illinois General Assembly for legislative action at the state level to assure by legal means full equality of housing opportunity."

League of Women Voters Survey

The League of Women Voters of Chicago has completed a survey of the rental housing market as it relates to racial discrimination in housing.

Copies of the complete survey report are available for 15 cents each from the League office, 67 E. Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois 60603.

Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago, third from right, presents proclamation designating Saturday, November 9, Civil Rights Day in Chicago in recognition of the Ninth Labor Conference on Civil Rights held in the Sherman House. Receiving the plaque in the Mayor's office is Jacob Siegel, second from left, chairman of the Jewish Labor Committee, sponsors of the Conference. Others at the presentation are from left: Aaron Aronin, field director of the Committee; Theodore Robinson, program chairman of the Conference; Paul Iaccino, who was master of ceremonies; and Morris Bialis, Conference chairman. In his proclamation, the Mayor urged all citizens "to give heed to the deliberations and determinations of the Conference."

Rights Laws Sent to Hospitals

A compilation of equal rights laws that affect Chicago hospitals has been sent to all of the 84 private and public hospitals in the city by the Chicago Commission on Human Relations.

The printed statement summarizes for the first time laws that have been passed at various times by the Chicago City Council and the state legislature.

It covers measures on patient care, opportunity for physicians, emergency care, legal penalties, tax exemption and racial information.

The Commission has requested it be posted at the hospitals in compliance with the requirements of Section 137-13.4 of the Chicago Municipal Code. Copies are available from the Commission.

Near North Housing

Outer Drive East, at Randolph Street and the Lake, is a 40-story apartment building owned and operated by the Jupiter Corporation. The first tenants recently began moving into the exclusive new building which has 940 apartments.

DeWitt-Chestnut Apartments, a 43-story high rise, currently is under construction at DeWitt Place and Chestnut Street, and eventually will contain 407 units. Initial occupancy is expected in the Fall, 1964.

Old Town Gardens, formerly known as the Marshall Field Apartments and later as Town and Garden Apartments, at 1448 N. Sedgwick Avenue, has long been recognized as a fashionable apartment development on the Near North Side. It was built in 1927, and, along with the Julius Rosenwald Apartments on 47th Street, was one of the first privately developed slum clearance projects in the country.

Old Town Gardens continues to attract middle-income white families who prefer to live close to the Loop. The block-long five-story building contains 628 units and is owned and operated by Hanover Equities Corporation of Bayside, New York.

Women's Club Tells Of Non-Bias Admission Policy

The Eleanor Association has adopted a non-discriminatory policy in the admission of residents of its clubs, officials of the organization informed the Chicago Commission on Human Relations.

Mrs. Beth Middleton, executive director, told the Commission, "We accept colored girls as we accept white girls; that is based on compatibility and sociability. We reserve the right to interview and screen all girls."

The executive director's statement followed a complaint filed with the Commission charging racial discrimination. The Eleanor Association is a privately-endowed Chicago organization which provides housing, meals and recreational facilities for employed women.

City, State Laws Bar Bias in Barber Shops

In response to questions directed to it following an incident involving musician Dizzy Gillespie, the Chicago Commission on Human Relations recently stated that both the Municipal Code of Chicago and the Illinois Revised Statutes bar discrimination in barber shops.

Ely M. Aaron, chairman of the Commission, said the city and state designate barber shops as "public accommodations" and as such guarantee full and equal use of them by all citizens.

In addition, Aaron said the state Department of Registration and Education uses the same examination for every applicant and issues the same license or certificate to each successful candidate.

"Furthermore," he said, "Rule I for the Illinois Barber Law makes it clear beyond doubt when it says the 'holder of a license or certificate of registration issued under the provisions of the Illinois Barber Law shall not refuse to render service to a person solely on account of that person's race, religion, color or national origin . . .' and provides for revocation of the barber's license if he should discriminate."

Frank Katsis, a teacher-manager of one of the seven Moler Barber College schools and a past member of the Barber Committee of the Illinois Department of Registration and Education, says every Moler student cuts the hair of Negroes and whites before he leaves school and no special instruction is needed or requested by students.

"If you blindfold a barber and tell him the kind of hair his customer has — straight, wavy or kinky, for example — he could not tell you the race of that customer," Katsis said.

Earlier a report reached the Chicago Commission on Human Relations indicating Gillespie had been denied a haircut by a loop barber. The Commission staff went to work, and that afternoon the internationally known musician had his hair cut and the Commission was assured the barber shop would not discriminate.

DECEMBER SUPPLEMENT 1963

HUMAN RELATIONS NEWS OF CHICAGO

Vol. 5 No. 8

PUBLISHED PERIODICALLY BY THE CHICAGO COMMISSION ON HUMAN RELATIONS

Trends in Human Relations, 1943–1963

This issue of Human Relations News contains reports made by Ely M. Aaron, chairman of the Commission, and Edward Marciniak, executive director, at the Commission on Human Relations Eighteenth Annual Awards Luncheon on December 6.

Mr. Aaron's Report

This year marks the 20th anniversary of the founding of the Commission, and the 18th anniversary of the Commission Awards.

The Commission was created by City Ordinance in 1947 as part of the city government, but its immediate forerunner was the Mayor's Committee on Race Relations, which had been constituted by Mayor Kelly in 1943 because of the threat of conflict and racial riots in the city. Its purpose was to find ways and means of alleviating this threat and maintaining the peace of the community. Its underlying principles were that equality of opportunity and equality of treatment were the proper possessions of all citizens and that the much repeated phrase, which is never a cliche, that "our government is a government of laws and not a government of men" applies equally to all Americans.

Mr. Aaron

There was a recognition that unequal rights and privileges existed in our community, and that some persons were the recipients of superior rights which they sought jealously to maintain, and others had no such rights and were trying to obtain at least some of them, and the conflict arising between these groups had to be contained.

This problem of equality is the ever present American goal, which started in 1776 and the complete attainment of which has not yet been reached. How much or how little equality is not the answer; just equality, and the means to achieve it should be the determining factor. This task calls for educating the general community as to its need and also calls for participation of people throughout the community in action programs to bring it about.

The Commission in 1946 determined that each year awards should be given to those individuals, groups or enterprises who furthered these programs, and it is interesting to view this development. Most of those who received awards in 1946 would not be eligible for them today because what was accomplished then is commonplace in our living today.

For example, a radio station was given an award for programming about democracy. Today, democracy forms the themes for documentaries in numerous forms and almost daily programs appear on television and radio using democratic actions as their central point. Today Negroes are seen on camera not as "Exhibit A Negroes," but as people just doing a job, which has nothing to do with race.

In 1946 a restaurant was awarded for serving all persons without discrimination even though the Illinois Public Accommodations Act prohibiting such discrimination had been on the Statute Books since 1885. But its enforcement had been honored in the breach for so many years that just following the law was considered sufficiently outstanding as to merit an award.

An important award in 1946 went to Roosevelt College for "attracting a student body, faculty and Board of Trustees without discrimination and without quotas." Such an award would not be given this year to any university or college in Chicago since none discriminate.

All of these 1946 awards were proper because they were granted to people who were pioneers in their day, and though these acts may seem commonplace in 1963, they were actions which were taken beyond the call of duty and merited the community recognition which they received.

Through the years following 1946, recognition of the work of the Commission and the growth in com-

HUMAN RELATIONS HIGHLIGHTS OF 1963

Mr. Marciniak's Report

The place is Chicago — where local events pack a national wallop. The year is 1963 — a hundred years after the signing of the Emancipation Proclamation.

In January the National Conference on Religion and Race makes history in Chicago.

In February the Chicago Real Estate Board admits its first Negro members.

In March the Commission's findings on cemetery bias are given to the City Council and an ordinance is passed.

In April the Chicago Urban League joins a skilled job bank.

In May the Co-ordinating Council of Community Organizations is formed. Negro medical students organize to encourage Negro youth to enter medicine in Chicago.

In June Mayor Daley launches a series of top level discussions with business, union and religious leaders to multiply employment opportunities.

In July the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People convenes in Chicago.

In August the Second National Methodist Conference on Human Relations meets in Chicago, and the League of Women Voters announces the results of its survey of the rental policies of 695 Chicago landlords.

In September the American Negro Emancipation Centennial Exposition concludes in Chicago.

In October the Chicago Fair Housing Ordinance becomes law.

In November the Jewish Labor Committee sponsors the largest civil rights meeting ever held anywhere by organized labor.

And now it is December.

New Spirit Emerges

Our national movement for human rights is not new. What is new is the spirit and determination to move forward. Gone are the hollow years when human rights were hedged by "if," "maybe," or "later." The year 1963 ushered in a new era of the "shall" and the "now." It was a year of boycotts, picketing, marches, demonstrations, and court suits. It was a year with moments of panic, fear, threats, and violence. It was a year which produced fresh and courageous leadership. It was a year in which we strode forward. It was a tumultuous and tragic year.

The new spirit was immortalized by our late President John Fitzgerald Kennedy. Last June, he said about civil rights: "We are confronted primarily with a moral issue. It is as old as the Scriptures and is as clear as the American Constitution."

To review our steps forward is not any empty salaam to progress. An honest look at the record tells us what direction we have set for ourselves; what we have in fact accomplished; and, finally, what still needs to be done.

It was a great boon for Chicago that the National Conference on Religion and Race chose Chicago for its historic meeting. That conference catapulted the major religious groups into the center of the civil rights movement in this nation.

The renewed religious conscience was evident among the priests and ministers who patrolled the race-troubled sidewalks of Englewood last August, among volunteers from Catholic and Protestant colleges tutoring on the West Side and other neighborhoods, and in the solid backing religious leaders gave to fair housing practices for the city and suburbs. In 1963, home visitations between Negro and white families expanded into a national program with the aid of religious leaders, and, thanks to Chicago's Friendship House, which had cradled the program locally for many years.

Merit-Employment Program

This past summer under the Mayor's initiative and in his office, special meetings were held with the city's top business, union and religious leaders to develop "A Chicago Plan" for employment. The three-point plan calls for — 1) extending fair hiring practices, 2) full employment in the Chicago metropolitan area, and 3) adequate preparation and education of our young people.

The Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry responded by setting up a full-employment committee to follow through on this three-point program. This is an important task, and we look forward to results.

Nowhere else in the country has there been such close day-to-day co-operation among city, state and federal agencies to extend job opportunities for minority youth so that public money does not subsidize racial or religious discrimination. Thanks to such co-ordinated action, old recruiting patterns were remodeled and new opportunities for Negroes were opened up during 1963 in many skilled trades, including boilermakers, sheet metal workers, sprinkler fitters, elevator constructors, machinists, hoisting engineers and asbestos workers. Our job isn't finished, the Commission's recent survey of unions showed.

The establishment of the Chicago Urban League's talent bank and the League's pact with eight top Chicago banks for merit recruitment and employment forcefully demonstrates once again that the opening up of new jobs for minority youth and adults must be matched by a recruitment campaign to get nonwhites to qualify and apply for these positions.

Important are the practices and policies of private employment agencies. For 1964 we plan to marshal their support for merit placement of Negroes, Mexicans, Puerto Ricans, Orientals, American Indians, Jews, and others.

In neighborhoods all over Chicago, college students have volunteered to teach children and adults in a mass effort to raise educational skills. We now have a genuine, home-grown peace corps. The tutoring program is exploding in all directions. Hundreds of college students are now tutors — and adults are joining in. By the end of next year we hope to count on several thousand volunteer tutors, using their God-given talents to help those in need. The Mayor's Committee on New Residents will continue to give this project full support.

This year saw the realization of a long sought Commission goal when the Cook County Board of Commissioners moved to relieve overused facilities at Cook County Hospital by taking advantage of underused beds available at private hospitals. Under this program, patients — many of whom are Negro — will be referred to private hospitals which will be reimbursed by the Cook County Department of Public Aid. The result is a major breakthrough in nondiscriminatory patient care in private hospitals.

This year saw Negro medical students organizing a special committee to encourage young Negroes to pursue medical careers and to take advantage of the increasing opportunities for Negroes in medicine. Forty of Chicago's private hospitals now have Negro physicians on their staffs. For the first time in twenty years there has been an upturn in the number of Negro physicians practicing in Chicago.

The School Issue

In every large, northern city across the land the school issue remains a feverish concern. No large city has solved the problem. What is involved is the quality of education being given our children, particularly in the city's older neighborhoods and a debate about racial discrimination and segregation in the schools.

There can be no doubt that educators are being challenged to improve the education being given in the inner city. There can be no doubt that Chicago is committed to giving such education free of racial discrimination and segregation.

One important step taken in Chicago was the appointment of a five-man panel which will report on the schools attended by Negro children, in an effort to resolve the tangled and thorny issues which beset the city's public schools.

Scheduled to report next March, the panel's findings should provide recommendations to guide the Board of Education in giving all our children the finest education available.

The Commission recognizes the need for members of the Board of Education and citizens' groups to continue their serious discussions about the character and climate of the education to be given our children. Any rupture in such conversations should be avoided. If such a possibility is imminent, the Commission repeats its offer of services in any way, including finding an acceptable intermediary, to continue the conversations and resolve the issues.

The new Fair Housing Ordinance enacted by the City Council says — "It is . . . the policy of the City of Chicago to assure full and equal opportunity to all residents of the City to obtain fair and adequate housing for themselves and their families . . . without discrimination against them because of their race, religion, national origin or ancestry."

Fair Housing

It was the Commission's announced goal at the beginning of 1963, to create a single real estate market throughout the metropolitan area so that all families can locate a home or apartment with equal opportunity; in other words, to take questions of race, religion, and nationality out of the housing market.

Early in the year, two reports prepared by the Commission provided a factual base from which to consider appropriate public action.

The first report outlined the changing situation in mortgage availability for Negroes. The second report, prepared with the co-operation of the Department of City Planning, surveyed the effectiveness of fair housing legislation in other cities and states.

After the Illinois Legislature failed to pass a fair housing law which would have applied to the entire state, the City Council adopted the Chicago Fair Housing Ordinance.

The Commission has responsibility for the ordinance's implementation and has started processing complaints. The Chicago Ordinance is but one of the many steps that must be taken to protect the right of people to shop for housing. If citizens can shop for furniture or automobiles without fear of racial, ethnic or religious barriers, they should be able to shop for housing in any real estate office under the same conditions.

We have called attention to the fair housing achievements of Hyde Park, Kenwood, Lake Meadows, Prairie Shores, Marina City, Outer Drive East, Carl Sandburg Village, Old Town Gardens and others.

Today a word of special praise is due the city's hard-working community organizations — and there are dozens of them — who strive to upgrade their homes and neighborhoods without downgrading anybody. The communities which they represent have successfully attracted middle class dwellers of all racial, religious, and ethnic backgrounds.

This list is incomplete, but we point with pride and encouragement to organizations like the South Shore Commission, the South East Community Organization, the Organization for the Southwest Community, the Lincoln Park Conservation Association, the Marynook Homeowners Association, and others.

These organizations, and others like them, are the hope and pride of Chicago. They have encouraged us far more than we can encourage them.

munity understanding of what it sought to accomplish has been manifested by aid given to public housing, opening of hospitals, opening up of employment — all on a non-discriminatory basis — and cooperation with the Police Department, which especially in the past years under Superintendent O. W. Wilson's direction, is consistently carrying on and is committed to programs of integrated personnel and understanding human relations problems.

We know that minds do change and have changed, that people do learn and that because of the on-going battle for freedom and equality we have achieved gains which are permanent and by reason of their very permanence are accepted as a matter of course.

All of these rights which we here in Chicago have accepted as our due, are in fact, in different parts of the country, being denied to millions of Americans for differing reasons, but in reality for no reason at all, other than for physical or religious differences.

We must all be emancipated from limitations on some of us, in order to assure equality to all of us.

No Reason in Violence

No American since the assassination of President Kennedy can ever be the same person he was before that day. The utter irrationality of conduct, the wastefulness, the feeling of numbness, of horror, of outrage and the eternal questioning of the reasons why this had to occur, will be with us for many days to come. We have been priding ourselves on being the leader of the world, on the physical aspects of our existence, and suddenly we are faced with questions as to whether our guidelines, our faith in the democratic process, our belief in the supremacy of law are understood by many segments of our community, and when so misunderstood we see that they are doubted and the doubts are flaunted before us.

In the last analysis as the oldest existing Republic in the world, the outstanding contribution the United States has made to civilization is our belief in the supremacy of law through our written Constitution as interpreted by the courts. We have constitutional guarantees protecting us as individuals; we have the right of petition, of peaceable assembly, and we also have the right to seek in proper legal ways to urge changes in our laws and to have them changed by legislative action or by constitutional interpretation through the courts, but we have no right to resort to violence which leads to lawlessness. Acquiescence to illegal methods affecting constitutional rights of individuals in the North as well as the South have made us too complacent of violations of law which can only result in anarchy.

Racial Justice a Must

A few days ago former Governor Leroy Collins of Florida speaking in Washington called for the need of Southerners to change the image of the South so that it can become a full partner in this nation "in which racial justice is recognized as a national commitment and a national necessity." He decried the fact that the South has allowed extremists to speak for it. The words he used were "How many Sunday School students have to be dynamited to death; how many leaders have to be shot in the back; how many Governors have to be shot in the chest; how many Presidents have to be assassinated?"

Violence is violence wherever it occurs and laws restricting violence must be upheld, and the constitutional guarantees protecting individuals and granting the right to urge changing of laws by proper legal means must also be upheld.

We of the Commission stand ready to aid all the citizens of Chicago in every way we can, to carry out the intent and mandates given to us by the various City Ordinances for providing equality of treatment, equality of opportunity for all the people of our city and to aid in maintaining the peace of our community. We bespeak your cooperation and the cooperation of all citizens and all citizen's groups in this effort, and we ask it NOW, for as President Johnson has said "100 years is too long to wait" — and so is 20!

THE HUMAN RELATIONS WORKSHOP

(Its origin and present function)

At the time of the publication of An American Dilemma in 1944, some pervasive and far-reaching changes were already under way in this country in the area of interracial and interreligious relationships. These changes had begun early in the century. But progress was inordinately slow. During the 20's and 30's, high walls still separated religious groups. As for race, the prevalent mood was nothing if not explosive. Education, characteristically described as "gradualism," was generally regarded with active disfavor. Exponents of civil rights were vigorously advocating legislation as the surest way of correcting intergroup inequities and inequalities.

Out of undeniable need, however, and forged by the conscience and intelligence of the nation, a new instrumentality was created: The Human Relations Workshop.

Almost overnight, the Human Relations Workshop brought a radically new concept and approach to public education. The point of departure or the incentive for the new program was not another theory of education but rather a clear and present crisis in American life. In the second place, the procedures of the workshop were ad hoc procedures, i.e., derived from or determined by that crisis. And, finally, acceptance of these two propositions logically necessitated additional educational innovations such as the elimination of a classroom "atmosphere" the deemphasis of the status relationship between teacher and student, a rather fluid schedule, experimentation with group dynamics and role playing, with expressional media and film, training in self and social awareness or sensitivity, and even such unconventional practices as granting passing grades to all participants on opening day in order that anxieties and problems incident to grades might be obviated.

After almost two decades of effort, the Human Relations Workshop is now a recognized adjunct to the summer program of colleges and universities throughout America. Thousands of teachers, social workers, police and industrial personnel, clergymen, professional persons and community leaders have gained useful information, invaluable insights, not infrequently a complete reorientation, and sometimes, most valuable of all, a new understanding of the significance of their own importance as persons in the struggle for improved human relations for all.

Thus, without fanfare and without grandiose claims or proclamations, the educational institutions of the country, with support and collaboration from community agencies, have assumed major responsibility in a strategically important area. Education has proved its worth. Human Relations or Civil Rights Commissions, founded in recent years, no longer think of education in condescending or disparaging terms. Indeed, today, most new professional workers in the field have availed themselves of the benefits of Human Relations Workshop training.

The year 1963 will see some 50 such summer workshops in operation, attended by a total of upwards of 2000 persons. These workshops are carefully staffed. A great many are "living-in" workshops, in which participants have the obvious values accruing to informal, continuous and residential association. Some centers have introduced "advanced" workshops. At least one, St. Louis University, has conducted a workshop in a foreign setting, seemingly with excellent results. While a perusal of this brochure will exhibit a stimulating variety of workshops both in content and approach, all are oriented to the basic and important endeavor of the education of the individual participant.

The Council on Human Relations is happy to present this 1963 roster of Human Relations Workshops. The Council publishes this brochure as a service to the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials (NAIRO). It acknowledges with gratitude the services of Miss Nell C. Henry, Council volunteer who compiled the materials contained in this brochure. It also acknowledges, with gratitude, the funds contributed by the Harry K. & Emma R. Fox Foundation which made possible this publication.

HUMAN RELATIONS CENTERS

ALBERT M. GREENFIELD CENTER FOR HUMAN RELATIONS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA (Philadelphia)

Charged with a three-fold responsibility, the University of Pennsylvania's Center encourages and carries out both pure and applied research, offers courses of instruction with special emphasis on the graduate level, and engages in community service. Fellowships are offered to doctoral students in allied areas on condition that they write their dissertations in the field of human relations. In addition to the staff's serving on advisory committees of intergroup agencies in housing, employment, public accommodations, and education, the Center also has an intern relationship with some of the city intergroup agencies. M. A. degree in Human Relations is granted.

CENTER FOR HUMAN RELATIONS AND COMMUNITY STUDIES OF NEW YORK UNIVERSITY (New York City)

At present, the program is entirely graduate in scope, with the exception of one course taught as an elective for persons specializing in the various helping professions. The program is built around four basic areas: a foundation course in human relations, a community laboratory course in which there is continuously operated a program in some New York neighborhood, a theory and philosophy course, and a thesis. There is considerable flexibility in the requirements in order to tailor-make a program to fit the unique needs of an individual. The Center places continued emphasis on applied research, consultation and training.

COMMUNITY TENSIONS CENTER OF SPRINGFIELD COLLEGE (Springfield, Massachusetts)

The Community Tensions Center concentrates on the instruction and study of intergroup relations. Since 1957 the Center has offered courses, conducted research, and performed consultative services in the areas of racial, ethnic, and religious relations.

A number of research projects have been undertaken on such topics as race awareness among preadolescent boys and the evaluation of films designed to reduce prejudice. In addition, periodic workshops, conferences and consultations for students, community and professional groups are held under the auspices of the Center. One such conference, for example, brought together clergymen, school administrators and intergroup workers to consider religion in education. A regional workshop in intergroup relations for youth serving agencies was planned in close coordination with the Center. Whenever possible, such activities involve students, in the conviction that they provide valuable learning situations.

The Center issues an Annual Report for each academic year, as well as occasional papers and reprints.

HUMAN RELATIONS CENTER OF BOSTON UNIVERSITY (Boston, Massachusetts)

Focused on that part of the spectrum of personal relations that extends from interpersonal relations through group, intraorganizational and intergroup relations, to community relations, Boston's areas of responsibility include instruction (seminare and field service projects), research (basic and applied), and community service (short-term and long-term training programs, and consultation to particular agencies involved with certain intergroup problems). Annual faculty conferences on relationshops between human relations studies and various problems of university instruction, research, and administration; the provision of voluntary "unstructured" groups designed to support self-examination; fellowships to outstanding graduate and professional students, and a "living-in" summer workshop round out the Boston program.

SOUTHWEST CENTER FOR HUMAN RELATIONS STUDIES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA (Norman, Okla.)

The basic purpose of the Human Relations Center is to provide opportunities for the study of human conflict and its resolution. To accomplish its purpose, the Center has three types of sub-goals:

EDUCATION — to develop educational opportunities and intergroup experiences at the adult and graduate levels for professional persons and lay leaders. This is done through institutes, conferences, workshops, seminars, and other educational programs throughout the regular school year, and in summer sessions.

CONSULTATION — to provide consultative services to organizations and committees on intergroup problems.

RESEARCH — to initiate and stimulate research in the field of human relations, to collect and disseminate research findings.

The work of the National Training Laboratories is part of a massive modern trend, falling under the head of behavioral science. It is at Bethel, Maine, that Kurt Lewin's pioneering idea for the analysis of face-to-face groups has been given a practical laboratory testing year after year since 1947. Beginning in mid-June, three sessions are held, each of two weeks' duration, for participants from all walks of life. It is the primary business of NTL to study group reactions, to alert members to what is wrong, and what they can do about it. The three main goals are to increase the sensitivity of the individual to his own role and his own responses and help him express complicated or even negative attitudes acceptably, to provide new skills for conducting and diagnosing group meetings, and to develop methods of participation and leadership. Additionally, the "Bethel pattern" has expanded into laboratory sessions running two weeks for professionals in various occupational fields. Planned in close co-operation with leaders in these fields, these laboratories are tailor-made programs for a particular occupational group, and are held annually in various locations throughout the country.

IN KENTUCKY

RESEARCH
SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
5 FORSYTH ST. N. W.
ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA

Commission on Human Rights
Commonwealth of Kentucky
168 Capitol Annex Building
Frankfort, Kentucky

The Role Of The Commission On Human Rights

KRS 19.040 (3) empowers the Commission on Human Rights to "receive and investigate complaints of discrimination and to recommend ways of eliminating any injustices occasioned thereby." All persons who are subjected to racial discrimination in any area of public life are encouraged to contact the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission may direct the complainant to the proper agency for redress or accept a complaint and proceed with an investigation.

Employment Opportunities

State Government

KRS 18.310 (1) forbids racial and religious discrimination in the employment practices of departments of State Government under the Merit System. Individuals who are denied employment because of race, color or religion by any such department should report the incident to the Commissioner of Personnel, Department of Personnel, Capitol Annex Building, Frankfort, Kentucky.

Federal Government

Executive Order 10925 forbids racial discrimination in the employment practices of agencies of the Federal Government. Violations of the Order should be reported directly to the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, Washington 25, D. C. within ninety days of the occurrence of the discriminatory act.

Private Industry

Executive Order 10925 forbids racial discrimination in the employment practices of private employers having contracts with the Federal Government. The Order applies to recruitment, hiring, upgrading, demotion, and dismissal of employees. Violations of the Order should be reported to the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity within ninety days of the occurrence of the discriminatory act.

Job Placement

A directive from the Federal Bureau of Employment Security forbids the managers of all local Employment Service offices to select or refer applicants on job orders containing racially discriminatory specifications. Individuals denied employment by Federal contractors after referral by a local Employment Service office, should report the incident to the Employment Service manager who is required to assist in the filing of a complaint with the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

Violations of the directive by Kentucky Employment Service personnel should be reported to the Director, Kentucky Employment Service, Capitol Annex Building, Frankfort, Kentucky.

Equal Service In Public Accommodations

Public Facilities

The Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States of America requires that all places of public accommodation owned or operated by a State or a municipality be open to all members of the public without regard to race or color. "Public accommodations" includes parks, playgrounds, swimming pools, recreation centers, public buildings, restrooms in public buildings, cafeterias located in public buildings or on publicly owned land and all other facilities open to the general public. The right to equal service in publicly owned or operated places of public accommodation, if denied, may be enforced through court action. Denials of service in such places should be reported to the Commission on Human Rights.

Hospitals

The Hill-Burton Act forbids racial discrimination in the admission policies of hospitals receiving funds for construction under that Act.

KRS 216.450 (24) forbids the denial of emergency care in any hospital on the basis of race, creed, or color. Instances of racial discrimination in hospital services should be reported to: Hospital and Medical Facilities Director, Department of Health, Frankfort, Kentucky.

Transportation

Part 180 (a) of the Regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission forbids racial discrimination in the seating of passengers on interstate buses and in the operation of terminal facilities. Violations of the regulations should be reported within fifteen days of their occurrence to the Secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington 25, D. C.

Housing Opportunities

Federally Assisted Housing

The President's Executive Order on Equal Opportunity in Housing requires that the benefits of Federal housing programs and assistance be made available to all on a nondiscriminatory basis. The Order applies to housing that is --

(1) Owned or operated by the Federal Government;

(2) Provided in whole or in part with the aid of Federal grants, advances or contributions.

(3) Provided in whole or in part by loans insured, guaranteed, or otherwise secured by the credit of the Federal Government.

(4) Provided by the development or redevelopment of real property made available by a State or local public agency through Federal financial assistance for slum clearance or urban renewal.

Each Federal department and agency will be primarily responsible for obtaining compliance with the purposes of the Order as it applies to operations and programs which it administers.

The regulations of the Veterans' Administration and the Federal Housing Administration require that houses available for sale as a result of foreclosure proceedings be sold without regard to race or color. Veterans' Administration, Federal Housing Administration and Public Housing Administration offices maintain lists of such houses. The lists are open for public inspection. Sales are generally consummated through real estate brokers in particular communities. In case of a broker's refusal to cooperate, the house may be purchased through the local offices. Inquiries should be addressed to: Loan Guarantee Section, Veterans' Administration Regional Office, 1405 West Broadway, Louisville, Kentucky or Property Management Section, Federal Housing Administration, Madrid Building, Louisville, Kentucky.

Education

The Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States of America forbids racial discrimination in the admission practices of public schools, colleges, and universities. Any person who is denied, for racial reasons, the right to enter a public institution of learning may secure his right to admission through appropriate court action.

KRS 161.800 requires local school superintendents, in the suspension of teachers' contracts by reason of decreased enrollment of pupils, or by reason of suspension of schools or territorial changes affecting the district, to give preference, within each teaching field affected, to teachers on continuing contracts and to teachers who have greater seniority. Teachers whose continuing contracts are suspended have the right of restoration in continuing service status in the order of seniority of service in the district if and when teaching positions become vacant or are created for which any of such teachers are or become qualified.

On the basis of this statute the Attorney General has stated the opinion that in the reduction of teachers "the school district must give priority to and retain those teachers who are better qualified" by state certification "and who have greater seniority, without reference to race or color."

KRS 161.100 requires district boards of education to satisfy the State Board of Education that it is impossible to secure qualified teachers in a school under the control of the district board before the State Board may issue emergency certificates to otherwise unqualified teachers.

Qualified teachers whose rights are violated under either of these statutes should report such violations to the Superintendent of Public Instruction, State Office Building, Frankfort, Kentucky.

How To File A Complaint

I. An aggrieved person makes and signs a complaint on a form provided by the Commission. The Commission makes complaint forms available by mail or personal delivery and renders any assistance which might be required by the aggrieved person.

II. The complaint consists of the name, address, and telephone number, if any, of the parties involved, a statement of the acts complained of, and the signature of the aggrieved person.

III. The completed form is mailed or personally delivered to the office of the Commission, 168 Capitol Annex Building, Frankfort, Kentucky.

How The Commission Processes Complaints

1. Upon the filing of a complaint it is assigned to a member of the Commission staff.

2. The Commission staff undertakes a complete and objective investigation of all the facts.

3. If on the face of the complaint it appears that the Commission is without power to proceed with an investigation, or if the investigation shows that probable cause for crediting the allegations of the complaint does not exist, the Executive Director may dismiss the complaint. The aggrieved person may appeal from this decision to the entire Commission.

4. If the investigation indicates probable cause for crediting the allegations of the complaint, the staff endeavors to work out a satisfactory adjustment between the parties. If such efforts are successful the respondent will be encouraged to enter into a conciliation agreement, subject to the approval of the Commission.

5. Should efforts at conciliation fail, the Commission may schedule the complaint for a public hearing. All the evidence is put into the record at this time and all parties may be represented by counsel.

6. Following a review of the evidence, the Commission makes a final recommendation to the parties.

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
GEORGIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

October 1962 - October 1963

Looking back over the year 1962-1963 there are sights and sounds and feelings as well as the statistics that follow in this report. I stood watching and listening at midnight in Savannah as a line of 2500 marchers chanted Free-e-dom----What do we want----- Free-e-dom--Freedom. One noon I suddenly found myself shouting in the middle of a mob that had assembled unbelievably quickly. I learned the feeling of mass hysteria.

In Americus I saw on the faces of the young people leaving the jail--an expression far deeper and more wonderful than a broad smile---also I saw the purple anger of the sheriff. After singing at mass meetings of the Movement in Albany, Brunswick, Rome, Augusta and Savannah, I held hands in a circle of 80 of our own members at Camp Reese as we sang together for the first time, "We shall overcome". I saw the faces and heard the words of high school students proving their determination and their ability to leap over the gaps of deprivation and really overcome.

I saw the sudden realization in the faces of white and Negro members when they discovered a new true friend who had the same fears and the same yearnings and the same loneliness. I felt the deep ache of bitterness and hopelessness in the faces and words of people in Albany; the frustrations and anger and disappointment at failure in making progress in southwest Georgia; the staggering feeling of humility when again and again I heard, "you'll never know what it meant to us that you were here"; the inadequacy of words as we tried again and again to answer, "why the urgency? Now is not the time". I had a deepening of the conviction that a strong statewide interracial organization is essential to the future of the state.

Program Activities of the Georgia Council Included:

I. EDUCATION:

This year has seen an increase in the number of schools that have desegregated. In many cases the Georgia staff and board and local councils have assisted. Tokenism exists in each case.

Colleges:

University of Georgia	5
Georgia Tech	6
Georgia State	7
Emory	9
Armstrong	1
Savannah State	1 (white)

University of Georgia Extension, Columbus	1
Mercer	3
Valdosta State	2
Oglethorpe	1
Total	36

Schools, Public:

Atlanta	153
Athens	7
Savannah	19
Brunswick	6
Total	185

For the first time school boards have desegregated, and others are planning to desegregate, without court order. This new approach creates slightly different problems. Some school board members seem to believe that voluntary action gives them greater degree of control than risking a court order. The General tendency is to begin with the 12th grade and proceed 1 year at a time. Columbus plans to start with only the 12th grade in September 1964, even though there is no high school on the military base for the 500 high school children of service men, (38 Negro). About $1 million is given yearly to Columbus by the federal government. The council hopes to be able to encourage the school board to move faster.

There is a Macon school desegregation case in the courts at the present time. Augusta is preparing for desegregation.

The council in Savannah played an important role in helping the city prepare for the opening of schools by bringing together organizational individuals who formed OPTICS (Operation for Peaceful Transition in Chatham Schools). The council is helping tutor the transfer students who wish and need help in their school work.

The council in Brunswick helped from its formation to create a climate of acceptance and in many instances a desire for real integration. With the desegregation of schools some of the white students were looking forward with pleasure and excitement to the new experience in their living. However, a youth group of the Citizens Council was also being organized. The six students who were admitted report that the faculty is most helpful and that some students are friendly. In this town where good will and understanding have been most evident, where change has taken place without demonstrations and a minimum of court cases, there is still much work to be done before all children receive the maximum education in a free society.

We hope that great effort will be expended in Brunswick, Savannah, Athens and Atlanta and in other cities as desegregation takes place, to persuade school authorities and the community to move faster and to persuade parents of Negro children to allow them to transfer. Much staff time was spent during the summer in working with parents of children who wished to transfer.

In Georgia real integration is not going to take place without thoughtful effort on the part of citizens. More organized effort is needed in planning and working in the education field.

Trade Schools:

One school that moved quickly from tokenism is the Smith-Hughes Vocational School in Atlanta. From one student in January 1963 to 51 in September 1963. There is reason to believe that when the new Atlanta $6 million area Vocational and Technical School is opened the faculty and students will be truly integrated.

It is reported that the Valdosta trade school admitted two students for the September term who failed to attend. Four Negro students are attending the DeKalb County Vocational school. Many young people have unsuccessfully sought to enter the Rome school, a case is now in the courts which we believe will open this new all white school. Too many plans are being made throughout Georgia for separate trade schools. In Albany, Columbus, Macon and Savannah separate schools now exist. These schools follow the old unequal pattern. Many courses taught in the white schools are not offered in the Negro. The new schools although built with state and local funds will be operated with federal funds. It is sincerely hoped that Atlanta will set an example and other cities will see the necessity for good vocational and technical training for all our young people.

II. EMPLOYMENT:

If the Negro is to take advantage of the opening in employment he must receive better training. A larger number of students must be admitted not only to the new trade schools but to in-service training, specialized courses such as the government training and retraining programs.

State Employment Offices:

In many of these programs the state employment offices play a key role, either by deciding on programs to be offered or testing and selecting trainees. In spite of attempts on the state level as well as on the local level in several localities the practice in employment offices remains one of discrimination. With the exception of Atlanta, the employment officers follow the custom of the South in spite of the practically 100% financial support of the federal government. Outside of Atlanta we have found no Negro employee over the rank of janitor. Separate waiting rooms, though not marked, are the practice. This bottleneck of employment services in the state will have to be changed before Georgia can move ahead economically.

Employment in Retail Establishments:

In several towns employment for Negroes is moving in retail businesses. Macon has been the most successful city in this area with close to 200 Negroes working as cashiers, bookkeepers and clerks. Cooperation of many organizations, the Council one of the chief groups, carefully planned training programs, placement services, as well as the encouragement and pressure necessary to open the doors. Augusta has a few employees on main street Savannah a few, Atlanta a few.

The Georgia Staff has worked with the "Operation Breadbasket" in Atlanta, a project of Negro ministers to open employment in certain industries, such as bakeries and soft drink companies. We have learned the necessity for proper training, sound negotiating, cooperation within the groups. There has been success in providing new jobs and in upgrading old employees. In one bakery over half the present employees are Negro in a variety of positions.

Government Contracts:

Various councils in the state have helped in reminding companies with Government Contracts that there are certain regulations. Although there has been no large undertakings by councils, there has been sound progress. Encourgement offered the contractors and in some instances actual recruitment of personnel has helped open new doors.

Military Installations:

Some positive results have come from contacts made at Turner Air Force Base and the Marine Depot at Albany. Local Negroes now have a chance to know when jobs are available and when tests will be given. Council complaints caused U.S. investigations and changes in practices. However, local graduates are greatly handicapped by poor preparation. Our Councils have proven that with a minimum of professional help, with facts concerning training, available jobs, various regulations, constructive work can be and has been done. Often a letter, a question, a bit of encouragement, a complaint registered, makes the difference.

III. LIBRARIES:

Library boards all over the state have been meeting and discussing the problem of integration. Again Albany has served the state. Not even Albany wanted a closed library and Albany seems the only town to want to have the library open on a stand up basis.

However, again there are various methods used to discourage Negroes who might take advantage of this facility. Rome though allowing full use of books still resists an interracial meeting in the library. Valdosta voted to open the library but kept the decision a secret. Griffin voted to open the main library but started plans for a new Negro branch. As far as we have been able to ascertain none of the newly integrated libraries have integrated their staffs. Various councils haveencouraged the use of this essential facility. In Georgia's dual school system 440 school libraries are available to Negro children and 1188 for white children. The number of school libraries is unequal but the difference of quality is even greater. Library facilities must be opened, old habits must be changed so that the total public enjoys the benefits of tax monies collected from the total public.

The following towns have desegregated their libraries: Atlanta, Savannah, Augusta, Macon, Tifton, Brunswick, Valdosta, Albany, Rome, Columbus and Griffin.

IV. PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS:

Hotels:

Savannah desegregated its hotels after the pressure of a summer of demonstrations, violence and negotiations. The Council staff played an important role in a final settlement of the dispute. Two of the minor Atlanta hotels are desegregated. The major Atlanta hotels are open for conventions with a limited number of Negro members.

Restaurants:

The Convention Bureau reports that this limited plan has not been the help they anticipated. Conventions want all their members to be free from possible embarrassments outside the hotel as well as in. The restaurant desegregation in Atlanta and Savannah has been a battle ground with pickets both for and against.

Lunch Counters:

Lunch counters and tea rooms in department stores are open in the following cities: Savannah, Atlanta, Macon, Augusta, Columbus, Athens, Brunswick and Griffin.

V. THEATERS:

Down town theaters are open in Atlanta, Savannah, Columbus and Athens. Attempted entrance in Americus theater caused the arrest of many young Negroes. Four "outsiders" were held under an old Georgia law on a charge of insurrection, which carries a possible death penalty. This was declared unconstitutional on November 1, 1963 and the young men freed. They are out on bail.

The southwest section of the state, Lee, Terrell, Baker and Sumter, has had no desegregation of public accommodations with the possible exception of bus stations. The general white population still maintains massive resistance. The attention of the Governor and other public officials has been called on several occasions to the possibility and probability of violence in this area of the state. The local public officials in Americus as in Terrell County and Albany are still determined that all the "trouble" is from "outsiders" and are determined to "keep the Negro in his place". The result is a complex of deep anger, bitterness and hurt and a determination for right and non-violence on the part of many Negroes

There is a difference in near by Columbus. Our Council member are doing a superb job in negotiating and pushing for progress in this city. The opening of theaters being the latest accomplishment.

VI. BUS STATIONS:

In spite of the ICC rulings there are some bus restaurants who still refuse to serve Negroes. The Greyhound Station in Griffin, Georgia is one example. Arrests have been made. Complaints have been registered. The only change has been the closing of the counter in the Negro waiting room. After several complaints registered by the Council the restaurant at the Vidalia bus station has closed. In all stations discriminatory signs are down but unfortunately it is hard to break habits. Negroes still wait on the "dirty" side and are fearful of sitting in the once white only waiting rooms. Throughout Georgia the Council is encouraging Negroes to use these open facilities, not to stand in the rain on the outside, but to take the rightful seat or shelter.

VII. PUBLIC PARKS:

The 36 state parks follow the usual segregated pattern, separate and very unequal. The state park director, the Jekyll Island Authority (which has broad powers) all refuse to consider negotiations. The reply to our questions is "why dont your people use the parks set aside for them". The NAACP has a suit in the courts at the present time directed toward the opening of Jekyll. It is hoped the decision on this case will affect all our parks. The following cities have desegregated city parks: Savannah, Macon, Atlanta, Rome and Augusta. Brunswick through the united efforts of the Council and the NAACP have desegregated the amusement facilities on Saint Simons Island. The only swimming pools that are opened are in Atlanta.

Golf Courses:

The following golf courses have been desegregated: Atlanta,

Macon, Savannah and Gainesville. No incident of unpleasantness has been reported.

Mayor's Bi-racial Committees:

Although the appointment of a bi-racial advisory committee is no answer in itself, it is a help in establishing communications and increasing understanding and in suggesting solutions to problems. We are encouraging cities to establish these advisory groups. The following cities have appointed committees: Valdosta, Columbus, Brunswick, Athens and Augusta.

VIII. LOCAL COUNCILS:

With the exception of our youngest Council, Albany, the general health of the Local Councils is good. Members are becoming more knowledgeable and more active. Albany is a sick city. Here discouragement is at its depth. Help has been given to various individuals and groups in the city. Sincere communications need to be opened. There is a consistent growth in all Councils. Total membership has grown from 307 to 1023.

Griffin has organized a Council this year. Help has been given in many ways but at the present it is not to be affiliated with the state group.

New Contacts:

During the year many contacts were made throughout South Georgia. Mailings were sent to a selected group of business men. The following towns were visited: Waycross, Valdosta, Tifton, Dawson, Cordele, Warner Robbins, Statesboro and Americus.

It was disappointing that no new Councils were formed in these towns. The fears of economic reprisals of both white and Negro and the fear of any "outsider" are the chief obstacles. It is difficult to measure the success or failure of the person to person contacts in the hard core area of South Georgia. The eagerness of some people to talk and tell of their fears and problems, and the interest in certain printed materials make us believe the time well spent even though few new names appear on the rolls.

IX. CONFERENCES:

Three very successful statewide conferences were held during the year. The annual meeting and workshop was held in Atlanta October 27, 1962, 42 were present. A three day meeting at the Episcopal Camp Ground near Brunswick on April 24, 25 and 26, 1963, attracted 80 members. On October 4 and 5, 1963, a joint conference with the Alabama Council was held at Tuskegee, Alabama to help the Councils plan winter programs. Sixty three Georgia members attended.

X. GROWTH OF OPPOSITION:

The KKK, the White Citizens Council, the States Rights groups, the Conservatives, the Birchers seem to be strengthening their groups. In Savannah the Conservatives and other groups of upper middle class white's as well as three groups of KKK or similar groups were active throughout the summer's unrest. In Brunswick the Citizens Council seemed to be behind the injunction to stop the desegregation of the schools. (The decision of Judge Scarlett to stop the voluntary desegregation was over ruled a few days later by the U.S. District Court of Appeals.) In Columbus the Birchers and the Citizens Council have been active. During the summer when the NAACP youth group was sitting in in the library it was the upper class white teen agers who caused the violence. In Rome Lester Maddox' PASS (People's Association for Selective Shopping) has been enlisting members and has successfully frightened the merchants with threats of white boycotts. Mrs. J. Milton Lent, executive director of the "Conservatives" in Savannah has enlarged her organization to a statewide group. The number of people enrolled in segregationist organizations may not be large in numbers, but the groups are strengthening their organizations in Georgia.

X. PUBLIC OFFICIALS:

With the new administration coming into the Capitol, special effort has been given to setting up a working relationship with as many of the newly elected or appointed officials as possible. The Governor has received us cordially. He is not seeking to curtail our work. However, at this point he is not willing to support any integration activity. He has appointed two Negroes to the new Education Commission, Dr. Lionel Newsom and Dr. H. E. Tate. He has appointed a committee of 100 committee women to study "status of women". Four of these are Negro. There has been no other board appointments. Four Negroes have been appointed fire inspectors. The discriminatory signs are down in the main Capitol building but remain in the other state office buildings. The National Guard has received one Negro member. The chairman of the State Democratic Committee has appointed two Negroes on the State Executive Committee Mr. James Dunlap, a Sanders appointee, chairman of the Board of Regents shows great concern over the development of an improved system of higher education for all. Mrs. Bruce Shaeffer as Director of the Department of Family and Children's Services and Mr. Jim Parham as Chief of Children's Services, bring a breath of fresh air to the old highly discriminatory Welfare Department. The Council is hoping for new practices on the local level. Contacts with the Labor Department and the Parks Department have been unsatisfactory.

XI. FINANCES.

The constant worry of staff is how to have time to do fund raising and at the same time plan and execute program. A trip to New York in May helped us get foundation support to help meet our budget. See finance report attached.

XII. OTHER ORGANIZATIONS:

The Council is constantly in touch and works cooperatively with many organizations. The help from the Southern Regional Council cannot be over emphasized. They are essential to our operation. The Anti-Defamation League, the American Jewish Committee, the NAACP, SCLC, SNCC, United Church Women of Georgia, YWCA, ACLU, are some of those with whom we have worked during the past year. We see little evidence of duplication of efforts in the cities and towns where we have been working. In fact, more interracial activities need to be organized outside the Atlanta area. There is a desire and need for an Urban League in several places. There is a desire and need for a truly United Church Women. There are towns that need NAACP. There is a need for many bridges across the huge gulf of separation in Georgia.

XIII. PUBLIC RELATIONS:

Many phone calls and many visitors come into the Council office seeking information concerning phases of our work; writers come wanting a quick evaluation of conditions and background for articles. The interpretation of our work is time consuming but important.

XIV. CONCLUSION:

It has been a year of progress. Violence and brutality in several places in the state gave deep pain and heartache. Inability to get white business leaders to realize the urgency of the situation gave great frustrations. Lack of understanding between people working for our same democratic goal gave discouragement. The abundance of good will, forgiveness, trust, and willingness to work with little thought of self, proved that an organization of lay members such as the Georgia Council on Human Relations can be helpful in this time of revolution.

We have examined the balance sheet of the Georgia Council on Human Relations as of September 30, 1963, and the related statements of operations for the period October 1, 1962 through September 30, 1963. Our examination was made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards, and accordingly included such tests of internal control and of the accounting records and such other auditing procedures as we considered necessary in the circumstances.

In our opinion, the accompanying balance sheet and statements of operations present fairly the financial position of the Georgia Council on Human Relations at September 30, 1963, and the results of its transactions for the period then ended, in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles for religious and educational organizations and applied on a basis consistent with those of preceding periods.

Since 1918, when the first Southern Publicity Committee was formed — the forerunner of today's Georgia Council on Human Relations — the face of America has been transformed.

But some things — basic things — remain unchanged:

Human needs remain unchanged. We share alike the need for a welcome which goes beyond mere acceptance; for respect which goes beyond admittance; for tolerance which goes beyond toleration.

Human strivings for justice remain unchanged. This was the motive of the small group which assembled forty years ago. Though their goals were limited to the seeking of equal facilities and anti-lynch legislation, this aim required tremendous courage at that time.

This striving for justice is our motive today. Our goals have broadened. Working within the framework of the law, we seek full equality for all citizens in a society which benefits all and leaves no man a victim.

Here is what the Georgia Council on Human Relations has done:

We have adhered to the principle that racial problems must be solved by both races.

We have created opportunities for local people to meet as peers to discuss and solve their problems.

We have spoken out in support of law and order.

We have established councils in Georgia's eight largest cities, and have advised and counselled city officials and citizens in communities where our councils are not located.

Working cooperatively with local organizations seeking the same goals, we have investigated abuses and denials, negotiated grievances, and encouraged the implementation of the 1954 decision in its broadest concept.

Here is what needs to be done:

We need to enlarge our base of operation through more councils throughout the state, more members and more funds to facilitate travel.

We need to publicize our organization and its aims through more literature.

The Georgia Council on Human Relations is a voluntary association which depends upon the participation and financial support of concerned individuals, like you, to extend its program. We employ no high powered professionals to carry out the program of the Council. It is a membership organization. Ours must be a simple person-to-person appeal to the sense of morality and fair play of thoughtful Georgians. Please fill in the coupon on the reverse side.

WHAT IT IS . . .

WHAT IT BELIEVES . . .

WHAT IT SEEKS TO DO . . .

an introduction to

THE VIRGINIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS . . .

THE COUNCIL . . . is a non-profit organization open to all people who believe that Southerners can—and will—work through their problems by constructive, cooperative action; works to bring understanding and acceptance of the legitimate aspirations of all of the people of Virginia, regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin; emphasizes the techniques of fact-finding, education, publicity, negotiation, and persuasion; has a membership of over 2,000 drawn from all the principal religious groups, from both major political parties, from various educational, economic, and social levels, and includes both public officials and private citizens;

cooperates with the Southern Regional Council and with the Councils on Human Relations of the other Southern states in approaching South-wide problems on the same basis.

WE BELIEVE . . . that all men are entitled to equal respect, equal rights, and equal freedom in the enjoyment of all facilities which are offered for public use, and that laws and customs that deny these basic values to any group are an offense against God's law and against the ideals to which America is dedicated;

that free speech, free discussion, and freedom of association must at all costs be preserved, unhampered by any public policy or concerted private action that tends to intimidate individuals or to deprive people acting through lawful organizations of their civil and constitutional liberties; that the question of human relations becomes, in larger terms, the question of world peace; and that we cannot conscientiously or effectively advocate to the community of nations ideals which we are unable or unwilling to practice in our own communities.

WE SEEK . . . to create in Virginia an atmosphere in which independent citizens may meet, counsel, and work together toward overcoming the fears and the customs that stand in the way of a more humane and democratic America; to foster and maintain active communication among responsible members of various racial and other groups to the end that misunderstanding and ill-will shall be avoided and a sense of mutual trust and fair play shall be established and widely extended; to establish councils on human relations in our local communities as rallying points for all citizens who wish to approach our common problems in a spirit of reason and open-mindedness.

WE OFFER . . . opportunities to participate in the programs of eighteen local councils or cooperating groups throughout Virginia, and to support the state-wide program; practical assistance from professionally-trained leaders and from experienced consultants in the study of local problems, in the organization of new local councils, and in the planning of workshops and special programs;

information, educational aids, and the sharing of experience with respect to such specific problem areas as School Desegregation, Fair Employment Practices, Housing, Inter-cultural Relations, Public Facility Desegregation, and Education on Legal and Voting Rights and Registration.

Interracial - H R Councils

The Jefferson Chapter of the VIRGINIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

What is it?

What does it do?

What does it advocate?

Our Origin and Purpose . . .

In the spring of 1961, a group of University students, mostly Southerners, decided that an educational institution of such stature in the nation and in the South as the University of Virginia should not be devoid of an organization dedicated to the solution of problems arising out of relations between majority and minority groups within contemporary society. The result of this decision was the formation of the Jefferson Chapter of the Virginia Council on Human Relations.

The Council on Human Relations, whose constitution was approved by the University's Student Council in the fall of 1961, is a non-profit, non-sectarian, non-political meeting ground for students and faculty members whose diverse views on specific political and governmental issues are reconciled in a consensus of agreement on one fundamental principle: that all persons should be dealt with and evaluated, personally and legally, on their individual merits, without regard to race, creed or color.

Moderation and Individualism . . .

Because the segregation-integration controversy has since 1954 posed the greatest problems of human relations to the South (if not, indeed, to the entire nation), it is not surprising that the Council should find itself most concerned with that issue. In times when emotion often subdues reason, when nothing is needed so much as a calm, moderate voice rising above the cacaphony of extremists on all sides, the Jefferson Chapter of the Virginia Council on Human Relations offers to the concerned University student an outlet for his desire to ease, rather than magnify, the strains of transition in Southern society vis-a-vis the race question.

Devoted as it is to the concept of individual worth, trying to avoid the injustice of stereotyping, the Council feels no uneasiness in revealing its distaste for segregation or discrimination of any type which ignores the capabilities and dignity of individuals. Thus, on the personal level, the Council fosters inter-racial and inter-religious communications, convinced that only experience with a wide range of personalities can lead one to a wise judgment about the valid criteria for discrimination.

Similarly, the Council supports the incorporation of this attitude toward individuals into the policies of collective private groups and enterprises such as restaurants, civic clubs, etc. — not through legal coercion which merely redistributes the general burden of injustice and endangers the freedom of all, but through persuasion (not threats) aimed at procuring voluntary acknowledgement of the essential rightness of the individualistic approach.

Equal Opportunities . . .

On the legal side, the Council opposes laws which interpose the power of the state between the individual and what he could accomplish if the determinants of his success were his own talents, skills and character, rather than his race, religion or socio-economic background. Though the Council itself takes no direct part in politics, it follows that Council members would generally favor legislation which removes arbitrary ceilings on individual accomplishments — ceilings constructed of faulty building materials. The Council, moreover, harbors no pre-conceived opinion on what facilities, services or enterprises in society should be public; but it does suggest that those which are public should either (1) be of benefit to all persons, or (2) be of benefit to all persons in accordance with criteria which apply to all persons equally.

Some Specific Points: . . .

State laws which place blanket restrictions on interpersonal contact are viewed by the Council as infringements of individual freedom. The Council does not assume that all federal civil rights legislation is a priori good, just or necessary — the same might be said of State or local enactments in this field — and members of the Council may disagree over whether such federal legislation is Constitutional in the same way that non-members may debate the point. The Council supports enforced integration in some areas no more than it supports enforced segregation in other areas, and for the same reasons.

The Council is not unmindful of the rights of a majority within a democracy, though in supporting the rights of a minority it strives to prevent that "tyranny of the majority" against which Jefferson so eloquently warned. The Council does not pretend that public arrogance toward past or prevailing social and legal customs is an acceptable substitute for personal labors toward changing those customs which are not consistent with an individualistic value system; as a corollary, the Council finds it neither fruitful nor tolerant to attack all who may disagree with its aims as "bigots." The Council does not consider the destruction of property rights as a necessary or desirable pre-requisite to the advancement of individual opportunities.

Strength In Diversity . . .

All of this having been said, it becomes clear that as the Council on Human Relations is described on bases farther removed from the person-to-person level, that description reflects less precisely its essence. We reject any classification of our collective body as politically "conservative" or "liberal". The fundamental principle stated in the opening section of this presentation is the only one on which all members will probably agree, and adherence to it is the only philosophic requirement for good membership. This is why, when we use phrases like "The Council believes", etc., we are describing only a consensus of the membership or what can logically be deduced from the base of intellectual freedom which the Council has built into it.

A Posititve Program . . .

The Council endeavors to present to the University community regular programs of the discussion or lecture type, making use of qualified speakers from within and without the University. While we do not necessarily endorse the views expressed by these speakers, we do offer an uncensored forum for their expression. We are particularly interested in bringing to the University whenever possible persons who are outstanding representatives of their general points of view.

Meetings are held at least once a month during the regular school session and are publicized in the Cavalier Daily; members, moreover, are notified of all meetings by mail. Our major public programs, which usually follow the business meetings, are also publicized in other Charlottesville news media.

From time to time the Council may undertake special projects which are approved by the membership, such as conducting opinion polls, discussing the unique problems of Negro students with local businessmen, etc. Throughout the year, though, the Council performs one of its most valuable functions by simply extending the hand of welcome and assistance to students who are members of minority groups — not by imposing itself upon any student but by giving all students an equal opportunity for membership and constructive work in the organization.

You Can Help . . .

We solicit your inquiries and suggestions for ways in which we may be of service to the University community and to the people of Virginia and the South, whose best interests we — by our geographical setting and membership composition — are most directly hoping to advance. Finally, we invite you to join the Jefferson Chapter of the Council on Human Relations if you are in agreement with our principle and would like to augment our efforts.

MINUTES, SOUTHERN INTERAGENCY CONFERENCE
ATLANTA, GEORGIA - JANUARY 3-4, 1963

Administrative.

Suggestions of the Steering Committee on several matters were approved: (1) henceforth costs for the social hour will be pro rated among those attending each meeting, excepting any persons who inform the secretary that he or she does not wish to share in this cost; (2) for the current meeting participants will be billed by the secretariat for their meals and other costs; (3) for future Atlanta meetings, where costs can be accurately estimated, participants will be charged in advance in the nature of a registration fee. When meetings are not held in Atlanta procedures will still be determined by the host agency and the conditions involved.

The Steering Committee, acting on a formal request from the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, recommended to the full group that that agency be invited to participate. Following discussion, it was voted that SNCC be invited to participate in future meetings. Another recommendation by the Steering Committee, that agencies not be represented by persons receiving salaries from organizations and agencies not invited to participate, was disapproved by the full Conference.

In response to the suggested need for formal structure to cover certain areas, it was agreed that a committee be formed for the purpose of proposing to the Spring meeting a minimum structure. It was emphasized that the committee's mandate is to suggest a minimum structure. Jean Fairfax, Vincent Harding, Ruby Hurley, Charles Wittenstein, and Paul Anthony were selected and agreed to serve, with Anthony as chairman.

Conference on "The Ethical Demands of Integration."

This meeting, recently held in Nashville under the co-sponsorship of the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen and the Southern Regional Council, was discussed in some detail by those present who had participated. Individuals were urged to share their reactions with the sponsors.

Discussion of National Conference on Religion and Race.

Interagency participants who will be present were asked to form themselves as a committee to meet during the national conference and begin thinking about problems of follow-up in relation to the way SIC agencies operate; a report to the Spring meeting was requested. Wyatt Walker will serve as chairman.

Fund for Rebuilding of Burned Churches.

Wyatt Walker reported on decisions of a meeting of groups receiving donations toward the rebuilding of burned churches in southwest Georgia. The first Sunday in February has been selected as ground-breaking date and successive services will be held at the sites of the three churches. Four churches were burned in this area of Georgia; the congregation of one decided not to share in the rebuilding fund. Approximately $63,000 cash is now available and will be used for building actual physical facilities. It is hoped that lighting fixtures, pews, communion tables, etc., will be donated when they are needed.

Report on Alabama - Norman Jimerson, Alabama Council on Human Relations.

Politically, the one big factor in the state is the election of Gov. Wallace. In November the people of Birmingham voted to change the form of city government from a commission to a Mayor-Council by a margin of some 700 votes. Alabama has also become the first state to have its legislature reapportioned by federal court order. There has been significant voter registration activity. Little change in traditional patterns of Negro employment has occurred during the last year. Police brutality and blatant Ku Klux Klan activity continue.

In the schools, within the next few months a suit will probably be filed in Huntsville to desegregate Madison Pike School, which is contiguous with Redstone Arsenal. Reportedly, legal counsel has been retained on behalf of from five to fifteen Negro students, children of military personnel. The University of Alabama has announced that it has received applications from three Negroes; registration for spring quarter was closed before applications from the three were considered. The president of Auburn University has announced that he has received applications from Negroes. The University of Alabama will very likely have a Negro student by September, 1963; Auburn will likely face a court suit by next fall. A suit to desegregate Birmingham public schools was heard in October, 1962, and it is anticipated that there will be a ruling sometime this Spring. It is a matter of speculation as to whether the court will order actual desegregation of Birmingham schools in September, or merely submission of a plan for desegregation.

Some discussion of what agency efforts might be most significant in the Alabama--and particularly the Birmingham--situation followed.

It was decided that the reinstitution of emergency meetings of SIC in connection with crisis situations is desirable. The group agreed to devote the major portion of the regular Spring SIC meeting to the Birmingham situation, meeting in Atlanta and bringing in resource persons from Birmingham.

Other.

A brief report on Albany emphasized the feelings of hopelessness and frustration on the part of Negroes in that city. The Georgia Council on Human Relations and SNCC are, so far as is known, the only groups now doing work there. In surrounding towns, however, there is apparently not so much fear.

The Oxford, Mississippi insurrection and some of its effects were discussed, and members of a Quaker team which went to Mississippi reported their experiences. One of the purposes and accomplishments of the Quaker mission was to raise questions with some people in responsible positions about what next steps they might take to pull the state out of its present tragic situation. It was observed that in Mississippi there had been virtually no place for moderates to take a stand.

In a short report on progress of the Voter Education Project, it was noted that October, November, and December are fairly slack months due to schedules of registration offices. Most groups encouraging registration are prepared to resume full activity this month. Programs in Huntsville (Madison County) and Birmingham, Alabama, and in Florida were mentioned. The NAACP is conducting a program in the Gulfport, Laurel, and Hattiesburg areas of Mississippi, and in East Texas, not, however, with VEP funds. A new staff member will join VEP as of February 1; preparation of materials to stimulate registration is planned after his arrival.

Suggestions for future agenda were brought up throughout the meeting and SIC participants were urged to send further suggestions to the chairman.

High School Program Stresses Involvement in Social Concerns

The High School program of the American Friends Service Committee, now being developed in the Southeast, is part of a worldwide program designed to educate for responsible world citizenship, to witness to certain religious truths which the Committee believes to be relevant to life in these times, and to relieve human suffering.

The primary purpose of the program, under the direction of William Dreyer in this region, is to provide an opportunity for high school age people to study, analyze and to discuss the economic, social, and political problems of today not only to be better informed but to find the implications of non-violent approaches to these problems.

Since one of the purposes of the program is to maintain a free platform where controversial issues can be discussed by people of diverging opinions, resource people used in the program often-times are themselves controversial figures. In the program, however, every attempt is made to bring a balance of ideas. It is also a purpose of the program to bring together people from a variety of national, religious, economic and racial backgrounds so that the dignity inherent in everyone may be given recognition, and an opportunity provided for democratic living.

In the Southeastern region, the High School program is specifically charged

College Program Seeks Wider Participation In Growing Projects

Under the leadership of Don Irish, chairman, the College Program of the American Friends Service Committee in the Southeastern region is currently expanding its activities into new areas, notably in South Carolina.

Irish, sociologist on a temporary research assignment at the University of North Carolina, was elected chairman of the College Program Committee this past fall.

With Richard Ramsey as staff director, the program meantime continues its widespread activities in Piedmont North Carolina and plans are underway for joint College-Peace Education seminars. Projected into the summer of this year are plans for Voter registration and Interns in Community Service activities in areas yet to be announced.

New Focus Planned

Ramsay pointed out that the College program would give special attention to work in the field of race relations, emphasizing that the focus should be on anticipating racial crises rather than moving into a tension situation after it has developed. With this in mind, special programs may be initiated in Mississippi and Alabama as well as in South Carolina.

Of special importance in the College program is its weekend and summer work experience offered to college students. A consistent effort is carried on to draw into the program students from small, comparatively "unsophisticated" campuses.

In the summer of 1962, the College program sponsored a ten-week project of Interns in Community Service,

Two New Peace Interns Assigned to Southeast

Two interns have been appointed to the Southeeastern region's Peace Education program, it has been announced by B. Tartt Bell, Executive Secretary.

Ralph Zeiss

The interns, Ralph Zeiss, assigned to the St. Petersburg, Fla., office, and William E. Rhoads, in the High Point office, represent the first time two peace interns have been assigned in any regional office for the same period, it was pointed out.

Calhoun Geiger, Peace Education Director, explained that the increasing potential for Peace Education support in this region was responsible for these appointments.

William E. Rhoads

Rhoads was graduated this past June from Guilford College, is married and Mrs. Rhoads is completing her final year at Guilford as a psychology major. He is a native of Wilmington, Delaware.

Zeiss is also married and they have three children. He received his M.S. in marine biology from Cornell, where he served on the peace and social concerns committee of the Friends meeting, later to become chairman. During this period, his concern about the state of world affairs led to his decision to enter his present work.

Regional Director Lays Emphasis On Financing As Key Program

By

B. Tartt Bell

Executive Secretary

Elsewhere in this issue is a feature story on SERO's "finance and interpretation" program and a picture of B. Russell Branson. This is included because the business of securing the financial support for the Service Committee's operations is in every sense a "program", not just a part of the internal administrative apparatus. Furthermore, it's one of the more fascinating chapters in the whole book! I don't mean our human fascination with dollars and cents. I am talking about the amazing chronicle of how, why and when people choose to use the channels of the AFSC to express their concerns and their hopes. Few — if any — staff members can match the tales of humor, faith, and commitment reported by the fund raisers! I wish you could hear some of them. Personally, I'm not sure which are more moving, those that report gifts of large sums by generous philanthropists or those of small contributions which may represent a personal sacrifice. The confidence in the Service Committee which every gift implies is, in any event, a frightening responsibility for the staff and committees.

Often we hear friends lament the fact that it's necessary "to raise funds" for the Service Committee's programs. None of us would claim that it is a simple or an easy task to support the budgets year after year. However, we think of the fundraising as a service, almost as a ministry. In many instances, a gift of money is the most immediate and personal way individuals in the southeast can relate themselves to regional, national, and world needs. Is it not, therefore, a genuine service when we are able to offer the giver a constructive program in the areas of his concern? Moreover, the numerous opportunities enjoyed by Russell Branson, and the other fund-raisers, to join in a spiritual search with contributors and prospective supporters for areas of mutual concern has made his work something far more than "raising money".

There is another way also that "finance and interpretation" eminently qualifies as program. One of the objectives of all AFSC work is to "involve" people, i.e., provide the opportunity to think, to work, to worship together, in other words, to participate in something beyond immediate self-interest. Regardless of size every contribution represents a part of the individual who makes the gift. All who give through the AFSC to the causes that are important to them are, thus, very much involved.

There is, quite naturally, some disagreement among staff and committee members about the relative importance of the particular programs in which we specialize. In these discussions Russell has gently reminded us that his program is the most important —because he has the privilege of representing all AFSC work in a very special way!

Bell Visits Florida

The executive secretary will spend a week in Florida, February 3-8. Bell speaks to the Daytona Beach Open Forum on Sunday afternoon, February 3rd, on "The United Nations and The Prospects For Peace". From February 4 through February 7 he will visit in St. Petersburg for consultation with Ralph Zeiss, peace education interne, and the local committee about program developments.

On the return trip Bell will stop in Atlanta for conference with Noyes Collinson, director of the Atlanta employment on merit program of the regional office.

Donors Share In AFSC Projects With Financing

A conference for African diplomats, a seminar in Western Europe, and in Thailand, work camp involvement in Nigeria, in Ghana and other west African countries, a volunteer working in an Indian village assisting with the treatment of leprosy, a VISA volunteer in the Tanganyikan community development program, a Washington seminar on international affairs for governmental officials, a high school student involved in an intensive period of study at the UN and in Washington, transporting tons and tons of surplus food to hungry peoples in foreign lands, clothing for thousands of refugees — all these exotic sounding activities are parts of the total effort of the American Friends Service Committee to make real its underlying motivation which is "Love expressed through creative action, can overcome hatred, prejudice, and fear."

Many persons participate directly in these activities through the department of finance and interpretation. AFSC maintains a close contact with its contributors through personal letters and personal visits. Thus, a contributor feels close to the work because of these interpretative activities and that he is a definite part of the work in this country and in foreign lands. It is, of course, impossible for all persons to be present physically as these service projects are carried on. It is not impossible, however, for all persons to participate directly in these activities through their representatives who are acting in behalf of the American Friends Service Committee. Staff members are highly selected and their programs are directed and reviewed by volunteer committees.

The scope of the work of the American Friends Service Committee is seldom comprehended even by members of the Religious Society of Friends, which was the inspiration for the original formation of the American Friends Service Committee. Not only does the Service Committee work carry into areas of tension in foreign lands; large scale activity is constantly under way in this country and more particularly in the Southeastern Region about which we are most directly involved. For example, we have for years had staff personnel working in the area of school desegregation; and seeking new openings for work opportunities on the basis of merit alone. Also, we have representatives working through the colleges and more recently through high schools to reach students of these institutions in an effort to stimulate social consciences to the degree where they will feel the necessity of meeting their responsibility to all mankind through constructive activity. Underlying all the many facets of AFSC programs is our constant search for ways to relieve tensions and thus to create among all nations and all men a nonviolently ordered society.

Russell Branson

Financing of these efforts is the key to their scope. The Service Committee seeks financial assistance from those individuals, groups and foundations who share our common concern and wish to give encouragement to our program direction and services.

Generally, organizations which maintain programs of service do not consider their financing aspects as one of their service programs. In the concept of our Finance Secretary, the individual, group or institution which does assist with the financing is equally the beneficiary of deep seated rewards as is the person whose hands administer the service. On the one hand, it enables a person to give expression to his concern through his gift of money or material; this in turn enables another person to put into action his concern by giving some of his life and creative talent. Thus, the forthright presentation of our direct service projects to potential financial supporters is an important objective of this program. It is our experience that such presentations create a wish and an equally sincere desire to become an active participant through financial assistance. This touches upon the philosophy of our associate secretary for the Southeast region, Russell Branson, who is responsible for the finance and interpretation program in this region.

Our staff is in need of less expensive transportation that is ready to go and time saving. The use of staff's private cars is quite expensive. Public transportation is often difficult and time consuming.

If our staff of eight persons had two AFSC-owned cars, where the only expense would be gas and oil and a few incidentals, we could do much more work than we are presently able to do on our own limited travel budgets.

Do you have a car you could give us? Any make, any model; just so it has lots of good mileage left in it and does not need major repairs. Tires and batteries are considered incidental.

Our need is such that this will be better than a cash contribution. Write: RUSSELL BRANSON, P. O. Box 1307, High Point, North Carolina.

Bell, Herbin Lead Panel on Equal Employment

B. Tartt Bell, Regional Executive Secretary, and Sarah Herbin, Associate Director of the Employment on Merit program of the American Friends Service Committee, were leaders of one of the panel discussions at a Consultation on the Ethical Demands of Integration held last month in Nashville, Tennessee.

The consultation, jointly arranged by the Southern Regional Council and the Fellowship of Churchmen, was opened by an address by Dr. Martin L. King, Jr., on December 27 and continued through December 29, with James McBride Dabbs delivering the closing address.

"Public Schools in Charlottesville, Virginia," was subject of a discussion led by Paul Gaston and Tom Hammond of the University of Virginia and "The Role of Religion in Desegregation Efforts in Atlanta," was discussed by Dr. Samuel Williams of Morehouse college.

The study presented by Bell and Herbin was: "Equal Employment in Greensboro, North Carolina."

A New Commandment I Give to you, That you Love One Another.—John 13.

School Desegregation Implements Belief In Equality of Man

Since 1956, the American Friends Service Committee, as a part of its national community relations program, has carried on a School Desegregation project in the Southeastern region.

"Quaker work in community relations is motivated by the testimony of Friends on the equality of all men in the sight of God and of one another," B. Tartt Bell, Regional Executive Secretary, explained.

This testimony emphasizes the dignity and worth of the individual and his right to grow up in a social environment in which he can develop his God-given potential to the fullest, he said.

Based on the belief that desegregation is inevitable and morally right, but that much community and individual preparation and planning is necessary to insure that the change will come in an orderly and constructive manner, the program has been concentrated primarily in North Carolina because the State's legal machinery has permitted desegregation. The Southeastern regional office is located in High Point and there are a large number of Friends' groups and a strong Quaker tradition in this area.

The program is directed by William Bagwell and Charles Davis, staff members, and the following are members of the program's committee: James Mattocks, acting chairman; Robert Bryden, Joseph Hines, D. Eric Moore, Dan Pollit, William Wells, Joseph Straley, W. I. Morris, Susie Jones, Gladys Wood, Irvin Birdseye, Owen Lewis, Carl DeVane, Ernest Campbell, Howard Givens, Sidney Freeman, McLeod Bryan, Carson Ryan and Susan Smith.

The long-term goal of the program is to provide an opportunity for every public school child to attend a school in his community in which decisions regarding curriculum, assignment of pupils, use of facilities and the appointment of teachers will be made on a nonracial basis. The short-term goal is the desegregation of as many school districts on as extensive a basis as possible.

Methods involved in the program include education through speeches, literature, etc.; counseling of groups and individuals, confrontation of local and state leaders in school and other governmental positions and the convening of groups to discuss problems.

Emphasis during 1963 will be placed on a more concentrated area carefully selected after a study of various pertinent factors; sponsoring a series of workshops and seminars aimed at developing leadership, and maintaining sufficient flexibility in order to be able to consider providing emergency aid in crisis areas which may develop in North Carolina or elsewhere in the South.

Some work previously has been carried on outside North Carolina in Little Rock, Arkansas, and Prince Edward County, Virginia.

COLLEGE

which was designed to provide college students with actual work experience in community agencies. A Voter registration project also was sponsored by the College program, in Jackson, Tennessee. Objectives were more awareness of the procedures of registration, voting, marking ballots, folding ballots and the rights of voters. The project sought ways to determine issues in an election and criteria to use for decision-making, and how to petition for improvement of the community.

with promoting events that will deal in depth with the concerns of peace and race. In order to achieve the greatest effectiveness, we are trying to orient the program along two-fold lines; events directed to students and events directed to adults who work with students. Because of this philosophy, the program committee now being carefully selected will consist of approximately two-thirds adults and one-third students.

Among the most rewarding and appealing aspects of the program are the summer work and study projects. Dreyer is available to speak to church, school and other groups interested in knowing more about these opportunities for service.

Another type of service in which students participate through the program was illustrated December 30, 1962, in High Point, North Carolina, when approximately 30 students from High Point Central High School held a drive to collect blankets to be sent to the AFSC to Algerian refugees. The blanket collection effort was supported by members of the Key Club, Junior Civitans and Civinettes with the AFSC serving as coordinator.

According to Dreyer, "Those of us who work with high school youth are becoming increasingly aware of new depths in judgment, responsibility and spiritual concern being exhibited by today's teen-agers. If we fail to mold the attitudes of youth, we have failed the World," he concluded.

COUNCIL REPORTS ON CIVIL RIGHTS

What is progress in race relations? As these reports from different parts of the country indicate, it depends on where you are starting from. In a large Southern city such as New Orleans, the fact that public facilities are being desegregated and school desegregation, even on a token basis, is taking place represents progress. In Chicago, on the other hand, where segregation is purely unofficial, progress toward integrated living has been slow and difficult.

Looking at progress in race relations in both the North and the South in recent years, it becomes clear that each step inevitably leads to the next one. In some places the steps needed today may be legal ones, to force public authorities to grant equal treatment to Negroes and to prevent segregation. In other places there may be a primary need for patient negotiations to open opportunities for Negroes to acquire skills and work at decent jobs. In still other communities, the important current task will be to develop new ideas and programs in education, community life and recreation which will give all young people access to the equal opportunities to which the law says they are entitled.

Eventually, if the term "equality" is to have meaning, we must move away from the acute consciousness of race which has become embedded in the American character. For people to function effectively in the society in which they live, they must be considered as individuals, not as part of a "group." That time, unfortunately, seems to be far in the future, with many stages to go through along the way before we reach it. In the meantime, we must measure progress by steps.

Some thoughts and evaluations on recent local progress toward racial desegregation are offered here by Council leaders living in various parts of the country. As a backdrop for these local on-the-scene reports, here is a brief review of major recent developments on the national civil rights scene.

The Public Schools

In all but three "deep South" states where public schools are still completely segregated, slow but steady progress in school desegregation continued in the past year. When school opened in the fall of 1962 Negro and white children were enrolled in desegregated schools in 972 school districts in the Southern and border states. This was an increase of sixty districts since last spring. The number of Negro youngsters enrolled in schools with white children also increased this fall in every state with desegregated schools, so that 8,400 more Negro children in the Southern and border states were attending desegregated schools.

In the North, a closer look is being taken at the problem of de facto segregation in the schools, resulting from segregated neighborhood patterns. Redistricting, transfer and open enrollment plans to provide more opportunity for integrated education have been instituted in a number of communities, in response to mounting demand for equal, unsegregated schooling and growing recognition of the benefits of this democratic experience to all children.

Open Occupancy

The big news on the fair housing front is the signing of the long-awaited Executive Order by President Kennedy requiring open occupancy without discrimination in housing built or bought with Federal financial assistance. The order was generally greeted as an important advance toward equal opportunity in housing, while, at the same time, its limited scope was criticized by many who had been pressing for this "stroke of the pen" for the past two years. The major gap is the failure of the order to cover existing federally-aided housing — including public and urban renewal housing in every part of the country, much of it segregated. Housing contracted for prior to the November 20th date of the President's order is also not covered. Federal agencies are, however, directed to "use their good offices" and to take court action, if necessary, to promote open occupancy in existing government-assisted housing.

Effective immediately, the order bars discrimination in the sale or rental of residential property, including vacant land, owned or operated by the Government, federally financed in whole or in part by loans, grants or by federal guarantee of private loans. This will cover almost all future public housing, since most of it is built with federal aid; urban renewal or slum clearance housing built on property acquired by states or localities with federal aid; and homes financed by mortgages guaranteed by the Federal Housing Authority or the Veterans Administration. It is estimated that about 25 percent of new housing will be affected by the President's order. A committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing is established by the order to oversee its operation and enforcement.

The 87th Congress went home without passing any civil rights legislation, but executive action by the Federal Government has helped to promote equal rights in transportation, in voting and in employment, as well as in housing.

• Almost complete compliance with an order by the Interstate Commerce Commission to desegregate all interstate transportation and terminals is reported. Vigorous enforcement and legal action by the Justice Department has backed up the order.

• Following through on the Attorney General's stated conviction that the right to vote is basic "and from it all other rights flow," a major effort has been mounted by the Justice Department's expanded Civil Rights Division in support of recent voter registration drives in many communities. Evidence of discrimination is being systematically collected and court action instituted in a number of cases.

• The Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, established by the President to combat job discrimination in government and in companies with government contracts, reports expansion of employment opportunities for Negro workers in defense industries. This has resulted from growing cooperation by major defense plants, as well as stronger enforcement of non-discrimination clauses which appear in all federal contracts.

These are some of the steps we as a nation have taken in recent months to back up the fundamental belief of our democracy that everyone should have an equal chance. They may not be the giant steps, which we know are needed, but they represent encouraging movement toward the national goal of equal opportunity.

RACE AND HOUSING IN CHICAGO

By Mrs. Siegfried Shattil

Member, National Committee on Public Affairs

Six weeks ago the third Negro family moved, without incident, into the northwest Chicago suburb of Skokie, Illinois. Two years ago, when the first Negro family bought a house in Skokie, there was harassment of both buyer and seller. Proponents of fair housing practices point with pride at what they hope is an idication of an easing of tension in the suburb, brought about through educating the community and through the judicious handling of the residents on the block by teams of Skokie clergymen and members of the Human Relations Committee.

Slow Pace

Thus the score stands at three Negro families in Skokie, one Negro family in the southwest suburb of Park Forest, an integrated block in Evanston, another family in Niles and a few families in a handful of other suburbs. But there are 800,000 Negroes in Chicago, living mostly in expanding ghettos. The rapid increase in the number of middle-income Negro families has been steadily pushing the "fringe" areas farther east, south, north and west within the city. Neighborhoods which were all-white three years ago are now all-Negro.

For lower income families, who must rely on public housing, the opportunity for integrated living does not exist. Because land is expensive, the city has switched to highrise public housing developments. Just completed, on the South Side, is the Robert Taylor Homes project housing 30,000 people. Already, the director of this city within a city has been nicknamed "Mr. Mayor." Composed primarily of young married families, the ratio of children is high. The distance from playground to mama on the tenth floor is great. The amount of discord, rivalries, problems bound to arise from this type of proximity living is causing concern among Chicago's educators, sociologists and psychologists, who are sadly shaking their heads at this vertical ghetto.

Ostensibly, public housing is available to all who qualify, regardless of color. Actually, public housing sites must be approved by the Chicago City Council and there exists a gentlemen's agreement among the aldermen that public housing developments in white areas, which conceivably might draw Negro applicants, be vetoed by the Council. Consequently, such public housing that is approved is well within the confines of all-Negro neighborhoods.

Some Progress

Hopeful signs on the horizon, though few, are significant. Recent private housing developments, perhaps anticipating President Kennedy's executive order prohibiting discrimination in federally aided housing, have announced a policy of rentals and sales on an open occupancy basis. Included are the already integrated Lake Meadows and Prairie Shores apartments on the near South Side. Marina Towers in downtown Chicago, now being completed, and the near North Side Old Town Gardens development have recently announced adherence to this policy. In the Hyde Park-Kenwood area, bolstered by the strength and millions of dollars of the University of Chicago, integrated living based on a quota system is maintained within the shadow of the campus.

Last month the Hyde Park Savings and Loan Association received a Human Relations Award for lending money to Negroes wishing to buy in white neighborhoods. This made the purchase of the three homes in Skokie possible. Obtaining mortgage money is one of the greatest hurdles a Negro must overcome if he desires to buy a home which is not in a Negro or "fringe" area.

Two years ago an open occupancy bill was presented to the Illinois State Legislature by a citizen group called the Freedom of Residence Committee (FOR). It received 71 votes in the House where 89 votes are required for passage. During the recess year of the legislature, FOR has worked statewide to win support for this legislation. A new FOR bill will be introduced at the new session of the legislature, convening in January 1963. Chances are that the bill will pass the House, but it is unlikely to get through the Senate which is dominated by downstate and suburban representatives.

There has been a recent upsurge in public support of the principle of open occupancy. A year ago, 700 people belonged to the Illinois FOR Committee. Today FOR has 15,000 members. Yet this morning's newspaper headline proclaimed "Housing Segregation Here Rises to a 50 Year High." This is the conclusion drawn from a four-year study of Chicago's housing patterns by a professor of sociology at the University of Chicago.

Proponents of an open occupancy law assert that Chicago and its suburbs must be integrated in the next five years or Illinois will be faced with social and economic disaster. This terrible trend of white families fleeing from the inner city of Chicago must be halted for the good of the entire metropolitan community.

CHANGING NEW ORLEANS

By Mrs. Lazare Levy
Member, National Board of Directors

Any picture of race relations in New Orleans at this time must, of necessity, have as its background the current status of school desegregation. The first phase of the battle to keep schools open and desegregated on a partial basis has been won. This was accomplished by a determined school board, a court decision, some dedictated citizens and a city administration and press which finally — and rather reluctantly — concluded that some desegregation was better than no schools at all. The Catholic schools, both public and private, have been declared wholly desegregated by order of the Archbishop.

In this situation are evidences of the changes which have taken place in the last three years. Perhaps the most significant are the following: the change in the attitude of the press, general public support of open schools, the support of "name" people, and the city administration's determination to see law and order preserved.

The Press and the Polls

The change in attitude in the press has been particularly apparent. For the first time, editorials were written strongly supporting open schools and pleading for the preservation of law and order. This is very different from the past attitude of complete silence or, on the other hand, urging legal methods to keep the schools segregated. The press also strongly supported the liberal candidates for the school board in the past election.

In this election two incumbents who were outspoken in their efforts to come up with an acceptable plan for desegregation were opposed by candidates supported by the White Citizens Council and the state's rights group. Both incumbents were elected. Their opposition had drawn the lines clearly, and the voters in re-electing the incumbents showed that the majority of our citizens were now accepting the inevitable by an orderly process. In addition, perhaps the idea of supporting by taxes both public education and a grant-in-aid program for private education did not appeal to the taxpayers.

Race Relations and Economic Progress

The power structure of the community, which for the past few years has been hard to identify—or almost nonexistent — became evident again. A committee of one hundred business and professional men spoke out in favor of open schools. This group with additional support, both moral and financial, backed the incumbent school board candidates. Another group of leading citizens formed a state-wide committee with the main purpose of encouraging industry to locate in Louisiana. While this is their basic purpose, they have stated that the projected image of this state must include stable race relations.

Because the city administration was determined that order would prevail, it made certain that school opening under planned desegregation was carried out smoothly this fall, with little or no disruption. Added to this determination was its awareness that if a proposed new defense installation was to be located in New Orleans, it was important to demonstrate that the race relations of this community are not a deterrent to new industry, particularly industry in which the federal government is so closely involved.

The 1962 recipent of the annual award presented by the National Conference of Christians and Jews was so honored for his work in human relations. This in itself is a decided change in the nature of this award. This leading citizen said at the time, "New Orleans must accept change gracefully in order to keep pace . . ."

Changing Patterns of Leadership

In addition to these cited examples, there are other indications that patterns of segregation are changing here. The combination of strengthened leadership in the white community and younger, more vigorous leadership in the Negro community has brought about some very encouraging developments. The most obvious in recent months was the quiet desegregation of downtown lunch counters in department stores, drug stores and "five-and-tens." This was accomplished by businessmen and civic leaders working with Negro groups for months in advance. Plans were worked out in detail as to timing, publicity and numbers of people to be involved. Those who participated in this effort, both Negro and white citizens, have said it was most rewarding, and are hopeful that other problems can be handled in this way.

Since 1954, we had seen a breakdown in Negro-white relationships in the community. Human relations groups were made completely ineffective by the attitudes of both whites and Negroes. Today we find a human relations group of leading citizens starting again, serviced by professionals on a consultative basis. There is every indication that this may be the beginning of a truly effective Community Relations Council.

In our opinion, some progress has been made in the race relations fiield here in the past two years. We believe that the community knows that its growth and progress depend to an extent on its sensible handling of delicate race questions. This is no guarantee that tense, unhappy situations may not arise, but with experience as a teacher, and with the changes which have taken place in leadership and attitude, perhaps these situations will be dealt with to the mutual advantage of all concerned.

CAPITAL AREA: SCHOOL DESEGREGATION

By Mrs. Marvin Sonosky

Vice Chairman, National Committee on Public Affairs

Three forward steps and two backward steps make for slow progress. That is the situation in school desegregation in Washington and its surrounding suburbs. As for the capital itself, almost 85 percent of the children in public schools are Negro, an increase of about 15 percent in the past ten years. The population of the city now has the greatest proportion of Negroes (an estimated 54 percent) of any of the nation's cities. The move to the suburbs by the white population is the main reason for this change; and while it cannot be accounted for entirely by schools desegregation, this must be accepted as the major reason.

The District of Columbia now has eight years of experience in school desegregation. The District's Superintendent Carl F. Hansen has emphasized the fact that in desegregating a school system, more must be done than simply opening the school doors and optimistically awaiting "spiritual fusion," or loss of consciousness about race. Stressing the need for understanding differences in cultural background and the importance of developing enrichment programs, he has noted that the decline in overall academic achievement reflects not a decline in the quality of the schools, but the first step in bringing previously segregated schools up to higher standards.

The District, like all major cities, is facing the growing problem of the high school drop-out. It is even more serious here, however, because of the lack of job opportunities even for the holder of a high school diploma, when he is a Negro. Strong efforts by school officials and community leaders are being made to ease the situation.

Meanwhile, suburban housing is closed to Negroes due to "custom," high rent, inflated real estate prices and difficulty in borrowing from local banks. The President's housing order requiring open occupancy in government-sponsored housing will eventually open up the market, but no immediate relief is expected. The most important need is for middle-income housing, and some progress is being made by interracial groups working with banks to obtain building loans for responsible individuals.

Token Desegregation in Virginia

Ironically, "residence" is the tool used to deny equal opportunity to the Negro in the Northern Virginia suburbs. Although local school boards will occasionally remove this obstacle, a Negro child usually cannot transfer out of his school zone whenever his home is nearer to a Negro school. In Prince Georges County, Maryland, racial discrimination continues. Negroes must make formal application to enter a predominantly white school closer to home when moving up from the elementary to the secondary school.

Virginia's Prince Edward County has no public schools. There is a case pending in the courts which would require the state government to support free public schools in Prince Edward, or to withdraw its support from every other locality in the state. The courts have declared that there shall be no state payment of tuition grants for attendance at private schools as long as there is no free public school in the county. No Negro child is at present attending school in Prince Edward County. Except for casual summer classes, it has been four years since Negro children have received any schooling. There is a community-supported private school for the white children.

In Warren County, about half the white children who attended private schools when the public schools were closed a few years ago, have returned to the integrated public school system. The others continue to attend private schools, using tuition grants offered by the state ($155 per year) and by the locality. The state compulsory school attendance law, repealed in 1960, has not been reinstated, but several localities have instituted their own attendance laws.

Although assignment to white schools in Virginia are no longer only as a result of court decrees, initiative for such assignments rests entirely with the Negro student. However, some progress has been made. "Class suits" for desegregation are now possible in Virginia. Decisions in these suits apply to all people in a similar situation as well as to the individual bringing suit, so that some of the individual steps formerly necessary in the process of seeking admission to a white school can be eliminated. Still, the pace is distressingly slow. Less than ten percent of the children of northern Virginia are receiving a bi-racial education.

Gleams of Light

Some progress toward opening job opportunities in the service field has been made in Northern Virginia, especially at the clerical level in department stores and local government offices. Vocational training is still extremely limited, however, as are job opportunities in the building trades – the largest source of employment for the non-professional worker in the area.

A vote for a stronger public school system was cast by the electorate in Virginia in November when a "free-holders" amendment which would have enfranchised only property owners in local school bond issue referenda was defeated. If the freeholders amendment had passed, the schools – which are dependent in the fast growing suburbs on large local bond issues – would have been hard hit. Virginia citizens also voted in November to ease voting registration procedures by providing a simpler registration form, which should be a help to recently renewed registration drives throughout the state.

With these gleams of light through the gloom, we can hope for ever-increasing responsibility on the part of citizens and government to provide equal opportunity for all.

ROLE OF THE HUMAN RELATIONS COMMISSION

By Mrs. Leopold Fleischaker

Chairman, National Committee on Public Affairs

"You can't legislate attitudes!" For many years these four words expressed the irreconciable views of many who regarded the status quo as the only status manageable in a community with race problems. The great number of state and local commissions which have been established in recent years to deal with this very problem indicates, however, that such a stance is no longer considered valid. There is growing recognition of the contribution which a human relations commission can make to the progress and peace of a community.

The value of such an agency is clear when one considers that the problems of discrimination confound almost every social problem facing a community. The ordinance which a year ago established the Human Relations Commission of Louisville, Kentucky states it this way: "Prejudice and the practice of discrimination against any individual or group because of race, creed, color or national origin is contrary to good public policy and detrimental to the peace, progress and welfare of the city . . . And the lack of full participation of any individual in the privileges of full membership in the community retards the progress of the community and affects the general well-being of all its citizens."

Weight of Official Policy

The effectiveness of a human relations commission is seriously hampered, however, unless it is established by ordinance or statute. This has been demonstrated by our recent community experience in Louisville. As a member of the former Mayor's Committee on Human Relations, I was keenly aware of the lack of budget, prestige or effectiveness in the community of this unofficial group which was set up in March 1961 as a token response to demonstrations for desegregation of public accommodations. But when the present Commission was established as a legal entity, it was made clear to the community that the government endorses – and may enforce – steps to reduce areas of discrimination.

Working now as chairman of the Committee on Public Accommodations (one of twelve working committees set up by the Commission to investigate existing practices in various areas) the prestige and public impact of the official agency has been evident to me. Habit and custom are such strong factors in our lives that most of us need a vigorous statement of principle by the authorities in order to force a change in community patterns of business, education, housing. No matter how prominent the members of any unofficial human relations committee — and they must be persons of prestige as well as representative of all facets of a community life — the committee's value is substantially limited unless officially established.

Person to Person

"Keep the lines of communications open." Here is a cliche we hear almost daily; yet it is basic to the value of a human relations commission. Obviously, there must be a forum where official attitudes can be expressed; where minority groups can delineate clearly the discriminatory practices used against them; where well intentioned citizens can obtain the necessary facts to allay their fears, whether economic or social; where those resistant to changing patterns of human relations can be compelled to state their position before the entire community.

We do not learn to know people merely by reading about them and their problems. Keeping the lines of communication open through a commission means that many individuals and groups of people, who have heretofore had almost no contact, will be working together in an attempt to come to satisfactory solutions of what are essentially problems between people. The process itself becomes important and helps to build understanding.

Working together through the offices of an official agency does not imply that there is only one approach to problems of discrimination. Discrimination takes many forms; and many people, many groups, many methods are needed for its elimination. However, a commission can assure that these various groups are not working at cross purposes, but are pooling all the resources of a community toward the same goal — to develop and use the productive capacity of its entire citizenry.

A commission must keep in mind its essential role as a channel for progress. Unless it sees itself as an action group and not merely as a peace-keeping agency, the commission can become a sounding board only, limiting its effectiveness in the community. It is patently clear that fact finding, the dissemination of these facts, and speaking to the truth of what exists is an essential function. But a human rights commission, by its very nature, has an obligation to be more than an educational agency. Its educational function is only the first step toward predetermined goals of community change — changes in the old patterns which are obstacles to full participation in the community by all its members.

Any community will find itself with many problems, which will vary in scope and intensity. However, as in any problem-solving situation, problems need to be met one at a time. Not every situation can be tackled at once or the total community will suffer from confusion and conflicting pressures. The community will find it far easier to change its own image and its old patterns by building one success upon another.

A human relations commission is a valuable asset when created, financed, and staffed with understanding of its basic role — to modify the community climate in order to achieve gradual elimination of discriminatory patterns and practices. It is merely one tool in a long, slow process of social change; but, fully understood, it can be a most important one.

UNITY OF NEGRO, JEWISH STRUGGLE
FOR EQUALITY STRESSED BY DR. KING
IN ADDRESS FOR AJCONGRESS CAMPAIGN

NEW YORK -- The American Jewish Congress opened its 1963 campaign this week with an address by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., stressing the unity of Negro and Jewish efforts to attain equality.

Robert Wechsler, campaign chairman, presided at a dinner meeting in the Essex House at which the annual drive was launched. Theme of the 1963 campaign, he said, was "to strengthen Jewish life and advance the frontiers of freedom for every American." The Congress conducts a an independent fund-raising drive in the New York metropolitan area. Outside of New York, it is supported by grants from 300 local Jewish welfare funds across the country.

In his address, Dr. King underscored the "centuries-long common struggle of Negroes and Jews not only to rid ourselves of bondage but to make oppression of any people by any others an impossibility."

He praised the American Jewish Congress as an organization "whose understanding of the major social problem of our age has been boldly expressed and resolutely supported by deeds and action."

Other speakers included Dr. Joachim Prinz, AJCongress president; Shad Polier, governing council chairman; and Sidney Hollander of Baltimore, a national vice president of the Congress and former President of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds.

"Every Negro leader is keenly aware, from direct and personal experience, that the segregationist makes no fine distinction between the Negro and the Jew," Dr. King declared, adding:

"The irrational hatred motivating the white supremacist is as readily turned against Jew, Quaker, Liberal and One-Worlder as it is against the Negro. Some bigots have burned the homes and churches of Negroes; some have smeared swastikas on synagogues and thrown bombs at them.

"Our common fight is against the enemies of democracy, and our glory is that we are chosen to prove that courage is a characteristic of oppressed people, however cynically and brutally they are denied full equality and freedom."

A Negro leader talks about the struggle ahead

BY ERNEST DUNBAR
LOOK SENIOR EDITOR

AT 34, the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., has become an American institution. Since he led a Negro boycott of Montgomery, Ala., segregated buses in 1955-56, the young Baptist minister's name has become known in the remotest corners of the world. When the head of newly independent Algeria came to America last year to see President John F. Kennedy, he also requested a special briefing on U. S. race relations by Martin Luther King. Kennedy himself has occasionally invited the counsel of King, and candidate Kennedy's call to the wife of the then-imprisoned minister during the 1960 campaign is widely credited with swinging enough Negroes behind Kennedy to give him his thin margin of victory.

Palavering with Presidents has not diverted King's attention from his role as a battler for equality. But today, the King influence ranges far beyond the borders of his native Southland. During one recent week, he spoke at a fund-raising rally in White Plains, N. Y., on Tuesday. On Wednesday evening, he addressed similar rallies in two other New York towns. On Thursday, he met in Manhattan with fellow board members of the

"I told my child about the color bar," says King, "after she'd begged to be taken to Fun Town, an Atlanta amusement park that she'd seen advertised on television. I knew they did not admit Negroes. But I told Yoki that, even though she could not go, she was as good as anybody else. I think she understood. Sometime later, she became very upset by hearing that I had been imprisoned in Albany, Ga. It isn't easy to explain such things to a seven-year-old, but my wife Coretta told her that I was in jail so that all people could go where they wished without worrying about color. 'Good,' Yoki said. 'Tell him to stay in jail until I can go to Fun Town!'"

The Kings enjoy a backyard romp at their Atlanta home. The couple are expecting a fourth child.

King playfully hoists five-year-old Martin III. Frequent absences from his family are among the most serious of the sacrifices demanded of him in his work.

Coretta and Martin Luther King join hands to sing hymn "We Shall Overcome" at convention of integration groups. Like King, she is a native of the South.

Gandhi Society, an organization that provides legal aid to Negro integration leaders; then consulted with publishers of a forthcoming book of King sermons, and flew to the West Coast to give lectures to the students at Los Angeles State and San Jose State colleges. On Sunday, he went to Houston, Texas, for a fund-raising dinner. On Monday, he flew to Washington, D. C., to join other Negro leaders for a White House audience with President Kennedy on American policies in Africa. Afterwards, Kennedy and King met alone to discuss the continued bombing of Negro churches in Alabama. At the day's end, King returned to the Atlanta, Ga., headquarters of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, of which he is president, to help organize an SCLC voter-registration drive in the South. Somewhere, during these days, he managed to write his biweekly column for a Negro newspaper and compose a sermon for his next church service.

The wide-ranging scope of these activities typifies the kind of life King lives today. He has become a symbol of the struggle against bigotry, not only to Southern Negroes, but to those in the North as well. At the same time, his nonviolent methods have won him many white supporters, particularly among college youth, and he is much in demand as a lecturer. Such adulation might make some men pompous, but Martin Luther King remains a warm, friendly, human being. Basically, this is so because it is King's nature. But even if it were not, there are plenty of daily reminders that, despite some successes, his goals are far from being accomplished.

He is the kind of American hero who may find himself lunching with a Northern governor one day and behind the bars of a Southern jail the next. He has been imprisoned twelve times, spent more than 40 days in jail (most recently in Albany, Ga.); his home has been bombed, his family threatened, and he himself roughed up by Southern policemen. He suffers no illusions about the dangers that exist. But while he eschews the martyr role, he is determined to continue his work. "Every man should have something he'd die for," says Dr.

King, center, listens as Mrs. Rosa Parks accepts an award. Her arrest for refusing to give up her seat to a white male passenger triggered the King-led 1955-56 Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott.

In Birmingham, Ala., King was taken to police station following his refusal to press charges against a white attacker. Below, his admirers listen intently as King addresses them after his return.

"Give me some shoes to wear down here!"

King. "A man who won't die for something is not fit to live."

King's fervor may stem partly from his rearing in a family in which religion has always played a dominant role. His great-grandfather was a minister. His maternal grandfather was, for 37 years, the pastor of Atlanta's Ebenezer Baptist Church, where King is now co-pastor with his father, the Rev. M. L. King, Sr. The latter has headed the church for 30 years. A brother, A. D., and an uncle are also ministers. In the pulpit, King summons up masterful oratory that blends Hegel with hallelujahs. His normally gentle tones give way to a rolling, booming baritone that evokes cries of "That's right" and "Yes, Lord!" The cardboard fans bearing morticians' advertisements swish back and forth with increasing rhythm as King works up to a climax: "It's all right to talk about silver slippers Up There, but give me some shoes to wear down here! It's all right to talk about the mansions Up Yonder, but I want to see some new homes right here! Communism may be in the world because Christianity hasn't been Christian enough, and democracy hasn't been democratic enough." College professors and ill-schooled domestics, his audience is with him, and their cries of assent swell like an orchestra in full voice.

Martin King's missionary zeal permeates the Atlanta headquarters of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the Southwide integration organization. SCLC is an umbrellalike group that seeks to coordinate and assist local organizations working for the implementation of democracy in America. It has grown from a nucleus of five people with a budget of $63,000 in 1960 to a present staff of 40 and an annual budget of $475,000. Its activities range from sit-ins at segregated public facilities and voter-registration campaigns to a "citizenship-education" program that sends teams around the South to provide basic instruction to illiterate Negro adults. Though King provides the motive force behind SCLC, much of the administrative burden is carried by another energetic young minister, the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, a close King associate.

Periodically, King embarks on a "people-to-people" tour of such areas as backwoods Alabama, the Mississippi Delta or the "wool-hat" rural regions of Georgia, to visit and talk to the Negroes of these racially critical sections. In these areas, where the name Martin Luther King is almost an epithet to whites, King refuses the services of bodyguards, and on a recent visit to Selma, Ala., he came uncomfortably close to being attacked by an angry crowd. To the casual observer, he appears to be almost unconscious of the dangers to which he is frequently exposed. At a convention of the SCLC in Birmingham, Ala., last fall, a visibly disturbed white youth leaped onto the speaker's platform before a stunned audience and began pummeling him. King made no move to defend himself and refused to bring charges against the youth, who said he attacked King because of his integrationist views.

To an irate Birmingham police official who wanted him to press charges, King patiently explained: "This system that we live under creates people such as this youth. I'm not interested in pressing charges. I'm interested in changing the kind of system that produces this kind of man." Later, over the kitchen table in the modest frame house King rents in Atlanta, his attractive wife, Coretta, chided her husband gently over having asked that his attacker be permitted to return to his seat in the audience. "Suppose he had had a knife or gun?" she asked. "Well, if he had, he would have used it before then," he replied calmly. Coretta King, perhaps recalling the near-fatal 1958 stabbing of her husband by a deranged Negro woman in Harlem, was plainly having difficulty seeing the Birmingham affair in the same light as King. In their nine years of marriage, Mrs. King has become adept at coping with crises, but there are still many moments of anxiety.

King's busy schedule plays hob with his domestic life. He travels more than 200,000 miles in a year, often with as little as 4½ hours of sleep a night. The King children, Yolanda (Yoki), 7, Martin III (Marty), 5, and Dexter, 2, cram loving, rough-and-tumble play into those treasured hours their father can spend at home.

Sometimes, the tensions of racial enmity intrude even into the world of the youngsters. King recalls: "Coretta was driving to visit me while I was in jail at Albany, Ga., and she had brought Yoki along. On the way, a car full of white teen-agers yelled 'Nigger!' at them as they passed. Yoki asked, 'Mama, why do white people hate colored people?' My wife reminded her of Hank, a white seminary student who had lived in our house during the summer, and explained that all whites did not hate Negroes. That's the real tragedy. A kid can grow up with bitterness and hatred because of the conditions here, and never really be able to shed that bitterness."

When King urges Negroes to press, without violence, for the full rights of American citizenship, he is emphatic about the nonviolent approach. But he is equally adamant about the necessity to go forward. "I believe in a militant, nonviolent approach," he explains, "in which the individual stands up against an unjust system, using sit-ins, legal action, boycotts, votes and everything else—except violence or hate." To Martin Luther King, the admission of James Meredith to the University of Mississippi was a turning point in the integration struggle. "The Meredith case may well determine the situation in other Deep South cases. It will now be easier to integrate the University of South Carolina and the University of Alabama. If the Federal Government had failed to take a stand in the Meredith case, it would have encouraged resistance to integration orders from Federal courts in other Southern states. The Meredith incident served notice to the resisters that they are standing on the beaches of history trying to hold back the tides. You just can't do it. The people have seen now what violence and chaos can do to a community."

While King generally approved the Federal backing of Meredith's application to Ole Miss, he is critical of the way the situation in Oxford was allowed to deteriorate. "The Oxford riots were the evidence of a widespread failure, the moral failure of the ecclesiastical, economic and political power structure of the community," he says. "Nobody stood up to the demagogic actions of Gov. Ross Barnett." King also says that if the Kennedy Administration "had moved in a faster and more determined manner in the beginning, it could have saved the lives of two men and averted the bloodshed that ensued."

Though King says John F. Kennedy "has done more than his predecessor in the area of civil rights and improved the moral climate of Washington itself," he believes that Kennedy should take a more vigorous stand on civil rights than the President has yet seemed willing to assume. "We still have not had a strong voice from the White House dealing with the moral issues in this thing," says King. "We have not seen the kind of action that the enormity of the situation demands. The heroic effort of the Negro in these situations is overlooked or taken for granted. Our churches are bombed and burned, people are shot, the vote denied, but it does not seem to call forth the kind of passion and vigor the President has displayed in situations such as the steel-price rise, for instance. I would like to see the President use the tremendous popularity of the Presidential office to exercise moral persuasion on this matter. He should go on television to counsel the nation on this issue, as he does on other issues. He should make more use of the powers he has to deal with the situation in executive orders. The President must change the trend from that of saying, 'Something must be done,' to coming up with a strong, specific program. It does no good to apply Vaseline to a cancer."

King is generally hopeful that the elimination of segregation in the South will proceed "if we press on and if the forces now at work—the rolling tide of world opinion, the growing industrialization of the South, the increasing willingness of white churches to take a stand, and above all, the increased determination of the Negro himself—continue to work."

"But this should not lead any of us to a superficial optimism," King cautions. "With the continuing population shift now going on, ten years from now the majority of Negroes will live in the North, not in the South. The problem then will not be one of segregation by law, but of discrimination in housing and employment, which creates a de facto segregation and social isolation. In short, the same old ghetto problem." Despite the tensions, the inequities and the dangers, Martin Luther King loves the South and believes that ultimately relations between Negro and white Southerner may be warmer and more genuine than those that exist between the races in the North. That time lies in the uncertain future, however, so King continues to cram his days with organizing demonstrations, fund-raising speeches, morale-building visits with backwoods Negroes, writing columns and delivering sermons. "One must not only preach a sermon with his voice," he says, "he must preach it with his life." King does just that.

NOTES FROM THE SOUTH

COLLEGES

Harvey Gantt of Charleston, South Carolina, 20, second-year architecture transfer from Iowa State, walked easily into the administration building of Clemson College. Easily, that is, but for the barrage of newsmen who seemed at the moment to be doing more blocking of South Carolina's "progress" than anyone else.

Aerial photographs of the campus of the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa, Alabama, are now in the files of the Federal Government which was sorry it didn't have photographs of Oxford. Back on ground, incoming Governor George Wallace cried, "I draw the line in the dust and toss the gauntlet before the feet of tyranny, and I say segregation now, segregation tomorrow, segregation forever." However his Lieutenant Governor James Allen differed and said, "Alabama's soul will soon be laid bare before the world. God grant that we may not be ashamed of it." Earlier, John Caldwell, Chamber of Commerce leader in Tuscaloosa, said, "We must tell the politicians, 'Now that (strong segregation promises) was good during campaigning...But now you are hurting my business. You just keep your mouth shut." We know of several student groups working in Tuscaloosa now in preparation for desegregation.

At the University of South Carolina which is currently preparing for the admission of Miss Henri Monteith, the school newspaper, The Gamecock editorialized on February 1, 1963, that "Capable leadership in state government was provided by Governor Donald Russell at a time when failure might have meant federal intervention." The next sentence continued, "Following Gantt's peaceful enrollment, Russell spoke before the General Assembly Tuesday endorsing tuition grants for private schools." In a final sober paragraph it stated, "We ask more than co-existence, however; we ask that it be acknowledged that Harvey Gantt and you and I and millions more are alike in one thing if no other - and that is the sharing of a human condition."

Token integration is now a reality in four Georgia schools: the University of Georgia, Georgia Institute of Technology, Georgia State College and Emory University.

Hearings which began the first week in October, recessed the next week, resumed for the next two weeks, re-resumed after a recess of three months on February 6, in Talladega, Alabama. The hearing is on the State of Alabama's petition for a permanent injunction to bar integration activity by Talladega College students and faculty, plus several civil rights groups and individuals. The NAACP which has been barred from Alabama since 1956 appealed in an effort to have the injunction lifted.

Six picketers from Tougaloo Southern Christian College were arrested shortly before Christmas as they launched a boycott of the downtown business district in Jackson, Mississippi. Groups conducting the boycott have sent a list of demands to the businessmen from whom patronage is being withheld. This list includes demands to end segregated drinking fountains, restooms and seating; to serve all customers on a first-come-first-served basis; and to use the titles Mr. and Miss in addressing all customers. The boycott is reported to be 70% effective.

Although a federal ruling acknowledged the right of a private school to remain segregated, Tulane University in New Orleans, Louisiana, admitted 11 Negro students for the spring semester.

STUDENT GROUPS

The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, with headquarters at 6 Raymond Street, N. W., Atlanta 14, Georgia, has launched a direct action program in Pine Bluff , Arkansas and is working in protest areas in Alabama. The Nashville Nonviolent Movement continues its attack on segregation in downtown Nashville. Although Albany, Georgia is no longer in the national spotlight, the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee continues to work at registering Negroes in the counties surrounding Albany, in the same manner with which they began a year ago. Not long ago a white SNCC worker was charged with "accosting young Negro girls" after talking with demonstrators wearing t-shirts with the words "Don't Buy Downtown or Midtown."

The Freedom Singers are 5 SNCC field secretaries who have recently been organized as a singing group to spread the story of the Southern student movement. The songs have been an integral part of the movement in various protest areas. They have appeared in Albany, Georgia; Atlanta, Georgia, with Pete Seeger; Chicago, Illinois; and in Champaign, Illinois at the National Student Assembly of the Y's. Their most recent appearance was in Carnegie Hall on February 1st, 1963, the third anniversary of the Sit-Ins. Engagements for the singers can be arranged through SNCC's Atlanta office.

Representatives from the National Student Christian Federation, American Friends Service Committee, National Student Association, Students for a Democratic Society and Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee met recently to consider voter registration projects. In meeting with the executive personnel of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council which is administering funds for South-wide voting drives, the five student groups discussed the use of student manpower to be used in voter registration. They also discussed locations of possible projects and hope to have information gathered from several sources available for distribution nationally soon.

Four Rhodesian students arrive February 10th to begin a tour of the South which will center in Atlanta and New Orleans, arranged by the Young Adult Council, a coordinating council of 28 student groups. The Young Adult Council is presently planning a conference to be held at Chapel Hill, North Carolina, from May 2-5, which will bring together 100-150 of the top student leaders of the South, and will include a cross-section of young workers, rural youth and college students. Its theme will revolve around the changing South.

The quadrennial National Student Assembly of the YM-YWCA passed specific mandates for voter registration projects, tutorial projects and attacks on housing discrimination on campuses at its week long meeting after Christmas in Champaign, Illinois.

Students from all over the country will converge in Atlanta during Easter week for the National Student Christian Federation Frontiers Conference. The theme will be "The Church In Frontiers Of Ferment," and the conference will seek to understand the process of change in a conservative community brought on by liberal influences.

The American Friends Service Committee is hoping to have several summer projects in the South. Interested students may write to Dick Ramsey, A.F.S.C., 1818 South Main Street, High Point, North Carolina.

The Southern Region of the National Student YWCA will have a Work-Conference in Atlanta, June 2-8, centering on urban problems - an encounter with the city. The areas of housing, education and politics will receive emphasis, and the conference will be broken down into small interracial teams which will work and study together.

SO THIS IS JUSTICE....

Narcotics Charge

Two students from Michigan State University were arrested during Christmas in Clarksdale, Mississippi, on charges of possession of narcotics, when they brought food, clothing and medicine for Negroes being harassed for trying to vote. They were first held under $15,000 bond which was reduced to $1,500 and they were freed after 11 days in jail. Three doctors in Louisville, Kentucky, where the shipment originated, are reported as having made sworn statements that there were no narcotics or sedatives, but such supplies as asperin and vitamins, although local police claimed there were narcotics. The goods were intended for the Delta area where many Negroes have lost jobs, been put off the land or been unable to receive surplus foods since voter registration drives increased. Sharecroppers average $300-$400 each year, and day laborers receive $150-$160 yearly. At Thanksgiving 22,000 Negroes in LeFlore County were taken off welfare because of voting drives.

Voter registration efforts in Mississippi are being conducted by the Mississippi Council of Federated Organizations, directed by Bob Moses of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. Carry on the work of the Michigan students by organizing a collection of food, money and clothing in your area. Ship to Emergency Welfare and Relief Committee, Haven Methodist Church, 400 Yazoo Avenue, Clarksdale, Mississippi.

Clyde Kennard Freed

Clyde Kennard, a young Negro, left the University of Chicago in 1955 after completing three years, to support his mother and disabled step-father on a small farm in Hattiesburg, Mississippi. In 1958 Kennard applied for admission to Mississippi Southern University. At the request of Governor Coleman he withheld his application until after the approaching elections. In 1959 Kennard reapplied to MSU and was rejected because of undisclosed "deficiencies and irregularities" in his application.

On September 25, 1960 five sacks of chicken feed, valued at $5.00 each, were taken from the Forrest County Cooperative Warehouse. A 19-year old illiterate Negro confessed to the theft. As a state's witness, the youth testified that Kennard had initiated and planned the burglary. He received a five-year probation sentence; Kennard was sentenced to seven years in Parchman Penitentiary. Kennard has served two years of his sentence.

It has recently been disclosed that Clyde Kennard is dying of cancer. The University Hospital gives the 34 year old veteran a one in five chance of living another 5 years. Last week Ross Barnett suspended Kennard's sentence indefinitely since he had been such a good prisoner and was near death. And now the nation recognizes the case of Clyde Kennard, although the Justice Department never did.

Walled-In Ghetto

We hear that the "Atlanta Wall" has shocked the nation. We ask why? since many exist in every Northern city. There is nothing new about this one except that as former Atlanta Mayor William B. Hartsfield said in criticizing the current mayor, Ivan Allen,

(over)

"He shouldn't make a mistake that can be photographed."

Two wooden and steel barricades were constructed on two streets running between Negro and white areas in a Southwest Atlanta residential area to forestall "encroachment" by Negroes and to stimulate white buyers. Those who defend the "buffer-zone" and barricades claim them as protection from Negro "block-busting" tactics. W. L. Calloway, president of the Empire Real Estate Board (Negro) stated, "...Atlanta is experiencing another growth and expansion boom, brought on by the thousands of Negro families who have been displaced by urban renewal .... Instead of working on its 'growing pains' in an intelligent manner, a search is made for a 'scapegoat' and Negro real estate brokers are again being made the victims."

Suits have been brought against the city for the erection of the "little Berlin Wall" by both Negro and white residents who have been outraged by the inconveniences created.

Joan Browning, a white Georgia State College Student and Vice-Chairman of the Greater Atlanta Student Council on Human Relations said that the matter had been brought to the open and that, "...white home-owners now may publicly express their fears of depreciating real estate values. Negroes may inform that they have no desire to invade white homes. Perhaps there is hope for an end to discrimination in housing."

IN GENERAL

The Mississippi State Sovereignty Commission which serves as a funnel for getting state funds to the White Citizens' Council, is sending seven speakers to Iowa, South Dakota, Indiana, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois and Washington to "tell the Mississippi story on segregation and race relations."

President Kennedy's executive order banning discrimination in government sponsored housing established a President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing and details a program of enforcement for direct U. S. aided housing -- a fourth of the nation's supply. It does not cover housing in existence prior to its issuance. (Anyone interested in a hasty redevelopment program?!)

In Atlanta, a Negro, Leroy Johnson, was elected to the State Senate for the first time in 50 years (Democrat.) Negroes were elected for the first time to statewide office in Massachusetts (Republican) and Connecticut (Democrat.) A Los Angeles Negro was the first of his race to win a House seat West of the Mississippi.

Dr. Donald Matthews, a University of North Carolina political science professor has recently completed a study of racial attitudes in 11 Southern states. By scientific sampling of 694 whites and 618 Negroes, the study showed that only 22 per cent of the whites realized Negroes really wanted desegregation, while a startling 53 per cent of the Negroes did not believe the majority of Southern whites favored strict segregation. "Contrary to popular opinion," Dr. Matthews said, "the Negro down here isn't very happy." His findings will be published in 1964.

IMPRESSIONS

Since there were no disturbances at Clemson College, Harvey Gantt's desire to be known as, "Harvey Gantt, that colored fellow that entered Clemson, remember him?" could come true, according to the University of South Carolina Gamecock.

Ernie Dixon, an Ohio Wesleyan University senior on being a Negro student on a Northern campus: "In time James Meredith will be accepted at Ole Miss in the same manner in which I'm accepted here. People will say hello and nod to him, but he won't be a real part of the school community."

From the editorial page of the January 26th Mississippi Free Press: "While Clyde Kennard languishes in prison, a man who 'visited Oxford' goes free. General Edwin Walker, who helped incite a mob of rabble-rousers to violence the night of September 30, failed to be indicted by the Oxford Grand Jury."

Governor Terry Sanford of North Carolina, after announcing the formation of a Biracial Job Panel: "Despite great progress, the Negro's opportunity to obtain a good job has not been achieved in most places across the country. Reluctance to accept the Negro in employment is the greatest single block to his continued progress and to the full use of the human potential of the nation and its states."

Howard Johnson, presiding over the opening of a new motor lodge and restaurant in Atlanta stated that Atlanta will find it "pretty difficult" to locate a World's Fair here without first desegregating motels and restaurants. He later added, "Desegregation in many areas is bound to come, but we feel local people have to decide. We want to see these things handled with grace and without trouble. As a company policy, we're a national institution. We abide by national laws." (We know of two people who weren't served in Atlanta's new restaurant ----but the fair isn't until 1968!)

Dr. Anna Arnold Hedgeman of New York at the end of the recent National Conference on Religion and Race in Chicago: "The walls of separation in our total American culture make it difficult for the American white man to know the breadth and depth of our Negro religious leadership. There is a tendency to use Negroes as porters, at whatever level."

State Senator Leroy Johnson of Atlanta, after he had appointed one white page for the State Capitol along with several Negro youths: "If I can appoint a white boy who has had all advantages, what moral imperative is placed upon white senators to appoint a Negro boy who has had no advantages."

Bobbi Yancy on the press: "If newsmen don't watch it, five years from now children are going to think Negro was Mr. Meredith's first name."

UNITED STATES NATIONAL STUDENT ASSOCIATION

3457 CHESTNUT STREET • PHILADELPHIA 4, PA. • AREA CODE 215 • BAring 2-1106 • CABLE, NATSTUD

Dear Sir,

During the course of its fifteen year history, the United States National Student Association has enjoyed the cooperation and respect of many people within the academic community. It has endeavored to maintain close contact with key educational groups such as the National Educational Association, the American Council on Education, the National Association of Women Deans and Counsellors, the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators, the National Association of Foreign Student Advisers, and many more.

Recently however, many people in the academic world have questioned the purpose and direction of the National Student Association. We believe that this questionning arises in part because of our work in academic freedom, in part because of the Association's tendancy toward social action, and in part because of the attacks of right wing extremists. It is our opinion that all too often administrators and faculty members, come to know the Association only through some of the more controversial stands taken at its Congress, or only because of materials sent out to discredit it.

For this reason, we believe it essential to extend the range of our contacts in the academic community. Enclosed you will find a mailing from the national office, one designed to inform you of our work nationally and internationally. It is brief and purely descriptive, but we hope that it will raise questions for you. We hope that if you have time, you will write to us and ask about some of the projects in which we are now involved, or offer your criticisms or suggestions.

We certainly realize that the Association, precisely because it is a student group with little continuity, will always face difficulties in communicating with the campus. It also faces the problem of how to gain the full respect of all groups in the academic community, while at the same time championing causes which are particularly student causes. And precisely because students are often zealots and idealists, who sometimes act without discretion, we will also face the problem of moving too rapidly, or in the wrong directions. For all of these reasons we need your help and suggestions.

We hope that this first brief description of some of our projects will not only acquaint you with more of what you are doing, but will stimulate you to write us. We will be sending you more information during the course of the next three months. With deep gratitude

Sincerely yours,

Dennis Shaul

THE ROLE OF USNSA

Throughout its history, the United States National Student Association has continually sought its proper role in American life. It faced on the one hand, the example of militant and syndiclist student unions abroad; on the other, the reality of a comparatively settled society, a society which has never recognized students as a separate class, and has for the most part cared little for their opinions.

The Association has never fully been able to accept the role American society has relegated to students, nor has it been able to change it entirely. But now that it is more confident of its own existence, it is able to view its own objectives with a better perspective.

With this confidence comes the surety that the organization must build its own role by examining American life and the American university and student - very little is exportable from other countries and other student unions to here. Not only, for instance, is it true that American students are not a separate class; it is probably more important that they never consider themselves so. The diversity of educational institutions, the competing and conflicting nature of their philosophies, seems to make that an imperative.

But it is true that the Association's prime objective should be to instill in the student a sense of the importance of his position. For education has always been the essential prerequisite of democratic society. Moreover it ought to help convince the student that he must have a deep concern about the quality of his education, that he ought to take an active part in making it a more perfect experience. There is a certain sense in which the institution exists for him. As the sole consumer of the product education, he can play a significant role as constructive critic and innovator. Moreover, concern about one's own education easily expands into a concern about American education as a whole.

To instill this concern USNSA can do a number of things. Through its Congresses and conferences it must give students the conviction that they themselves should think about and evaluate their curriculum,their extra curricular activities, and their college living experience. Through its programs it can give students methods and ideas which may form a possible basis for discussion among students, faculty, and administration. It can provide a constant incentive to make extracurriculars a supplement rather than a detraction from classroom activity.

Above all, the Association must continue to provide a structure through which students may come together to gain new ideas, and an opportunity for comparison.

The particular obligations of a national union of students are most nearly unique with regard to the issues which directly affect students and higher education. But precisely because the university community is composed of educated individuals, and because the university is meant to be a citadel wherein truth is sought, it has particular responsibilities within the field of civil rights and civil liberties. No democratic society can long maintain its citizen's rights and liberties, if its universities are held in bondage to an outside force which attempts to restrict the areas of research. It is true also that no democratic society can continue to progress unless its universities dare to provide a forum for the new and unorthodox opinion.

It is equally important that in a democracy the university serve as a model on the question of equality; it should recognize differences among individuals only on the basis of academic standards. Therefore it must admit its students on the basis of their intellect and knowledge, and award them honor and standing solely according to their academic achievements.

In American society, as in all other societies, such principles stand as ideals and not realities. Here, then, the function of a national union of students is to formulate a concept of the ideal university and hold this before American students as a goal toward which they must strive. Additionally, it is NSA's duty to promote activity on the part of students which will help make freedom of speech, freedom of association, freedom of access to information, equality of admission procedures, a reality on the American campus. While recognizing the many differences that exist within the many forms of American universities, NSA must enunciate those common principles which are essential to the meaning of the word university.

None of the above should suggest that NSA can remain passive to the daily needs of education and students. Insofar as time and energy will allow, the duty of the organization is clear: it must serve to express areas of student concern and interest and must affect student thought and welfare through its programming.

The former category demands that the organization ask questions and stimulate debate, and not just propose answers. This becomes all the more imperative with the gravity of the question involved, and with the degree of disagreement among articulate and concerned students. It involves not only approaching the people who facilitate change - student personnel administrators, and state and federal legislatures - but it also implies that the organization must present itself to the greater community, to educational, civic, and governmental groups as an institution with something to contribute, an institution with a special and broad prospective, an organization which is capable of thinking in terms broader than its own special short term interest.

To affect student thought and programming the organization has the responsibility to translate the ideas of its constituents into action programs. Student responsibility entails providing programs which make the university a better place in which to live. It means developing patterns of action which allow students to affect the long range goals and quality of American education.

The differences in programming may be startling. For some of the constiuency it may mean activities such as participation in curriculum evaluation, research into some of the fundamental questions about the future of America's education; for other parts, it may mean striving to develop better freshman orientation programs, or better techniques of student government. The vastness of the constituency, and its many differences, make it essential that NSA be responsive to as many different kinds of needs as possible.

Today, perhaps the greatest challenge for NSA is in the field of international affairs. For not only does it face a growing number of new unions from the developing nations, and the older, more established union of Europe, but it also faces the duty of translating its own international programming into something meaningful for the individual member campuses. Scholarships to foreign students, exchanges and delegations, may be valuable in themselves, but their importance is greatly increased if they help to enlarge the American students' knowledge and understanding of foreign affairs.

In an age which is dominated by the crises and tensions of the cold war, NSA must make its international program, a genuine expression of the American students' sympathy with the aspirations of students in the developing nations. Only so conceived is it a meaningful attempt to arrive at that degree of understanding which is a prerequisite for world peace.

Because NSA is a student organization, characterized by quick change of personnel and lack of tradition, it is inevitable that it will continue to search for its place in American society. Each year brings it closer to the time when it will have established its own peculiar area of competence. Each year too, increases the necessity for its existence. For as the world becomes more complex, and the four year college experience becomes more inadequate as a preparation for life and democracy, its potential as an organization becomes more vast. Confident that democracy's best defense is the education of her citizens, the full education of her most talented citizens, NSA must continue to do its part to meet the century's challenge.

NATIONAL COMMISSION PROGRAM

The work of the national commission of the United States National Student Association is varied. The Commission strives to meet the numerous programming requests from member schools; simultaneously it strives to fulfill the resolutions and program mandates of the National Student Congress. To be successful the Commission must meet the requests of many different types of institutions--public and private, religious and technical. Some of the Commission's programs and activities are briefly described below.

The Student Government Information Service, a comprehensive file on the activities, and programs of student organizations throughout the country, is maintained at the national office to answer requests for information on such matters as speakers programs, honor systems, judiciary systems, campus communications, cultural programs, freshman orientation, and leadership training programs.

For the second year, the Association is active in academic freedom programming, under a grant given by the Andrew Norman Foundation. Several publications, and several regional conferences, have discussed the responsibilities and rights of students in the 1960's. The Association has solicited the opinions of deans and presidents, the American Association of University Professors and the American Civil Liberties Union, in operating this project. This year, investigations were made of academic freedom cases at Flint Junior College, and at the University of Colorado. In the spring of 1962, the Association entered an amicus curiae brief in the speakers' ban case at the University of California at Riverside.

This year, too, the Association continues its Southern Project financed by a grant from the Field Foundation. Constance Curry, director, and Dorothy Dawson, her assistant, continue to sponsor human relations conferences and continue their travels throughout the South helping students institute human relations programs. Plans for the spring of 1963 include Southern conferences on international relations, human relations, and student government. Plans are also being made for the 6th Annual Southern Student Human Relations Seminar. Participants in last summer's seminar played key roles across the South in supporting James Meredith's attempt to enroll at the University of Mississippi and in supporting the peaceful integration of Harvey Gant at Clemson.

The Association's efforts in civil rights and human relations have not all centered in the South. During the past two years within the Association there has been an increasing interest in community involvement projects. Students from New England to Oregon have responded to national needs through tutorial projects, human relations councils, neighborhood renewal work.

For the second year the Association will sponsor the Democratic Campus Award, in cooperation with the Anti-Defamation League. This is an effort to stimulate student governments to carry out campus or community programs in human relations.

For several years, the Association has encouraged the discussion of issues of civil liberties. The discussion and resolution of the issues centering around the first amendment of the Constitution are essential to the democratic process. The questions of freedom of belief, speech and assembly which are the central issues of the House Committee on Un-American Activities and the Internal Security Act of 1950, have been particularly important. Perhaps the Association's greatest contribution in this area has been in raising these issues for debate and consideration in the open forum of the student community.

In March of 1961 the Association sponsored a nationwide conference on the International Peace Corps, and thus became one of its first and strongest proponents. Since its establishment, the Association has been interested in the possibility of a domestic peace corps. On March 1--3, the Association is sponsoring a national conference on the National Service Corps. Over 300 students will travel to Washington to discuss the corps' implementation with members of the executive ane legislative branches of the government, and with representatives of voluntary organizations. Senators Hubert Humphrey and Harrison Williams have agreed to speak, and the Attorney General has been asked to keynote.

This year too, the Association takes its first steps into cultural programming. An international cultural exchange, and a nation wide festival of the arts are the long-range goals, but initially the Association will sponsor a literary magazine competition in the spring of 1963. The competition will be open to all student literary magazines. Entries will be judged on a regional and national level on the basis of general excellence. Mr. Norman Cousins, Editor of the Saturday Review, has agreed to serve as honorary chairman. To supplement this, the Association is sponsoring a conference on the artist and the university community. The conference will bring together students, faculty, administrators and adult artists.

Last summer the Association sponsored a voter registration project in Raleigh, North Carolina. Fifteen participants, white and Negro, from North and South, registered over 1600 new Negro voters in less than six weeks. Besides their registration work, the participants tutored grade and high school students, and helped local leaders in adult education. This summer the Association plans to hold a month long civil rights leadership training seminar for fifty Southern students. This is an effort to develop local campus leadership for the civil rights movement. The seminar will attempt to develop the social, economic, and political knowge necessary for progress in the South.

Presently, the Association is engaged in negotiations with several insurance brokers and companies in attempts to develop national student health and accident insurance plans which would be optional to member schools. Plans for an entertainment bureau to reduce the cost of talent and entertainment for member schools are also being discussed.

Traditionally too, the Association provides background papers and mailings in a number of important subjects in the field of education. This year the emphasis is on the President's federal aid to education program, a critique and description of the recently introduced bill, together with general background on the whole question of federal aid. The commission encourages student governments to study and research the question of the impact of the cold war on higher education: that is, the effects that the cold war has on teaching within the college, and the attitudes of faculty and students; the impact that federal money given for technology and research has on large state institutions, and thus indirectly on small schools,

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION PROGRAM

The Foreign Student Leadership Project (FSLP) is designed as an educational experience for American and foreign student leaders. The FSLPaims at introducing a new dimension in international student relations by bringing American students into close contact with a group of representative foreign students who have had previous leadership experience in student activities and organization. The overseas guest, selected to participate in the project, is awarded a scholarship to live and study for one year at a prominent college or university in the United States. In this way, he becomes an informal interpreter of his native country for his American counterparts and provides insight into his own environment and culture. Through academic studies and particularly through responsibility in planning and organizing student activities, the FSLP participant can share his aims and hopes with his fellow students in America as well as learn about theirs.

International Student Relations Seminar: Designed to provide a nucleus of informed leaders in the college community who will be prepared to assist on all levels of USNSA international programming, the International Student Relations Seminar (ISRS) is held for eight weeks each summer.

Around fifteen students from USNSA member schools all over the country participate in the program. Using the facilities and research material of the International Commission of USNSA, the seminar participants study the basic history and problems of international student relations, developments in the student movement around the world, the role of USNSA in this movement, and the relation of these activities to the American student and his campus.

International Commission Publications: The International Commission has prepared a number of publications--several for distribution internationally explaining USNSA and the studen's role in facing particular American problems, many more for campus seminars and programs. Included in the list of these publications are: USNSA Relations with the International Union of Students, African Student Affairs, Near and Far Eastern Student Affairs, Latin American Student Affairs, International Student Cooperation, International Student Exchange and Travel, Guides to Campus International Programming, Student Government and Foreign Student Programming, Work-Study-Travel Abroad, snd Steps Toward Equality.

The Campus International Administrator is a full time staff member devoted to assisting member schools and regions with all phases of international programming. Each year the administrator visits numerous member campuses and answers written requests for information on campus programming.

Overseas Representatives The overseas representatives of USNSA attend national and regional conferences of other national unions of students. They confer with student leaders of many other countries on matters of mutual concern. These representatives send frequent reports to the national office. These reports are a source of invaluable background information for campus conferences and programs, the International Student Relations Seminar and policy formation at the annual National Stdent Congress.

Cooperation The International Commission of USNSA cooperates in various programs and conferences with the World Assembly of Youth, the International Student Conference, the Coordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students, the U. S. Commission to UNESCO, World University Service, the Institute for International Education and the National Association of Foreign Student Advisers.

Contact with Foreign Student Organizations The International Commission maintains a full time staff member to establish and encourage contact and cooperation between USNSA and the many foreign student organizations located in the United States. Each of these groups include visiting students from a particular area or country and are responsible, effective spokesmen for the 50,000 foreign students in U. S. colleges and universities.

Visiting Foreign Student Leaders USNSA is host to as many as 200 foreign student leaders each year. Such visits serve to enhance both USNSA's understanding of international student problems and the visitor's knowledge of the United States, its people, and its students. On many occasions tours have been arranged for these visitors to numerous member campuses where they are hosted by the student government.

Special Exchanges The purpose of the exchange programs is to provide an opportunity for long-term substantive interchange between students of the United States and students of countries with which there is limited contact. Since 1960 USNSA has exchanged 11 students with the Soviet Union and Poland. Students participating in the exchange programs take an active part in the student activities and community life of the universities they attend and promote better knowledge and understanding of their own nations and societies.

Scholarship Programs The purpose of the scholarship programs is to provide an opportunity for students who, because of abnormal conditions in their homelands, are effectively denied access to higher education. USNSA is continuing its program of Algerian scholarships instituted during the Algerian revolution. While Algeria is now independent, the university is not presently adequate to meet the needs of a new nation. Opportunities for higher education in Angola are, because of the Portugese domination, virtually non-existent. USNSA has joined with a number of other organizations in attempting to provide opportunities for higher education for the persons who will be needed to provide leadership when Angola achieves its independence.

Student International Responsibility Project The Student International Responsibility Project was created to increase the responsibility and influence of the university in world affairs and to provide a skilled and knowledgeable cadre of students to assist in evolving this more sophisticated role. Utilizing FSLP participants and other foreign students, pilot projects are being operated on several campuses designed to develop a broad commitment on the part of the university in general and student organizations in particular to non-academic, high-level international programming.

Polback Polback is an extensive information program designed to provide background on a number of crucial international issues for seminars, conferences, newspaper articles, etc.

Technical Assistance Program The Technical Assistance Program (TAP) is concerned with fund raising and technical assistance on American campuses used to promote international awareness and to indicate to foreign national unions of students the concern of American students for international student problems.

International University Seminar Program The International University Seminar program is designed to give students the opportunity for academic but non-curricular examination of pargicular international problems. Participants in the seminars, selected by academic criteria, meet with foreign students from the areas under examination. Seminars are being held this year on the Jacobin left in Latin America and neo-colonialism in Africa.

it has been largely muffled in the West German press and parliament. The dramatic last-minute letter from Secretary of State Rusk to German Foreign Minister Schröder at Brussels urging that the negotiations be kept going had exactly the opposite effect to that intended, according to press observers in Brussels.

Belgian Foreign Minister Spaak, who, in defiance of the Rome Treaty, publicly urged that the continental five continue negotiations with Britain without France, was the most violent of the anti-Gaullist crusaders. There are rumors that he was working in close touch throughout with the British delegation, with international labor leaders, and with a posse of vigilantes from the New Frontier. The temper and strategy of these anti-Gaullists were indicated by an article of Nora Beloff in the London Observer on the eve of the dramatic session in Brussels. Assuming that the French would refuse London's terms for continuation of the talks, the British, wrote Miss Beloff, wanted "the conference wound up at once—with a clarion call to France's five partners and Britain, declaring to the world that Britain's entry is desirable and that negotiations should be resumed as soon as circumstances permit. In this way France would be isolated and the way open for diplomatic and psychological war, backed by commercial and political reprisals—which have, in fact, already started."

Fortunately, no organized anti-French bloc was set up to take sanctions against de Gaulle or to exert concerted new pressures upon him. For this the French largely credit the Bonn government's diplomacy, which though outwardly schizophrenic has been both more subtle and more constructive than generally realized. There is also said to have been a strong reaction inside the Belgian government against Spaak's attitude and a noticeable cooling off of the anti-Gaullist crusading spirit that Italian Premier Amintore Fanfani evidenced to President Kennedy in Washington.

Perhaps, after all, Europe is busy working out its future and strengthening a unity that is already an accomplished fact; it can scarcely afford to indulge in fits of resentment.

The Ivy-League Integrationists

R. W. APPLE, Jr.

JUST DOWN the street from the most aristocratic of Yale's secret societies, Skull and Bones, are the headquarters of another and very different college organization. This is the Northern Student Movement, a loose federation of college civil-rights groups formed only a year and a half ago, which now has about twelve hundred members on sixty-five Eastern campuses. Most of its members are white, like the colleges they come from, but its leadership is more equally biracial.

A number of Northern college students have taken part in Freedom Rides, sit-ins, and voter-registration drives in the South, but the members of the NSM have decided to do something about the barriers to racial equality closer to home. Accordingly, the organization has taken as its primary task the development of leadership and self-esteem in the Negro ghettos of the North.

Because students' chief assets are time and education, the NSM is putting most of its effort into tutoring Negro children in Harlem and North Philadelphia. But in addition to this, it has raised more than ten thousand dollars to help finance the Southern Negro voting drive run by the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), participated in sit-ins and similar projects along the Eastern Shore of Maryland, picketed a segregated apartment building in Rye, New York, collected ten thousand books for Miles College in Birmingham, and operated an educational and recreational program for 150 of the fourteen hundred schoolless Negro children in Prince Edward County, Virginia.

Many of its partisans speak of the Movement—and it is always a movement, never an organization—with such fervor that they sometimes sound rather civil-righteous. ("If you sit down to have dinner with Mary," a Sarah Lawrence girl says of an NSM friend, "you have to talk civil rights. She never talks about anything else.") For some, the NSM takes the place of a fraternity or sorority; for others, perhaps, it is a cult.

To a considerable degree, the NSM is cast in the image of Peter Countryman, its executive director. An intense, slight young white man of twenty, the type sometimes described on campuses as a "cause chaser," Countryman has been in on the NSM from the beginning. "I'm not a utopian," he told me a few weeks ago. "I'm in this simply because I have certain ideals."

Under ordinary circumstances, Countryman would have been a senior at Yale this year, studying philosophy and living in Berkeley College. But an experience during his sophomore year, in the spring of 1961, changed all that. From time to time he had been helping youth workers with Negro boys in the Dixwell area of New Haven, and one night he went to hear three Virginia girls describe their part in a sit-in. "I was very impressed with their honesty and integrity and sacrifice," he said. "It made the academic world seem pretty sterile, and I decided I had to do something." After the meeting, one of the girls, a Negro from Virginia Theological Seminary and College, told him of the poverty of its library. For the next two weeks Countryman cut all his classes and in a frenzied personal campaign collected six thousand books for it.

At a meeting of the New England Student Christian Movement last June, Countryman was chosen as chairman of a committee to raise money for the Freedom Riders. (Although religious groups gave the NSM much of its early support, both Countryman and his organization operate on a completely secular basis.) That summer he lived and worked in a Chicago slum, and that fall, when the fund-raising committee gathered in New Haven, he persuaded it to turn itself into a new organization that would co-ordinate civil-rights activities on Northern campuses.

THE experiences of SNCC and CORE seemed to prove that students had the power to initiate social change, and to some the possibilities appeared limitless. "We had a vision of an integrated society," Countryman explained, "a society with social institutions extremely sensitive to individual problems."

Countryman's objective was to get Northern students to lead the attack on segregation and prejudice in the North: "We had to build a student movement which was not just a deposit for extracurricular energies but a significant force in the solution of racial conflict." To generate this sort of enthusiasm, he concluded, he would first have to involve the students vicariously in the dramatic events in the South. Then, he hoped, they could be made to concentrate on the less spectacular if no less significant problems in the North. During its first year, therefore, the NSM spent most of its energies raising funds to support SNCC's voting drive in the South.

During that year Countryman met Joan Cannady, a Negro mathematics student at Sarah Lawrence whose father is a guidance counselor at a Philadelphia high school. When they began seeing a good deal of each other, it led to the estrangement of Countryman and his father, a Chicago industrial magazine editor. But this only hardened Countryman's determination to travel his own road; he and Joan have since been married.

In April last year, at a conference at Sarah Lawrence, the NSM program was broadened to include sit-ins along the Eastern Shore of Maryland and help for schoolless children of Prince Edward County. At the same time, the tutorial program for Harlem and North Philadelphia was conceived. A panel of speakers at the conference described the frustration and despondency of families caught in the endless slum cycle of poor jobs, poor housing, and poor education, and their remarks helped to shape the new program.

One of the speakers was the Reverend Leon H. Sullivan, Mrs. Countryman's uncle, who was a leader in the series of "selective patronage" boycotts against Philadelphia firms that hired Negroes only for menial jobs. He urged the students to help young Negroes capitalize on the new opportunities being opened up by the boycotts. The tutorial program, he agreed, might be a good way to start.

From Theory to Practice

With no money and no experience, the NSM moved into North Philadelphia to try out its theories. The area is one of chronic educational crisis, where sixty per cent of the students never finish high school and only 2.5 per cent go to college. The tutors, college students, hoped not only to help their pupils with academic difficulties but also to put education on a personal rather than an institutional basis.

The prospective tutors found jobs in hospitals, laundries, camps, and icehouses to support themselves for the summer. Getting pupils proved to be no problem. Some were referred by clergymen and social workers; others were recruited by the tutors on trips to five predominantly Negro high schools. The Philadelphia board of education, under pressure to improve secondary education in the area, welcomed the students' help and lent them textbooks. Fourteen churches and five welfare agencies agreed to serve as tutoring centers. Still, there was no working capital, so Countryman went to the Fels Foundation to ask for help. Four days later, the foundation made two thousand dollars available. Half was used to hire Mrs. Countryman's father as a sort of tutor for the tutors; the rest went for supplies.

When the project itself got under way, there were 375 pupils and 175 volunteer tutors (about seventy of them Negro) from Amherst, Beaver, Bryn Mawr, Yale Law School, Connecticut College, New Rochelle, Penn, Sarah Lawrence, Rhode Island, Lincoln, Temple, Oberlin, Lehigh, and elsewhere. One tutor commuted twice a week from Fort Dix, New Jersey, where he was in the Army. Tutors and pupils met from two to four times a week for ninety-minute sessions, and in addition there were biweekly guidance seminars for the tutors and joint excursions to ball games, concerts, and theatres.

Did it work? A definite answer is impossible, but there is already some evidence of success. Countryman likes to cite the case of Kenneth Taylor, an eighteen-year-old vocational student at Edison High who had belatedly decided to go to college. His college preparatory courses were proving too much for him until the NSM tutors came along, but six hours of special help a week during the summer cleared up his difficulties. He now expects to enter college next fall—possibly West Point. A second star pupil was Albert Milliner, fifteen, a junior at Simon Gratz High School, whose tutor, Meredith Brooks from Vassar, got him through a summer-school geometry course that had baffled him.

The community reaction was excellent—a joint citation from the board of education, the commission on higher education, and the commission on human relations; flattering newspaper editorials; contributions from businessmen and labor leaders; and a tribute from Senator Hugh Scott. Heartened, the NSM decided to continue the project during the school year with a paid staff and volunteer tutors, and almost all the pupils eagerly joined in again.

Harlem yielded less easily to the NSM's mission. The problems there indicate some of the difficulties that the NSM may face as it expands into new areas. The head of the Harlem operation is Kathie Rogers, a tall, pretty girl from New Canaan, Connecticut, who was graduated last year from Sarah Lawrence. "Sometimes," she said a little wearily, "Harlem is impossible." In an attempt to cope with the impossible, she spends as many as eighteen hours a day on the job—until recently without pay.

The Harlem tutorial project last summer was similar to Philadelphia's but much smaller. It, too, was successful enough to warrant continuation into the school year. But Harlem's educational community lacks the homogeneity of North Philadelphia's. Discovering potential pupils and co-ordinating their tutoring with teachers is much more difficult.

Thanks largely to Miss Rogers's diligence and the help of the Harlem Neighborhoods Association, the project has had a modest success. At the Abraham Lincoln Community Center last month, I met three Negro girls who have been working with college students from the metropolitan area. One of them, Leolive Tucker, had been a problem student, with A's in English, C's in social studies, and F's in algebra. She studied only what she wanted to. Her tutor last summer, Andrea Cousins, a daughter of the Saturday Review editor, was greeted with belligerence and disdain. But Miss Cousins ultimately succeeded in getting across an enthusiasm for disciplined study and in winning the younger girl's friendship. Leolive won a scholarship to a private school in North Carolina; she hopes eventually to go to Sarah Lawrence.

The second Harlem project, which attempted to transplant the Philadelphia selective-patronage boycotts, was unsuccessful. Carl Anthony, a young Negro who hopes one day to be a city planner, was in charge, and he admits that through inexperience he "went to too many leaders in too many fields." But it was the complexity and reluctance of the Harlem leadership that compelled him to do so. The result was that economic pressure of the sort the Philadelphia ministers can apply was never brought to bear on the milk company chosen as the initial New York target. Eventually the entire campaign was dropped.

Looking Ahead

The NSM's most serious problem is money. The Harlem project, which had begun on a shoestring, has just received ten thousand dollars from the Field Foundation. The Philadelphia project is also solvent. But the headquarters staff—the Countrymans and field worker Cliff Henry—has run through a four-thousand-dollar grant since last September and must now subsist on money raised in occasional campus fund drives. This summer, tutorial projects will be operating in six cities, and Countryman hopes to put the movement on a national scale. It is unlikely that he can do so with a treasury largely dependent on dollars saved from parental allowances.

Some of the staff members also detect a major flaw in the tutorial program. Because most of the pupils are sent in by churches and social agencies and because the program is voluntary, the NSM is reaching only the student eager to find a way out of his difficulties. With a girl like Leolive Tucker, the problem is not to create motivation—she always wanted to go to college—but to show her how to realize her goals. This is laudable enough, but it leaves untouched the great mass of young Negroes who are hostile to education. If the NSM is to work its revolution in the ghetto, a way must be found to reach them as well. One plan, conceived by Bob Knight of the New York staff, is to set up a cultural and athletic program for junior high school students in the hope that it would feed pupils into the tutorials as they reached senior high. To effect real change, however, the program may have to begin with even younger children in order to reach them before the cynicism and despair of the slum have begun to seep in.

A Manual of Soviet Strategy

RAYMOND L. GARTHOFF

A NUMBER of recent newspaper articles, some scandalously misinformed and misinforming, have referred to a new volume on Soviet military strategy—"smuggled out of the Soviet Union," as one account would have it—that is supposed to offer a secret description of the Kremlin's war plans. The facts are somewhat different.

Military Strategy (Voennaya Strategiya) is the product of the collective labors of fifteen leading Soviet military theoreticians, headed by Marshal Vasily Sokolovsky, who served as chief of the general staff from 1953 to 1960. In its 456 pages, it surveys general principles of military strategy, the character of modern war, and doctrinal and organizational concepts for waging war. The book is described in the introduction as the first comprehensive work on strategy published in Washington, D. C. - Feb. 16 - - "I wish every person in this country could visit Mississippi, as I have," said Jack McKart, coordinator of Operation Freedom, today after arriving in the nation's capital. Mr. McKart has been in the Mississippi delta twice during the winter to help set up machinery whereby Operation Freedom can be of assistance to the harassed Negroes who have tried to register to vote.

He continued: "I wish everyone could sit as I have in the cold sharecroppers' cabins with coat on, see the hunger and the children out of school because they have no adequate clothes, see the bullet holes in the houses of registration workers, hear of the two young women left unattended in a white hospital after they had been shot, talk to the young man just out of jail charged with telephoning a white woman, hear of the mutilated body found near Canton.

"You have to be there to believe it. When I told one Northern minister about these things, he said, 'Don't take it too seriously; this sort of thing has been happening a long time in the south.'

"This minister is not a segregationist; he is not an evil man. He would do anything to help a hungry family next door - people he could see. Most people would. But it is so hard to comprehend when thousands of people are suffering, when a whole state is suffering. I guess that is why the Germans couldn't comprehend about six million Jews in gas chambers. It was too big. They didn't see the human beings. It was just an abstraction - like Mississippi to many people now. When you see, you have to act. I wish everyone could go and see for themselves."

Operation Freedom, with headquarters at 932 Dayton Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, has for two years aided people in West Tennessee who have been evicted and boycotted as a result of their attempts to register to vote. Jack McKart is now in Washington on a tour to raise funds and focus attention on the need for aid.

Operation Freedom's story is told in the accompanying brochure entitled, "Operation Freedom Expands Its Aid Program . . . While Continuing in West Tennessee, Operation Freedom Moves into Mississippi."

Harold Kilpatrick, right, of the Texas Council of Churches, receives an award from Ernest Goldstein of the Southwest Advisory Board of B'nai B'rith's Anti-Defamation League for the council's work in human relations. Looking on are Governor John Connally, background left and State Senator A. R. Schwartz of Galveston. The award was presented at the league's 50th anniversary dinner here Saturday night.

Nod Given To Dobie, Churches

Texas' salty ambassador of folklore and goodwill, J. Frank Dobie, shared equal billing Saturday night with the Texas Council of Churches at an award's presentation banquet of the Southwest Advisory Board of the Anti-Defamation League.

Dobie, characteristically, was unable to be present — he was attending a meeting of the Texas Institute of Letters in San Antonio to fight censorship and bigotry—the very thing that won him the 1962 Human Relations award.

The awards are a presentation of the Southwest Advisory Board of the Anti-Defamation League of the B'nai B'rith for making significant contributions to better intergroup understanding.

No one in Austin had ever received the award before.

Highlight of the awards banquet, the 50th anniversary of the ADL, was an address by Governor John Connally.

Connally cited the League for helping to create a climate in which freedom and education could grow.

"Today the Anti-Defamation League is serving America by working to insure that all Americans receive equal rights and fair treatment," Connally said.

"The Anti-Defamation League substitutes fact for fancy and inculcates common sense where bigotry used to prevail," the governor said.

Dobie, in a tape recording, voiced disapproval of the recent censorship of books in public schools, claiming that if anybody really wanted sin "they can see it anywhere."

Accepting the 1962 Human Relations award for the Texas Council of Churches was Harold Kilpatrick, executive director.

A long list of state officials and public figures attended the banquet, which was held at the Driskill Hotel. State Senator A. R. Schwartz of Galveston, chairman of the Southwest Advisory Board of ADL, was toastmaster.

Shares With Council of Churches

Dobie Honored for Fighting Bigots, Censors

J. Frank Dobie, salty chronicler of Texas tales, and the Texas Council of Churches this year share top state honors for their work in human relations.

Dobie and the council have been named recipients of the 1962 Human Relations Awards given by the Southwest Advisory Board, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

The honors will be given at a banquet at the Driskill Hotel at 7 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 16. Governor John Connally will make the principal address.

The awards are presented to the person, persons, or organization in the Southwest who made, said, "ranks in eminence with the great Carl Sandburg, as a champion through words of the American ideal."

The Texas Council of Churches, Feld added, has been a vigorous spokesman over the years for religious truth, and "the conscience of our people."

In recognizing the Council, he said, the Anti-Defamation League "pays tribute to the thousands of church people and clergymen in every city, town and hamlet . . . who have stood firmly, yet with great courage, the test of our people, the test of the religion, to a greater understanding of the American dream."

Reservations for the awards banquet may be made by calling Mrs. Jack Goldstein, GR 2-1496; Chester Snyder, GR 2-[illegible]; or Pat Adelman, GR 8-5755.

The honors banquet annually coincides with the founding of the Anti-Defamation League, which this year is celebrating its 50th anniversary.

Benj Feld of Houston, chairman of the Awards Committee, said that in selecting Dobie, "the League pays tribute to him for having consistently fought bigotry and censorship for the past half [illegible]

Intergr Com. charges

The Emergency Civil Liberties Committee yesterday (Wednesday) announced that it had agreed to accept the case of Advance, a New York youth organization, as a legal test of the constitutionality of the McCarran (Internal Security) Act of 1950.

It is expected that hearings before the Subversive Activities Control Board will take place in the early Spring. The ECLC will carry the case into the courts in the event of an adverse ruling by the SACB.

The basis for the acceptance by the ECLC of the case of Advance was outlined thus yesterday by Clark Foreman, director of the civil liberties organization:

"On January 10, 1963, the Attorney General of the United States petitioned the Subversive Activities Control Board to label Advance a 'communist front' organization under the terms of the McCarran Act. The charges include the accusation that certain positions taken by Advance 'parallel' those taken by the Communist Party, that the Communist Party inspired the formation of Advance, helped obtain contributions for it and that some Advance members are Communist Party members.

"Advance is a group of 150 young people, mostly students, organized in February of 1960, with a membership exclusively in New York City. The group describes itself as a socialist-oriented youth group organized to carry on discussion and activities consistent with its general outlook.

"The Emergency Civil Liberties Committee takes the position that even if all the charges are true -- which we do not concede -- that the group has a constitutional right to exist; that the Attorney General's action not only violates First Amendment guarantees of a small local group, but is destructive of the rights of all young people democratically to discuss and act upon the crucial issues of our day.

"The ECLC believes that the danger in the Advance case goes far beyond the fantastic penalties imposed by the McCarran Act. We share with Justice Black the view expressed in his magnificent dissent of June 5, 1961 (Communist Party vs. S.A.C. Board): 'When the practice of outlawing parties and groups begins, no one can say where it will end.'

"Because of our profound confidence in the basic democratic good sense of the American people, we are convinced that the case of Advance and similar proceedings can be won. We believe that while the instant issue is over a small organization, Americans of varied political views share our conviction that what is involved is nothing less than the democratic freedoms of us all. We are persuaded that, sooner or later, this will be recorded in the decisions of our courts."

400 Managers Respond to Equal Service Plea

The Commission on Human Rights has received an encouraging response to the appeal of Governor Bert Combs to restaurants, motels and other places of public accommodation to serve all persons without racial discrimination.

The Commission received return postal cards from more than 400 business establishments which indicated "We provide equal service for all regardless of race or color." About three-fourths of these businesses said that they would display the equal service emblem provided by the Commission and asked that copies be sent them to post in a conspicuous place.

About 17 cards were returned with negative responses. Eight managers marked the card "We are considering this policy. Send us more information or contact us when convenient."

7,000 Asked to Serve All

The Governor's letter was sent in November to 7,000 places of public accommodation throughout the state. The Equal Service For All program is a part of Kentucky's commemoration of the 100th Anniversary of President Abraham Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation which took effect in January 1863.

The emblem which Governor Combs asked the business managers to display consists of a copy of the State seal under the heading "Equal Service For All - Commended by the Commonwealth." It is already on display in Kentucky State parks.

Commenting on the response to the Governor's request, Commission Executive Director Galen Martin said, "We are pleased to learn of many places that are open without discrimination which we hadn't known about earlier. This is particularly true of places in smaller towns and along some of our major highways. Tourists and our own citizens will be glad to see the Equal Service Emblem in such places as they travel."

Several newspapers in various parts of the state have given editorial endorsement to the program and urged businessmen in their community to participate. Among papers carrying such editorials are: The News, Auburn; Kentucky Standard, Bardstown; Enterprise, Beattyville; Meade County Messenger, Brandenburg; McLean County News, Calhoun; The News, Greenup; Herald, Hazard; and the Anderson County News, Lawrenceburg.

The United Church Women and other religious and civic groups have been active in distributing small cards designed to be left with managers or cashiers of restaurants and other public places to register support for equal service. A second order for 10,000 cards has been made.

Official Sanction for a Big Job

It may come as a puzzlement to some as to why the city commission has passed an ordinance creating a commission on Human Rights when such an organization has already been functioning in Henderson for a long period of time.

The answer is to be found in the direction of the Commonwealth of Kentucky. The 1960 legislature directed that such groups could and preferably should be given official status by city governments in Kentucky.

Henderson's Commission on Human Rights has been an active and well-functioning group which believes that Negroes should not be relegated to second class citizenship. But the organization has been self-impelled, lacking official status.

Now the city commission has complied with the desire of Governor Combs, the legislature, and the Kentucky Commission on Human Rights. Through the passage of the ordinance creating an official Commission for Henderson, the group becomes affiliated with the state commission and has its official stamp of approval.

The Henderson Commission on Human Rights has been an active body of about 20 Negroes and Whites who have been working under the leadership of elective officers of whom Hecht Lackey is chairman, Rev. Tom Frances vice president and Annette C. Brown, secretary. No treasurer has been elected because the group has functioned without dues and without funds.

Now that official status has been given the group by the passage of the ordinance, Mayor Robert B. Posey will appoint 25 members who will become the official body of the Commission on Human Rights. Doubtless many of the new appointments will be carry-overs, but it is likely that new names will also appear on the roster.

It has taken courage for white people to get on the front lines in this battle for the rights of Negroes. But courage is a concomitant of belief in the rightness of the cause, and the members have been not only willing, but anxious to serve.

The group has been divided into sub-committees on education, employment, recreation, housing, etc. This type of grouping will be continued as the group works forward on one of the first community surveys to be conducted by such an officially constituted body in the state of Kentucky. Louisville has had the first such groups and Henderson is running a close second.

We are grateful to the city commission for its temerity in creating such a body. Its existence in no way embarrasses the city commission members by requiring city approval of studies and activities. But the official status of the group does add impetus to the study which is already underway.

Congratulations to Mayor Posey and Commissioners King and Williams for their cooperation in sending the Henderson Commission on Human Rights on its way. The survey now being undertaken should lead to some interesting and worthwhile findings in the field of human relations.

Are You a '99'?

A Greyhound bus pulled into the bus station at Henderson and four Negroes alighted. One of them took a dime and went to a telephone booth to call for a taxi.

Seventeen minutes later by the clock a taxi pulled up to the bus station. But this time a white man had joined the group awaiting the taxi. As the Negroes started to board the taxi they were told they couldn't ride in the cab because the white man objected to riding with Negroes. The taxi pulled away leaving the Negroes to call another cab in hopes of having better luck with the next cab.

Another Greyhound bus pulled up to the station. A white man and a Negro got off together. The white man told the colored man that he needed a taxi but didn't have a dime with which to make the call. The Negro furnished the dime and the white man called a cab.

When the cab arrived, the white man got on first and the Negro followed. He was told that he couldn't ride with the white man.

"If he can't ride then I won't ride either," said the white man.

"If it is all right with you it is all right with me," said the cab driver. The two drove off together.

Ordinarily the problem is solved in another manner. The cab driver reports to his switchboard "I've got a 99." This means there is a Negro passenger aboard and the switchboard is supposed to avoid mixing white and blacks in the same cab.

Are you a "99"? How would you react to such a treatment by a public conveyance and common carrier?

The Negro's first objective in his fight for first class citizenship was to be allowed to break the hold of the "Jim Crow" regulation which relegated him to the back of a train or bus. In many places "Jim Crow" is no longer a serious problem.

But now that there are no more street cars, and few trains, the Negro runs into a problem with another type of "Jim Crow" regulation. He can't ride in a taxi with any white person who objects to his color, even though the Negro may have been the one to call the cab in the first place.

Who is going to solve this knotty problem? Possibly some progress can be made by bringing it to the attention of the city commission in reference to the licensing of public conveyances. A great deal of business which goes to taxis comes from the segment of the population not able to afford private cars.

Obviously something needs to be done, and obviously the switch from "Jim Crow" to "99" hasn't solved any problems either for those who must bear the insufferable insults, or for those who drive the cabs and seek to avoid trouble through separation of races.

We can't give the answer but we can state a problem. Nobody want to be known as a "99"—and nobody running a public conveyance wants to be put in the position of refusing service to one class of citizenry because his skin is pigmented.

There is an answer, and we are hoping that the city commission will find the answer to a perplexing and cruel situation.

Municipal Recreation Desegregation

Most City Owned Facilities Admit Negroes

15 Cities Operate "Open" Swimming Pools; 9 Segregate

The vast majority of municipally owned recreational facilities in Kentucky are open to all persons without racial discrimination. Nearly all city parks, playgrounds, community centers, tennis courts and golf courses in Kentucky serve all citizens alike, according to a survey conducted in the fall of 1962 by the Commission on Human Rights.

While fifteen Kentucky cities operate swimming pools without discrimination, there are nine cities with segregated pools, and this is the phase of municipal recreation where most segregation persists.

Seven cities operate pools for whites only and from which Negroes are excluded. These cities include Greenup, Harlan, Madisonville, Morganfield, Shelbyville, Tompkinsville and Williamsburg.

Two other cities operate duplicate and separate facilities and exclude Negroes from the "white" pools. In Henderson Negroes are admitted to one city pool in a Negro section but not allowed in two other city pools. The City of Bardstown operates two swimming pools, one for whites and one for Negroes.

In Danville, the city supports a pool for Negroes only, but has no publicly owned facility for whites.

The responding city official of Ashland, which has two separate pools, said he was unable to say whether Negroes would be excluded from the "white" pool because no Negroes have gone there to swim.

In addition Nicholasville operates a wading pool in which Negro children are not allowed.

Of the seventy-three municipalities reporting that they own recreational facilities, only three appear to exclude Negroes completely. They are Harlan, Madisonville and Nicholasville.

In addition to the wading pool, Nicholasville's facilities include a park and a playground to which Negroes are not admitted. While city officials in Madisonville did not respond, a citizen reported that that city has a park, playground, ball park, tennis court golf links, wading pools and swimming pool. Richmond, Kentucky excludes Negroes from the city park, playground, and summer recreation programs, but reported that football and basketball activities at the ball park include Negroes.

In response to the question, "Have you experienced any difficulty as a result of fair treatment policies in (municipal) facilities?", there were fifty-five "no" responses, one "yes" and two who said "very little."

Facilities Not Sold to Avoid Desegregation

The practice of selling public recreational facilities to private interests to avoid desegregation, which has been used in some Southern states, does not appear to have been followed in Kentucky. Fifty-eight cities reported that no facilities had been sold or leased to private operators, while two answered "yes" to this question. One town reported sale of a ball park to a private group 7 or 8 years ago, but a conversation with the Mayor makes it clear this was not to avoid desegregation but to obtain development of the facility which is open to all.

About two-thirds of responding cities reported that they employ Negro recreational directors or supervisors. Twenty-five of the municipalities, representing the larger areas, said they employed Negroes in such positions, while thirty-six said they did not.

The Little League Baseball programs appear to be the most widely desegregated activities, although their connection with city recreation programs varied considerably. Thirty-six communities reported that the Little League program is completely desegregated. The desegregation is limited to "certain leagues" in three areas including: Fort Thomas, Lexington and Fayette County and Shelbyville. In Providence and Tompkinsville, Little League desegregation is limited to "certain teams" and in Flemingsburg, to "all star teams."

Wading Pools	15	3	18

__/ These figures represent the numbers of cities with one or more facilities of the type listed, and not the total number of parks etc. affected. A total of eighty-four cities responded to the survey but nineteen had no facilities.

Responses to the survey indicate considerable variation in the use of city recreation facilities by Negroes. The question was, "If the various recreation facilities are 'open' to Negroes, to what extent do they use these facilities?" Those responding were asked to circle the alternatives of, "Seldom," "Infrequently," "In Large Numbers," or "Often." Nineteen communities circled "Often," sixteen designated "Seldom," seven marked "Infrequently," and three indicated, "In Large Numbers." Several others said they never had Negroes appear at the facilities even though they were "open."

Timed with School Desegregation

Survey responses suggest that the timing of school desegregation has had considerable influence on the beginning of desegregation in public recreation facilities. To the question of when were the "open" recreation policies adopted, several city officials indicated the same year as school desegregation. However some lag was indicated in several other cities and the largest group responding to this question gave 1960 as the year the municipal facilities were "opened." Ten cities mentioned 1960-61 and seven gave 1956 as the year of beginning. The Mayors of two cities gave 1962 and one said the schools were just beginning desegregation. One city clerk said the recreation facilities have been desegregated, "Since colored children started going to school with the white children." Some of the facilities reported on by the Mayors were school related.

The changing patterns were reflected in Paducah where separate recreation boards, one for white, and another for Negro facilities, were combined into one board with representation for various segments of the community.

In answering the question, "If 'open' facilities are used seldom or infrequently, please suggest why?" most who replied mentioned the small number of Negroes in their area.

Some indicated that no Negroes lived in their city but said there would be no discrimination. One small town in Eastern Kentucky reported, "The facilities are open to all without discrimination. The manager of the swimming pool stated this was his second year and that no Negroes had ever been in the pool during that time. He stated the pool was open to all and no one had been refused admittance."

Negroes Haven't Asked

In one city where some facilities are not "open" to Negroes, the Mayor said, "Our Negro residents have never asked to use the swimming pool in the city park. The Council has never taken any action one way or the other what to do if they should ask." He added that no legal action has been taken, and said the majority of Negroes would rather "use their own facilities."

One of the most interesting situations is that reported by a mayor of a small town in the Purchase section of Kentucky. There a private corporation owns property which they leased to the City for one dollar a year and the City in turn leases it to a Lions Club. The facilities include a ball park, picnic tables and swings for the children. The Mayor said, "We have never had any trouble with the colored as we have very few and they seem contented to stay among their own color. Since we have never had any problems, it would be difficult to say what action would be taken if they asked to use for example our Community Center."

Classed as "Indian Blacks"

A city clerk in an Eastern Kentucky city reported "There are not more than a dozen colored people in all of . . . county, however, we do have possibly 25 or 30 people who are classed as Indian Black. These people are treated as the whites are and we have no trace of racial problems. Our schools and all facilities are shared with everyone alike."

Few cities responded to the request, "If the City operates some segregated facilities, please indicate whether separate facilities are available for Negroes." However one which has no enforced segregation mentioned the existence of ". . .neighborhood boundaries, (which) play a major role in determining the use of recreation facilities. Negro and white participants do commute to other areas for the sake of playing together in certain sports. These associations are perhaps their school contacts."

Little League Baseball programs represent the most widely desegregated recreational activity in the survey. Thirty-five communities reported their program as desegregated, while five areas indicated some limitations.

CONCLUSION - As in other fields examined by the Commission on Human Rights, desegregation of municipal recreation facilities has worked out well where it has been tried, and nearly every city owning such facilities has begun desegregation to some extent. While some cities have not begun swimming pool desegregation, an example has been set for them in seventeen other cities representing all sections of Kentucky.

This situation provides a clear answer to an editorial comment carried in May by a newspaper in southern Kentucky. The paper in commenting on the closing of parks in certain Southern cities said in part: "Recreational areas as regards segregation is causing much concern over the country (South) . . . Louisville, Kentucky, has one of the few integrated public swimming pools in the country. Thus, the problem of mixed races stays with us."

Practical experience in city recreational facilities throughout Kentucky provides no support for continued exclusion of Negroes from city park facilities. Experience in Kentucky's multi-million dollar state park system which has been "open" since about 1957 likewise shows that such policies of services for all will succeed.

In the light of this experience, exclusion policies should be ended by those cities which still have them. No city should evade the question by saying they have no policy because Negroes have never asked the City Council. Such a burden should not be placed on Negro children who want to swim or to ride a see-saw. Nor should their parents need to take legal action to guarantee such a right in the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

NOTE: The Commission has made every effort to insure the accuracy of this report, and has double checked many answers by phone. It is possible that some policies have changed since the survey forms were returned. Please send any corrections, changes or additions to:

WHOEVER PLEADS FOR JUSTICE HELPS TO KEEP PEACE. —William Allen White

Kentucky's reputation for fairness depends on business people

KENTUCKY'S RECORD of peaceful race relations progress provides examples which some other states might well follow. Our state can be distinguished from some states because our governors have provided leadership to bring about fair treatment in racial matters without trouble.

Governor Combs has now asked the managers of restaurants, hotels, movies and other places of public accommodation to provide equal service for all persons without discrimination based on race, creed or color. Isn't this a logical step? As the Governor said, Kentucky is trying to attract tourists and we ought to make it known that our Kentucky hospitality doesn't carry a racial tag. Certainly this is in the best traditions of a Commonwealth dedicated to the motto of "United We Stand—Divided We Fall."

We hope that local businessmen will join others throughout the state in the Governor's voluntary program. McLean countians, most of whom are conscious of Christian teachings, will certainly support such a move which is in keeping with the principles of religion and democracy.

Governor Combs has sent letters to 7,000 places of public accommodation in the Commonwealth urging the adoption of a policy of service to all citizens regardless of race. The Governor's letter is part of a larger program of the Commission on Human Rights to achieve Equal Service For All through the voluntary co-operation of individual establishments. Among the many civic and government leaders endorsing the program are Lt. Gov. Wilson W. Wyatt, Sen. Thruston Morton, Edward T. Breathitt, Jr., Albert B. Chandler and Atty. Gen. John B. Breckinridge.

You may wonder, for instance, why the matter of restaurant service for people of all races should be of great importance in McLean county. The reason is that you never know when an incident in McLean county might have a bearing on the welfare of our nation and the peace of the world. Just a few days ago, a distinguished scholar from Liberia was refused service in two restaurants in Kentucky because he was the "wrong color".

Last week, State Department officers told us that one of the biggest burden they have to carry in building good relations with the emerging nations of Africa and Asia is the report of incidents such as these, which are insulting to free people. Such items are grist for the Communist propaganda mill.

The success of this effort to achieve fair treatment for all our citizens will depend ultimately upon the fair-mindedness and active commitment of individual citizens at the local level. McLean countians have demonstrated such qualities in the matter of public school desegregation. It is not unreasonable to expect a similar response to the Commonwealth's program of Equal Service For All.

Coach Rupp Comments

In the January 21, Courier Journal, sportswriter Larry Boeck reported the following as a part of U. K. Coach Adolph Rupp's explanation for the dismal performance of Kentucky teams this season.

"Other regions are catching up with improved basketball, and Kentucky boys are helping them. George Unseld (Seneca), for instance, is at Kansas. Joe Dan Gold (Benton) is at Mississippi State. Tom Thacker (Covington Grant) is at Cincinnati. Georgia Tech and Vanderbilt have state boys.

"If we in the state had Gold and Thacker and the others, we'd be in pretty good shape."

EDITOR'S NOTE: Thacker and Unseld are Negroes.

COUNCIL MEETS IN ANN ARBOR

During the Christmas holidays in Ann Arbor, SDS took a good look at itself and made several steps forward in its two-year old trek toward maturity. The meeting of the National Council, which is composed of NEC members plus representatives of chapters and associated groups, was attended by about 35 people from various points around the na-

The Bulletin is prepared by National Secretary Jim Monsonis and Assistant National Secretary Don McKelvey, except in the case of signed or quoted articles. Articles about local situations are usually derived from letters and other materials sent to the National Office by local groups and individuals. Any responsibility for inaccuracies, distortions, misstatements, etc., are usually the staff's, for which we apologize.

This issue of the Bulletin is divided into three parts: the Membership Bulletin (MB), containing news of SDS activities and other campus happenings; the Correspondence section (CORR), including primarily (this month) an interchange among a good number of people about the New York City newspaper strike; and the Discussion Bulletin (DB), containing substantive political articles by SDS members.

Needless to say, we urge all members to contribute to all three sections of the Bulletin.

Dues Are Due!!

AN OPEN LETTER TO SDS MEMBERS

Dear SDS Member,

This Membership Bulletin is quite long: eighteen pages not counting the Correspondence and Discussion Bulletin sections. It contains, we believe, much information of interest and importance to socially concerned students and others. But there are too few reports of activity by SDS groups and individuals, and this is the concern of this letter.

SDS members are not organizing. If we are to have a campus base it must consist of local chapters who engage in continual activity inter-relating the theoretical and action aspects of our program. Without such a base of chapters we are nothing more than a collection of like-minded individuals scattered at random through the American college scene.

Too often national officers and national meetings blame lack of financial stability for our inabil ty to organize. Rather, the opposite is true, we suspect: we cannot raise money because we do not have chapters doing things. Chapters can be started with little or no local money and a minimum of resource help from the national office--mostly literature. What is needed is an investment of time and effort on the part of individual SDS members. We must get into our communities--whether these be the student bodies, particular areas of cities, work groups, or whatever--to promulgate ideas and stimulate action.

Until this effort and activity is tion, including nine NEC members and five chapter representatives. Four days of intensive meetings on organizational plans, programming, and review of where we stand, left us rather exhausted but feeling more confident about the future.

It is hard to summarize the content of the meeting. How does one capture the sense of direction and purpose that emerged gradually; or the growing frustration attendant upon the realization that we simply do not have the resources to do what we wish to? Nevertheless certain programmatic and directional summaries can be made which can give some indication.

1. The National Council made the formal decision that top priority (with fund-raising) over the coming Spring is to be organizing chapters. We have the skeleton of a structure and some idea of an integrated philosophy of social change embodied in the Port Huron Statement; now we must fill in the skeleton and expand the PHS's constituency--which are essentially the same thing. At present we have only a few functioning chapters, some of which were organized during the Fall. But until there are many more chapters, comprising a co-ordinated body of students and young adults who are agents of social change and who identify themselves as SDS members, we will not be fulfilling our function. In the light of these long-range needs, the following organizational tasks are of primary importance over the Spring:

a. paying expenses for Field Secretary Steve Max, so he can spend most of the Spring on the road and at campuses.
b. a series of regional conferences dealing with the range of SDS views and focusing on student involvement in social change; conferences are planned or hoped for in Ohio, Washington/Baltimore, New York State, possibly Illinois.
c. mailings which go out of the national office: an expanded Bulletin (this is the first); a bi-weekly key list mailing to key people on campuses; other things as they seem relevant. More concentration of national office on local groups and chapter building.

2. In the area of national program, the emphasis is to be on action that will assist local groups. The following were reviewed:
a. a conference on university reform at Brandeis (see p. 5)
b. a pamphlet on voter registration and the student's role, to educate and direct students interested in civil rights (see pp. 8 and 9)
c. a mailing(about to be sent) including "Peace, Power, and the University" and a suggestions for local programming and organizing in the area of peace;
d. a collection of documents to fill in the gap of material on university reform.

Some of the workings of the National Council are discussed elsewhere in this Bulletin, some will come in future Bulletins. In one sense it does not seem to be a very exciting result: the traditional areas of peace, civil rights, and university reform were discussed, along with the need for organization. It is more and more clear, though, that these are the frontiers of social change in America, and that students cannot and will not exercise their proper influence toward social change until they organize themselves into a self-directed, visionary community. It is the communication of this understanding to the people assembled that was most important--and the National Council meeting will be judged a success or failure by the extent to which these urgent tasks are carried forward over the Spring.

forthcoming, chapter reports will continue to be few and fund-raising an insuperable problem. A "movement" means local activity, and only the membership can build a movement.

THE NATIONAL STAFF

"Even to maintain the misery of Asia today at a constant level will require a rate of growth tripling the national income and the aggregate production in Asian countries by the end of the century. For Asians to have the (unacceptable) '50 standard of Europeans, less than $2000 per year for a family, national production must increase 21-fold by the end of the century, and that monstrous feat only to reach a level that Europeans find intolerable." --from the PHS

Nina Folshin reports from the BRANDEIS U. chapter (Waltham, Mass.) a number of activities. Besides the forthcoming University Reform conference being sponsored by the chapter on March 1-3 (see p. 5 story), SDS members are active in local disputes over NDEA and the campus newspaper, and plan to publish a Newsletter.

Though lack of an available mimeo machine thwarted plans to publish the first issue of "University Liberal Thought and Action" in early January, that problem has been solved and the Newsletter's prospects are bright. An all-campus referendum on participation in the revised NDEA is planned for the first post-intersession week. The chapter plans to get out a statement prior to the vote and are considering a debate between the Brandeis debate team and SDS Vice-President Paul Booth. An editorial on NDEA which could not appear in the proposed Newsletter was reprinted in the Justice (the campus paper).

Long-standing hostility between the school administration and the editorial staff of the Justice has resulted in the possibility of the college's withdrawing its support for the Justice, thereby causing its demise. The proposed administration solution--a Publications Board of primarily faculty membership whose function it would be to keep a week-to-week eye on the Justice's operations--is considered unsatisfactory by the students. An SDS-suggested compromise is being discussed now; both administration and Justice staff seem receptive. More news of developments in the next Bulletin.

At GEORGIA STATE COLLEGE (Atlanta), there are problems of administrative arbitrariness. Dayton Pruitt was told by the Dean of Men that there is a college rule prohibiting a campus group from affiliating with a national organization until one year after its formation on campus. No one else around the school, including the Student Activities Committee members, has heard of this regulation; aside from this, there appears to be no trouble, as Student Council approval seems assured. Plans for the first quarter are to concentrate mostly on the issue of student and faculty freedoms in the college.

From SWARTHMORE C., Paul Booth reports:

"As of now, we plan to set up an extra-curriculum of three seminars for the coming semester. It would include an American Society Seminar, a peace course, and a seminar on Student Affairs in co-operation with the NSA Committee and involving Bryn Mawr and Haverford /sister small Quaker schools/ people." (Last minute word is that SDSers are signing students up for SDS I, SDS II, and SDS III seminars at Spring registration.)

"We are also in the talking stages with County SANE people about peace politics. A joint meeting of all County peace groups will be held in March, at which I will give a presentation on peace politics.

"We are also discussing the possibility of stronger organic connections with the Swarthmore Political Action Club, a large group concentrating its efforts this year in Chester, a neighboring city, with a Negro Tutorial program and some direct action."

From NORTH TEXAS STATE C. (Denton), Bill Jamison reports that the chapter is having trouble becoming an official school club; "the administration, which completely controls decisions of this nature, is opposed to anything on the left of Goldwater.." SDS members there have been active in the officially recognized Political Economy Club, hoping thereby to introduce controversial subjects and viewpoints. They plan to be active contributors also to A Priori, a small literary journal.

"The FDR FOUR FREEDOMS CLUB, New York City SDS Associate, is holding a fund-raising drive for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee on the lower east side of Manhattan during the month of February. Participants will invade the housing projects in these areas in groups of four per building, ringing doorbells and collecting money for SNCC. The group is using as its headquarters for the drive a local Reform Democratic clubhouse. Many other groups are participating in the drive including Reform Democratic youth groups, NSA committees, and various independent campus groups. The drive will begin on February 10."

At HUNTER COLLEGE (Bronx Division) in NYC, the SDS chapter expects formal school recognition at the beginning of the semester, reports Mark Scher. Formal programming has been hampered by the lack of such recognition, though recruitment efforts have been quite successful over the Fall semester. Proposed for the coming semester are selective patronage efforts, weekly discussion of the Port Huron Statement, and a newsletter to the student body (the only political publications extant are the campus paper and an occasional YAF sheet). Also, SDS members will be involved in the planning of a proposed right-left debate over HUAC (to be sponsored by YAF and the campus civil liberties group), which will include showings of "Operation Abolition" and "Operation Correction", and a debate between outside speakers.

NSA REFORM PLAN AIRED

In a draft outline which has considered extensively by the NSA NEC over Christmas, SDS NEC member Al Haber (U. of Michigan) has suggested problems and principles for reform of the National Student Association. The outline is summarized briefly here; copies may be obtained from Al at 510 E. William, Ann Arbor, Mich. In the next Bulletin, we expect a story indicating the reaction of the NSA NEC to the proposals.

The main thrust of the problems and reforms discussed centers around: (1) the relative lack of substantive political discussion of many of the issues dealt with by NSA; (2) the considerable lack of participation on the part of member schools and their delegates to the National Student Congress; and (3) the overabundance of resolutions at the NSC and the resultant diffusion of energies and lack of focus.

The suggested reforms include: (1) the instututionalization of ideologically oriented caucuses (liberal and conservative or radical, liberal, moderate, and conservative) at the NSC and provision that they meet daily to develop partisan arguments on issues and priorities and that candidates for major NSA offices debate before them; (2) the setting up of a Resolutions Committee (to be elected by the NSA NEC) whose specific function would be to gather proposed resolutions and to solicit counter-resolutions and arguments for all sides; members of each caucus would be ex officio on the Resolutions Comm.; (3) the replacement of outside speakers at the NSC by student debates on issues; (4) distribution well in advance of the NSC of a resolutions booklet containing resolutions and counter-resolutions proposed for the NSC and background material prepared by the NSA National Office and by interested schools and individuals; (5) the institutionalization of NSA responsiveness to member schools and their student governments, including encouraging them to prepare materials on resolutions suggested by them and to suggest topics and resource personnel for the NSC; (6) cutting the number of resolutions to be considered by the NSC to ten (2 from each of the five standing committees, which would have the responsibility of holding seminars on the various proposed resolutions and of weeding out all but two), thus pinpointing issues and encouraging individuals and student governments to involve themselves more in issues of concern to them; (7) discontinuation of the referral of policy questions to the post-NSA NEC meeting; that body would be mandated only to consider questions of program and administration; (8) giving to the officers the perogative to speak for the Association within the scope of the Basic Policy Declarations.

While discussing proposed reforms of the NSA, it is interesting to note a CPS release of December 14, 1962, noting a Daily Californian (U of Cal-Berkeley) editorial calling for making the compulsory campus-wide election of all NSC delegates a criterion for membership in NSA. Many schools' delegates are now selected by appointment by the student government. The editorial argued that inasmuch as the NSA was perceived as speaking for "the American student", it should be more directly responsive to its constituents' wishes. (It should be noted that the Haber proposals would facilitate such a procedure by getting the issues out to student governments--and assumedly thereby to the student bodies--as well in advance of the NSC as possible, and through greater responsiveness to students, creating greater involvement in NSA's workings.)

CUBA DEMONSTRATION IN ATLANTA

Although the following story was received from Atlanta prior to the publication of the last Membership Bulletin, it was not included then due to an oversight. Because of the importance of the Atlanta,demonstrations, we are including the story now.

"Demonstrations against Kennedy's position on Cuba were held in Atlanta the Thursday and Friday following his Monday television announcement of the blockade. Because Atlanta's only "peace" organization, the Peace Council, is not action-oriented, the demonstrations were spontaneously planned and publicized by several individuals who shared the same point of view on the crisis. This was an inspiring aspect of the demonstrations, for no one would have predicted such a response in a city which has heard almost nothing about peace issues.

"Numerically the group was quite small--about 30 the first day, 20 the second--not worth mentioning in comparison with Washington, New York, and other places. However, this small number was quite significant from another perspective, in that they were the first demonstration for peace in the Deep South, an area considered more militaristic by nature than the North and without the tempering influence of newspapers with a moderate or liberal position on Cuba.

"The demonstrations received enormous publicity. Representatives from the NY Times (Claude Sitton), UPI, AP, Newsweek, TV stations, radiostations, and the local papers covered the peace picketing, as well as the two separate counter-pickets--one initiated by the National States Rights Party (affiliated with the American Nazi Party) and one started by students from Georgia State C. The demonstrations were also well covered by the city police and plainclothesmen from the FBI and Georgia Bureau of Investigation, who questioned and took pictures of each person in the anti-blockade line, though not the others. This served as a restraining factor upon people who otherwise would have joined the group.

"The angle taken by the local press was that the peace demonstration was composed primarily of members of the civil rights movement. (In fact, it was about 1/3 or 1/2.) Moreover, the papers singled out one girl and tried to associate her with the Communist Party, thereby implicating the demonstration for peace as well as the civil rights groups represented there. An editorial written by Atlanta Constitution Editor Eugene Patterson criticized three professors who took part, two of whom had written a "letter to the editor' which was printed on the handbill used at the demonstration."

UNIVERSITY REFORM CONFERENCE PLANS

Plans are going well for the conference on University Reform announced in the last Membership Bulletin. It will be held the weekend of March 1-3 at Brandeis University, and over 100 students from New England and the Middle Atlantic area are expected to attend.

Aimed at exploring the present nature of the university and the necessary revisions and reforms necessary in order for that institution to play a socially responsible role in the society, the conference key-note address will be given by Paul Goodman, author of Growing Up Absurd, Community of Scholars, and many other works. Other speakers include SDS President Tom Hayden, NEC member Bob Ross, Brandeis U. Dean Milton Sachs, and local faculty members.

For information on the conference before its formal announcement, contact: Ann Cooper, 561 South St., Waltham,Mass.

THE COLLEGIATE PRESS SERVICE

Membership Bulletin readers will notice a number of stories credited to "CPS". This stands for the Collegiate Press Service, which was set up last Fall as a news service for campus newspapers. Owned and sponsored by the newspapers themselves--at present about 100 papers belong--it came into being under the auspices of the NSA though it is organizationally separate. It gathers news of student interest and activity from around the country and transmits it to member papers and groups. Your campus newspaper should be participating; for more information write: Mark Acuff, CPS, 3457 Chestnut St., Phila. 4, Pa. (Bad writing, by the way, in CPS stories in the Bulletin is due to our editing, not to Mark's original releases; don't blame him.)

BOB ZELLNER HARASSED

Those who know of civil rights activities in the South know that Bob Zellner, SDS NEC member and SNCC staff member, has become rather notorious among the forces for the status quo. As a Southern white person working in the most militant force for change in the South, he has become particularly conspicuous and has undergone regular harassment. The story below, sent to us on January 31 from the South, tells something of the latest troubles--and incidentally something of the South:

A serious situation has arisen in Alabama, and we need your help. Bob Zellner has been harassed to the point where state agents created a state of terror at the funeral of his grandmother last weekend.

His grandmother was Mrs. J.J. Hardy of Mobile, Ala., widow of a Methodist minister who served many churches throughout Alabama. Bob's father is the Rev. James Zellner, who has also pastored a number of Methodist churches in Alabama and Florida.

Bob has been arrested several times because of his activities, once on a charge of criminal anarchy in Louisiana. He was arrested again Jan. 8 as he walked with some students on the campus of his alma mater, Huntingdon College in Montgomery, Ala. This time the charge was vagrancy, for which he was sentenced to 60 days in jail. He was freed under bond pending appeal.

Just before he was arrested, Bob had given a pawnbroker a check for $85 for a camera he wanted to use in his work. He issued the check with the understanding that money to cover it had been deposited in his account in Atlanta. Through a clerical slip, the deposit was not made on schedule.

When the pawnbroker read of Zellner's arrest for vagrancy, he called the bank and was told there was not enough money in Bob's account to cover the check. Police then filed a charge of false pretense against Bob, although money to cover the check was deposited in the Atlanta bank within three hours after the pawnbroker made his complaint. If the pawnbroker had sent the check to the bank in the normal manner, the money would have been there when it reached Atlanta. State authorities plan to present the false pretense charge to the county grand jury in Montgomery on Feb. 12. The charge carries a possible 10-year sentence.

"After Bob was released on bond, five men in automobiles and on foot followed him wherever he went in Montgomery, including to the home of his lawyer. They trailed him when he went to Mobile, where his grandmother was near death.

"Mrs. Hardy died last week and relatives gathered at the home of one of Bob's aunts in Mobile to pay their last respects. The agents trailing Bob set up a watch outside his home. It was learned by checking car licenses and credentials that they were from the office of Al Lingo, the new State Safety Director in Alabama.

"The presence of the agents caused so much distress among Mrs. Hardy's relatives that a state of terror resulted. Bob and his father made a personal appeal to the men to go away. Bob's mother, Mrs. Ruby H. Zellner, wrote a personal note to the agents in which she said:

"'My mother was the widow of a Methodist minister. Both my mother and father were known and loved in many communities throughout Alabama. I am asking that this desecration of their memory be stopped at once.'

"The pleas were ignored. Instead, the agents followed when Mrs. Hardy's body was removed to Loxley, Ala., for the wake. They hung around the funeral home, followed the family to church on Sunday morning, and then trailed the funeral procession on Sunday afternoon, January 27.

"Bob's father made a new appeal to the agents to leave them in peace--but again the plea was ignored. Instead, after the funeral, the agents followed Bob and his father across the state line into Florida. They did not leave until the Zellners reached Panama City, about 100 miles inside Florida.

"Officials of SNCC and the Southern Conference Educational Fund have protested to various public officials about the harassment of Bob Zellner, which obviously results from his work for equal rights for all people. We ask you to add your voice to the protest by wiring, writing, or calling one or all of the following:

"1. Maury Smith, Assistant Circuit Solicitor, Montgomery, Ala., regarding the charges against Bob.

(CPS): During the Fall semester, the question of discrimination in fraternities and sororities came up a number of times at various colleges and universities. What follow are brief accounts of some of the cases which have come to our attention.

The Stanford U. chapter of Sigma Nu voted unanimously to go local over the issue of discrimination in the national. President Thomas Grey of the local said the action came because the national convention of Sigma Nu last summer failed to respond to the Stanford chapter's request to eliminate the bias clause against Negroes and Orientals. Grey said the action was a matter of principle, not a result of a desire to pledge a particular individual. University President J.E. Wallace Sterling, citing a resolution passed by the Stanford trustees committing the University to "work actively" with student groups attempting to end discrimination and bias clauses, issued a statement supporting the chapter's decision.

At Brown U. also the Sigma Nu chapter is considering the possibility of withdrawing from the national because of discriminatory clauses in the national constitution. The Brown local attempted to have the constitution changed at last summer's convention.

The Swarthmore chapter of Kappa Sigma was suspended from the national in early November for "attempting to involve other chapters in organizing to defy the national's basic principles, and failure to maintain standards of scholarship" (according to the national). The local attributed the suspension to its recent efforts "to change the unwritten discriminatory policy of the national", which involved soliciting support from other chapters for removal of the "gentlemen's agreement" barring non-whites from membership. At a regional conclave, the national's treasurer is reported to have said t that Jewish members were"frowned upon" and "any chapter which bid a Negro would be expelled". (Another chapter had been expelled previously for pledging an Oriental.) The Swarthmore local has since decided not to attempt to gain readmission to the national.

At the U. of Wisconsin, faculty members passed a resolution requiring that all fraternities and sororities on campus demonstrate autonomy from nationals (in matters of race, national origin, and creed) in selecting members. The resolution grew out of a controversy over discrimination in Greek groups on campus. Specifically, the Delta Gamma sorority has come under fire as a result of the national's alleged policy of discrimination. (Last year the Beloit /Wis/ C. chapter was suspended after pledging a Negro, allegedly for ten different infractions of national rules.) However, the DG local claims autonomy and says it is working to improve the national in this regard; and the faculty has postponed the institution of a measure banning them from the campus. Also coming under scrutiny due to national policy has been the Kappa Sigma local (see preceding paragraph). And at the U. of Minnesota, the Delta Gamma local has also been investigated.

Iowa State U. has asked three unidentified national fraternities to remove discriminatory clauses from the constitutions of the local chapters. The Dean of Student Affairs said that the three were the only ones with such clauses at I.S.U.

The Intrafraternity Council of Union College of Schenectady, N.Y., has adopted a resolution offered by Phi Delta Theta recommending that the school prohibit further initiations by social groups with written discrimination clauses, after December 1964. Phi Delta Theta is the only group on campus with such a clause.

BOWDOIN POLITICAL ISSUES COMM: A REPORT

Dick Hathaway, faculty co-ch, SDS member

The Bowdoin Political Issues Committee, whose primary purpose was to inject a political hypodermic needle into a partly comatose campus community, was established in March 1962. Including both faculty and students, it was very much an ad hoc entity which attempted to meet the specific needs of a men's school of 900 students and faculty. The campus had not, during the previous decade, demonstrated any notable sympathy for the peace and social justice concerns which are at least more evident, if not dominant, at such institutions as Oberlin, Swarthmore, Antioch, Earlham, and Reed. The school has prided itself on being a happy amalgam of both "conservative" and "dynamic" ingredients. But the upshot in terms of atmosphere and intellectual climate has sometimes seemed that of genteel apathy and cosmopolitan privatism than that of any vigorous political ideology whatever.

The structure of BPIC, which is formally non-partisan and open-ended in membership and whose budget is drawn from the student activities fee, comprises several levels of personnel and activities. The Executive Comm. has six co-chairmen (3 students, 3 faculty) and two other student officers. Some twenty to thirty participants attend most of the BPIC-sponsored events--notably the bi-weekly seminar/discussions which probe such themes as "The Power Elite Reconsidered" and "Unilateral Initiatives and Disarmament". In addition, there are perhaps 200 students who might attend back-to-back showings of "Operation Abolition" and ACLU's "Operation Correction", or receive literature on the politics of peace. One of BPIC's major projects is the annual BPIC Commentary, a magazine addressed to all who wish to participate in reasoned discussion and debate over the major issues of our decade--the questions of war and peace, the nature and goals of government and its proper relation to the citizens, the problems of revitalizing the democratic ideology and process, etc.--and open to all.

Thus, the focus of BPIC has been to abandon the spectator-oriented activities of traditional campus "political forums", or the intermittent, election-oriented framework of the Young Democrats and Young GOP groups. Instead, the committee has formulated a series of participatory, action-oriented programs which will enable the alert and the concerned to "grab hold" at a point where it makes sense to him.

While scarcely the most numerous or most opulent campus organization, and still dependent upon a tiny group of activists, BPIC has added another dimension to the process of discovery at Bowdoin. It hopes to continue stimulating "perpetual insurrection" against the corruptions and inadequacies of contemporary society. It hopes to mobilize a sense of urgency and to focus upon the vital rather than those ephemeral issues too often dominant in a private, distracted undergraduate world. For if the intellectuals are not the actual agency of change, they are at least a crucial element among the preparators. Groups such as BPIC can confront the inarticulate student feelings of anxiety and discomfort over the status quo, and assist in the transformation of these vague perceptions into a matured and persuasive critique of their imperfect world. Should this emergent critique prove relevant, then the very validity of its message could achieve that momentous response which awaits "an idea whose time has come".

SDS TO PRODUCE VOTER REGISTRATION PAMPHLET

One of the most important "events" taking place in the South is the extensive voter registration activity of the past two years, especially student activity. Yet nothing has been written on this which highlights the students' role and is readily available to students. SDS will attempt to fill this vacuum with the publication, hopefully by the beginning of March, of a pamphlet on Voter Registration and the Student's Role. It will be a series of essays and reports by SDS members and others directed toward stimulating interest and participation in the voter registration drive. About 36 pages in length and photo-offset, the pamphlet will sell for 25¢ per copy, or $20 per 100. On the next page you will find the pamphlet's content outline.

The pamphlet should be distributed as widely as possible this Spring, both for educational purposes and in order to help efforts in the South this summer. Let us hear from you with orders (and advance payments) for single copies or bulk orders to sell on campus.

SOME SUGGESTED READINGS FROM PERIODICALS

Appearing briefly in the last Membership Bulletin and more extensively in this one and in the future is a regular "column" or "feature" containing a synopsis of articles of importance and interest to SDS members. We urge you both to read the suggested articles and to let the National Office know (preferably in a form directly insertable into the Bulletin) about any articles you have come across which you feel other SDSers should know about. If a bias toward international affairs and peace concerns is noticed and an insufficient breadth of reading is criticized, it is because one person did most of the preparation for this month's column. It is thus doubly important that many people write in with suggested readings.

Also, this is a good time to remind SDS members that any Discussion Bulletin articles of less than one page in length go automatically into the Membership Bulletin, and that longer articles either go into a separate Discussion Bulletin or are also included in the Bulletin, depending on the amount of such material available.

CUBA AND THE CRISIS: Two recent visitors to Cuba, upon returning, report that material conditions are quite good (certainly better than elsewhere in Latin America) and that Fidel Castro still retains very substantial support from the Cuban people. I.F. Stone, in his Weeklys of Jan. 7, 14, and 21, reports on his Christmastime trip to Cuba. Though unhappy about the government's complete control of all sources of information and propaganda, he clearly feels that the Revolution has not ossified and is still free-wheeling and relatively free from bureaucratization (though he does have some caustic things to say about Cuban bureaucrats)--he calls it nearly anarchist. He (assumedly approvingly) quotes a Le Monde reporter who said that "in no country have I seen such intimacy between a leader and his people", and notes approvingly that in the intra-Communist bloc Cold War, Cuba alone stands in the Third Camp. Fidel is, says IFS, clearly in political control of the regime and the Revolution--in fact, the Cuban CP is actually declining in power. Cuba, says Stone, is a "Popular Democracy, a kind of continuous town meeting under a popular dictator".

Dorothy Day's conclusions and style of work are extremely difficult to describe. I urge strongly that Bulletin readers obtain copies of the (monthly) Catholic Worker (175 Christie St., NYC 2; 5¢/issue) for the months of September through December 1962 in order to catch the flavor of her rambling and highly personal and human style. Though a Catholic pacifist, she has consistently supported the Revolution, which has become anti-clerical and which has not always been particularly gentle with its enemies. Her support for the regime clearly is based on her belief that the vast majority of Cubans have been given the opportunity to realize human dignity by the Revolution. Her four-part Pilgrimmage to Cuba presents a viewpoint and perspective found nowhere else.

Many analyses of Cuban, American, and Soviet policies and strategies have been generated by the blockade crisis of October 1962. To this reviewer the most interesting--and very possibly the most valid, especially in the light of recent developments on a test ban treaty --analysis is to be found in the December 1962 issue of Liberation (5 Beekman St, NYC 38; 40¢) in an article by Leslie Dewart entitled "The Prospects for Peace". Dewart's basic thesis is that the U.S. response to the never concealed emplacement of missiles in Cuba was precisely the response which the Kremlin anticipated and desired, and the result of the crisis--which, due to Soviet calculations, never really had us on the brink of war--were those desired by Khrushchev et al. These results included two of especial import: a considerable loosening of American inflexibility on Cuba itself (he quotes Stevenson's Oct. 23 UN statement that the U.S. was unconcerned with Cuba's socialist and dictatorial system as long as it did not present an offensive nuclear threat to the Western Hemisphere--at least, one might add editorially, for the time being), and greater U.S. willingness to negotiate differences in negotiable areas such as a test ban treaty.

A series of nine articles on Cuba and the crisis is to be found in New Politics of Fall 1962 (vol. 2, #1). The views range from opposition to support of the blockade and of the Cuban regime. The contributors include Norman Thomas, Victor Alba, Hal Draper, Robert H. Alexander, Boris Goldenberg, Dave Dellinger (an especially good article), Roy Finch, Samuel Shapiro, and Antonio de la Carrera. (N.P., 507 5 Ave, NYC 17; 90¢)

PEACE CAMPAIGNS: '62: Council of Correspondence Editor Roger Hagan, in an article entitled "Peace at the Polls: '62 Lessons for '64" in The Nation of Feb. 2, 1963 (333 6 Ave, NYC 14; 25¢), contrasts peace-concerned people working in electoral campaigns in '62 with the "old" peace movement. The former, he says, are mostly liberals alienated from the Kennedy administration only by its unwillingness to stop the drift of militarism. They are quite "moderate", they support the ACDA and studies on the economics of disarmament but feel that a minimum deterrence force is necessary, for now at least. They are not inured to constant defeat and long struggle, as are the "old" peace movement. In this context, the already extremely sticky question of how "radical" to be in opposing the Kennedy administration's foreign and military policies becomes even more difficult. Hagan's article devotes itself primarily to a discussion of this problem and how various peace candidates reacted to it.

Pete Irons, Ed Knappman, and Dawn Lander of the Washington Office of the Student Peace Union, have compiled a factual study of the campaigns of 35 peace candidates, based on experience in some campaigns, campaign literature, and responses to a questionnaire on candidates' stands on some specific issues. The document, which also contains information on organizations working in or created by campaigns, will be enlarged in a future edition. (SPU, Box 3031, Washington 10, D.C.; 25¢)

ILGWU/NAACP DISPUTE: Over the past months there has been debate and friction between two natural allies--the civil rights and labor movements--over the question of discrimination within the labor unions themselves. The debate particularly rages over the International Ladies Garment Workers Union; in the last two issues of New Politics (Fall and Winter; 507 5 Ave, NYC 17; 90¢) readers can peruse the first parts of the dispute over that union. The Fall issue includes testimony to a government investigation committee by NAACP Labor Secretary Herbert Hill; the Winter issue the reply by Gus Tyler of the ILG and some correspondence in response to the Hill article. Coming in the future are further replies by Hill, Tyler, and undoubtedly others.

INDIA/CHINA: As ever, I.F. Stone sheds some light on the Sino-Indian border dispute; his articles in the Dec. 3 and 10 Weeklys provide, in his words, "an antidote to the exaggerations in the American press", as well as some good background material.

In New America (the weekly organ of the Socialist Party) of Jan. 15, 1963, is a debate between Mike Harrington and Hal Draper on the India-China dispute. Harrington favors the extension of all possible aid to India (including military aid), as does a statement of the SP's National Council, on the grounds of helping a democratic (though not socialist) India against a totalitarian China bent upon destroying India, economically and militarily and thereby removing a competitor. Harrington's article, in fact, is a polemic against China. Draper, on the other hand, views the conflict as a border dispute over control of (a) territory and (b) peoples neither Indian nor Chinese ethnically, and advises against sending military aid and thereby exacerbating the conflict. (Room 402, 1182 Broadway, NYC 1; 15¢)

AMERICAN NUCLEAR POLICY: A factual and analytical article of great importance is to be found in the October 1962 issue of the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists --Michael Brower's "Nuclear Strategy of the Kennedy Administration". Relying on primary source materials (speeches and military data), Brower reveals a considerable degree of contradiction between Kennedy Administration statements and what one could logically infer from actual present and proposed military strength levels. This is a must. (935 E. 60, Chicago 37; 75¢)

CIVIL DEFENSE: Not among those who believe that C.D. is pretty much dead is Dawn Lander of the Washington Office of the SPU. After attending Congressional hearings on civil defense last spring, and noting the government-inspired "second rise of the shelter fable" during the Cuban crisis, she has written "Civil Defense--Le Grand Illusion" in the Southern Atlantic Region SPU Newsletter of early January 1963 (vol. II, #8). The author notes the relationship of CD to the counterforce military doctrine (McNamara considers it an integral part thereof), discusses many of the illusory aspects of civil defense, notes how the instigation of a really potentially effective fallout shelter would be both expensive (c. $275 billion to protect 120 million) and provocative, and includes a brief bibliography. We have not, she feels, seen the end of civil defense. (SPU, Box 3031, Washington 10, D.C.; 5¢)

A DEBATE ON GENERAL COLD WAR ISSUES:

A very interesting debate will be found in the November 1962 issues of The Minority of One (B ox 544, Passaic, N.J.;35¢) between Dave McReynolds of the War Resisters League and TMO Editor M.S. Arnoni. In "Dissenting from Dissenters", McReynolds accuses TMO of seeing the world in blacks and whites rather than in greys (more specifically of being at best pro-Soviet and at worst Soviet-apologist), of advocating too broad a peace movement (i.e. including Communists) while at the same time attacking much of what is considered the "respectable" peace movement (e.g. SANE, TTP, Norman Thomas, et al), and of violating the George Orwell dictum which appears in every TMO ("there was truth and there was untruth, and if you clung to the truth even against the whole world you were not mad") by not printing anti-Soviet truths. Arnoni, in his reply, entitled "When Dissenters Conform", answers McReynolds's substantive political points (of which there are quite a few; the debate encompasses a range of Cold War issues) tellingly but at times is too extreme in drawing illogical and tenuous analogies between McReynolds's statements and those of some unusually disagreeable fascist. Arnoni delineates his political viewpoint (that the balance of blame--to use C. Wright Mills's phrase--lies to a very great extent with the U.S.); states why he favors a "broad" peace movement and goes into an extensive criticism of Homer Jack; and indicates his feeling that although he has no desire to let Soviet aberrations go unnoticed and uncommented upon, he has even less desire to give ammunition to Cold Warriors who are unconcerned with the well-being of Soviet citizens but rather desire only to use such statements for prosecuting the Cold War. ("It is one thing to tell or withhold the truth for pragmatic considerations, and another to refuse to to pour truth into a liar's mixing bowl.") This debate is most interesting, to say the least; and it brings up many, and many types of, issues very vital to the peace movement.

KENNEDYS WIELD McCARREN ACT

Recently Attorney-General Robert Kennedy requested that the Subversive Activities Control Board cite Advance Youth Organization of New York City as a Communist Front Organization under the terms of the 1950 Internal Security (McCarren) Act. The Advance hearing before the SACB will come in a couple of months. If found "guilty", it must appeal to a court to prove its innocence.

The reader will find, in the Discussion Bulletin section of this Bulletin, the text of a draft resolution which is to be voted upon by the National Council. In co-sponsorship with the Campus Americans for Democratic Action, SDS plans to circulate this statement to other student organizations for support and further co-sponsorship as a joint statement opposing both the McCarren Act itself and its application in this situation. Through the widespread use of this statement, or one drawn up by local campus activists, it will hopefully be possible to help provide the educational basis which must exist if there is to be an intelligent, articulate, and effective movement against the formal and informal denial of civil liberties.

In addition, SDS members and friends are urged to contribute critiques and additional comments on the statement and the whole civil liberties question much as occurred with the newspaper strike (see Correspondence section). Let us have your comments and send us word of your activities.

PROFESSOR FIRED FOR PRO-CUBA VIEWS

The following is reprinted from I.F. Stone's Weekly of Dec. 17, 1962.

"We urge a maximum effort to protest the action taken by Michigan State University-Oakland in dropping Samuel Shapiro as assistant professor and its senior American historian. Dr. Shapiro made himself "controversial" by articles he wrote for The New Republic and The Nation in the wake of three visits to Castro's Cuba, the first in August, 1960; the second in January, 1961 and the most recent in August 1962. Though critical of certain aspects, particularly the loss of civil liberties, Dr. Shapiro praised the constructive achievements of the revolution and opposed the U.S. policy of strangulation. The article let loose a flood of hostile publicity, and Dr. Shapiro has pending a suit for slander against a Lansing, Mich. TV commentator who called him a Communist.

"A New Yorker who went to City College and took his Ph.D. at Columbia, Dr. Shapiro has taught at Brandeis and Oberlin and was a Fulbright professor in Argentina. He will finish his third year at Michigan State in April. He has been informed that the board of trustees voted not to renew his contract. As usual in such cases, the university sought to create the impression that they were acting only because Dr. Shapiro was not meeting academic standards, that he was getting too interested in journalism, was not producing scholarly work, etc. They also complained that he was spending too much time on Latin American affairs and Cuba, as if these were somehow too distant from U.S. history--though the problem of Cuba only a few weeks ago threatened to write our final chapter.

"On the score of scholarship, Dr. Shapiro seems to be outstanding on his campus. Since Michigan State's establishment at Oakland in 1959, the whole faculty of some 60 teachers has produced only five books. The Michigan State press published Dr. Shapiro's doctoral, a biography of Richard Henry Dana, Jr. A second book of his, "Invisible Latin America", will be published next year [1963] by Beacon Press. Only a few months ago Michigan State granted him $700 to buy microfilms for a third book, on Daniel Webster.

"Dr. Shapiro has been one of the few American scholars courageous enough to deviate from U.S. "party line" and to write sympathetically of Cuba. His dismissal will bring derisive echoes from Latin America. At home it will frighten others into silence or conformity. We urge a strong kick-back."

NEWSPAPER SUES FOR ITS FREEDOM

(CPS): In what could be an historic case, nine students at Flint Community College (Flint, Mich.), including student government officials, editors, and interested students, have filed a brief in U.S. District Court of Flint bringing suit against the Flint Board of Education for the freedom of their campus newspaper, the "College Clamor". The chairman of the Michigan region of NSA has retained the services of two lawyers to assist the students. The object of the suit, according to the students, is to ascertain whether the editorial board of the student paper or the college administration is ultimately responsible for what is printed in the paper. If the court holds with the students--that the students are responsible--the decision would have wide implications, as administrative control over the campus press is currently (formally) based on administrative responsibility for its content. We will do our best to keep up with this story.

ONE FOURTH OF FACULTY RESIGNS IN PROTEST

(CPS): Of the 26-man faculty at Lincoln College (Lincoln, Ill.), four have already resigned over the dismissal of another professor for his anti-Cuba blockade picketing, and two more have announced pending resignations unless their picketing colleague is reinstated. The professor, Joseph Leston, was informed recently by the trustees of the private college that his contract would not be renewed because he had not exercised "appropriate restraint" in expressing his opinions. "Appropriate restraint" is one of the guidelines for academic freedom subscribed to by the American Association of University Professors. Lester, however, contended that the phrase means "staying within the law", which he did while picketing the Lincoln Post Office.

COLUMBIA U. PRESIDENT HITS REVISED NDEA

(CPS): President Grayson Kirk of Columbia (one of the first major institutions to refuse to participate in the original National Defense Education Act), has expressed disapproval of the new provisions in the revised Act. Of the new provisions, Kirk said, "There are not things we would want to settle down and live with." Though the disclaimer signing provision has been dropped from the Act, the amendments recently signed into law declare it a crime for a member of a Communist organization, as defined by the Subversive Activities Control Board, even to apply for or to use an NDEA scholarship. A number of organizations have been formed at Columbia and other New York City schools to express continued opposition to the revised NDEA.

The Columbia Spectator, student newspaper, has called the provisions "a sinister attempt to clothe reactionary measures in seemingly liberal garb". The Michigan Daily editorialized "the [new] amendments will solve nothing and will only cause further aggrevation". The North Carolina Daily Tar Heel said, "The debate essentially narrows down to the question of whether the government should set political qualifications for its scholarship aid. The eliminating of the disclaimer affidavit does little to end this debate." The Barnard Bulletin termed the revised NDEA a "wolf in sheep's clothing".

We concur.

This controversy takes on important ramifications in the light of the application of the McCarren Act to Advance Youth Organization (see story on page 12).

CLARK KERR AS JANUS

(CPS): President Clark Kerr of the University of California reaffirmed last week that he would not allow outside forces to restrict freedom of speech and inquiry at the University. Speaking to 3000 students at an outdoor meeting, Kerr said, "The right to free inquiry is an integral [illegible] of the American society. The non-conformist, as contrasted with the conspirator, today as in ages past, serves humanity, and the university is one of his havens. When freedom of thought and expression has died on a university campus, it will be dead everywhere."

NSA TO HOLD CONFERENCE ON SERVICE CORPS

The proposed Domestic Peace Corps (formally known as the National Service Corps to avoid confusion with the overseas Peace Corps) will be the subject of a national conference on March 1-3 being sponsored by the National Student Association with Federal government cooperation. (For more information on the conference, contact NSA, 3457 Chestnut St., Phila. 4, Pa.) The NSA, as it did with the foreign Peace Corps, has urged the creation of such a force.

In a letter to Jed Johnson, National Chairman of the Young Adult Council, SDS National Secretary observed: "...we are in favor of the principle of large numbers of volunteers working to alleviate some of the major social ills of our society. The government ought to support these efforts and finance them. However, in reading over the study document (prepared by the government) and judging from the way that the Peace Corps has been used, we have two reservations. The first is that it will be used politically as a support for the Democratic Party or some other local political force, much as the Peace Corps has been used as an instrument of American Foreign Policy rather than for its own sake. And the second is that the document as presented shows total avoidance of facing the real problem, i.e. the conditions that create these major social problems. Attack on the roots of the problem as well as the symptoms is absolutely necessary. Insofar as the National Service Corps treats symptoms in such a way as to avoid treating root problems, we would be opposed to it; insofar as it is supplemental to genuine attempts at other levels, we would support it."

(CPS): Four students at the University of California's Riverside campus have filed for a writ of mandamus against the Regents of the University, President Clark Kerr, and their chancellor at Riverside. The suit is a result of the banning of a Communist speaker by Chancellor Speth last year. The students base their case solely on a freedom of speech basis.

(Noted here should be the famous "Kerr directives" not to permit student governments to speak on any "off-campus" issues.)

A REPORT FROM LOUISVILLE

From Louisville, Ky., comes news of efforts to provide food and clothing for wildcat strikers in southeastern Kentucky, and copies of a new student magazine hoping to fill the "large geographical gap between Oberlin's ACTIVIST and Jackson, Miss.'s MISSISSIPPI FREE PRESS."

For a full story of the bitter and violent dispute between 10,000 striking coal miners on the one hand and mine operators and the United Mine Workers on the other, we suggest you read the Jan. 17 issue of the National Guardian (197 E 4, NYC 9; 20¢) and the current issue of Common Sense (out around Feb. 10 or so). Briefly, the situation is this: In the midst of constantly worsening economic conditions in coal mining generally, brought on partly by automation, the mine owners cut back on welfare and benefit payments, undercut union contract wages, and in some cases even halted social security payments for unemployment. The UMW advised that workers continue at their jobs and then opposed the strike when it was called six months ago. The workers are in danger of having the four (UMW-owned) hospitals in the area closed down, as owners have refused to pay the 40¢/ton bonus specified in the contract which was used to keep the hospitals running. In addition, the Union has refused to honor the welfare cards of miners whose bosses have not paid the bonus. The situation has steadily deteriorated; the strikers are well-armed and well-organized, and violence threatens.

In the midst of this situation, efforts have been made at a number of places around the country to collect food and clothing for the miners and their families, and have met with considerable success: by December 24, $15,000 cash and several tons of clothing had been collected from all sources. These efforts, however, have only partially met a continuing need; further contributions are urgently needed. Food, clothing, and/or money should be sent to: Hazard Needy Fund, c/o The Hazard Herald, Hazard, Ky.

At the U. of Louisville (a quite conservative campus), SDS member Jim Williams and others have been very active in gathering material and moral support for the miners. An "Are You Having a Merry Christmas?" leaflet and other intensive efforts have gained support from campus Greek groups, professors, and religious organizations. In addition, Jim has been interviewed on WBAI (the Pacifica network subsidiary in NYC) on the strike, relief efforts, and the long-range economic implications of the affair.

The "New South Review" has published three issues thusfar. The first was devoted almost exclusively to the first of a series (the completion of which has been delayed) on "The Roots of Fascism: A Study of the Origins and Causes of State-Monopoly Capitalism" by co-editor Ed Clark (the other co-editor is Jim Williams). The second issue contained a number of documents and commentary on the Cuban crisis, including the texts of Premier Khrushchev's replies to Lord Russell and President Kennedy; statements by Women Strike for Peace, Turn Toward Peace, Gus Hall of the Communist Party, and the National Steering Committee of the Student Peace Union; and a Yevtushenkp poem, "Cuban Mother". The third issue included stories on the Hazard situation, End the Draft, aid for Mississippi voters who have suffered economic reprisal for attempting to register to vote, sympathetic reviews of Robert F. Williams's Negroes with Guns and William Appleton Williams's The United States, Cuba, and Castro; and laudatory letters (the editors say that critics apparently don't send letters). Subscriptions are $2/year (at least 9 issues); write to NSR, PO Box 8344, Station E, Louisville 8, Ky. Contributions are also solicited, both monetary and literary/political. NSR declares itself open to all opinions from the Left, and hopes that as many viewpoints as possible will contribute.

The Activist: Notes and Prospectus

by Jon Eisen (Oberlin College Chapter, ed., The Activist)

The current issue (Winter, 1963), now at the printer, is Vol.3, No. 2, Whole Number 6. The articles, mostly introspective and interpretative, include an anonymous (uncensored) letter from a Soviet citizen, an article by Harold Taylor called "The University in a New World", one by Paul Potter on "Revolution, Dormitories and the Student Movement", and "The Devil Theory of History" by Rev. Paul Rahmeier. Other pieces include McKelvey's "Random Thoughts after Cuba", and "Life and Crisis: Thought of a Young Girl." The latter, written by a highschool student, was censored by her principal and refused publication in the school paper and History Club magazine because "it went against President Kennedy's decision on Cuba." We are printing the article in the cause of a free school press. Books reviewed are Herman Kahn's Thinking about the Unthinkable (Carey McWilliams) and Harrington's The Other America(by Richard Lempert of Oberlin). This issue (the year's second to date) will run to 32 pages and will run us further into debt.

For the Spring Issue (we exude self confidence), in the works are: Students and the Democratic Party in California by Congressman Sisk, hopefully something about the HUAC mess by Congressman Ryan, the State of the Liberal Democrats in Ohio, by David Neuberger, The Church and Social Change by Monsonis, A Critical View of Voter Registration by Gordon Carey of CORE, Comic Books and the Changing American Hero, by Jerry Berman(Berkeley), How to Deal with the FBI: A Learnor's Manual, by Walter South, plus longer stuff like Camus, Existentialism and Political Involvement by Julie Loud, and my piece on A View of Student Government. These, for the most part are indefinite. What is necessary, though, is some greater involvement on the choice and content of the material by SDS people. We invite you to submit manuscripts, critiques of present issues, and money, which leads us to the third paragraph...

Financing is achieved mostly through 1) subscriptions, 2) small donations, and 3) the private resources of the staff. We still owe upwards of $120 to the last printer and will owe more than that to the present one. Rather than fund-raising -- staying in school requires time for study et al -- we have begun to concentrate on increasing subscriptions substantially: the free mailing to SDS members and friends is one example. Lack of capital has precluded advertising in other journals (and has about precluded publishing another issue). Ideally much more could be done in the way of exchange ads, free mailing, advertising, promotional blurbs, but of the present run of 2,000, only about 250 are paid subscribers. Oberlin sales will account for another 200-300, and book stores account for another 150 or so. There will be no more free mailing to SDS people. It is imperative that you subscribe now:

STATE POLITICS AND THE CAMPUS PRESS: A CASE HISTORY

(CPS): A combination of state and national politics, a number of debunking articles and letters in the Colorado U. student newspaper, and a boisterous reception for Senator Goldwater at the campus last spring have resulted in the firing of the campus newspaper editor and the resignation of the CU President, and may well bring more ramifications throughout the entire southwest.

The immediate crisis (which was reported briefly in last month's Bulletin) arose over the publication of an article of national political commentary by Carl Mitcham derogating, among other politicians, Senator Goldwater, calling him "a montebank, no better than a common criminal". The Senator, hearing about this and undoubtedly remembering the tough time given him last spring at a speech by Young Socialists and liberals (he charged having been insulted by socialists and "other un-American elements" then), demanded apologies from all concerned on the campus--and got them from CU President Quigg Newton and Colorado Daily editor Gary Althen, but not from Mithham, who wrote the Senator demanding that he take the issue up with the writer of the article directly. Unsatisfied with the apologies received, Senator Goldwater wrote Newton demanding Mitcham's expulsion and Althen's firing and questioning Newton's abilities as a college president.

Newton, elected CU President in 1956 by a 4-2 vote of the popularly-elected State Board of Regents and well-known (infamous to some) as a liberal and civil libertarian, answered Goldwater with, "Senator, I shall not silence them", defending students' rights to hold and advocate any non-violent political viewpoint. He was supported by the Denver Post, largest newspaper in the state, and attacked by right-wingers. In separate meetings, the student government, the Board of Student Publications, and the faculty senate all backed up Newton's stand. Mitcham then wrote a letter to the editor explaining his previous article and in it called former President Eisenhower an "old futzer"; understandably, this renewed the furor.

Apparently, it was too much. About a week later, editor Althen was called out of class by Newton and fired, "pursuant to presidential final authority". As a result, students held a spontaneous demonstration in front of the president's official residence and a number of the other members of the Daily staff resigned. The remaining staff members published an editorial (signed "staff") charging that Newton had succombed to political pressure and that it was the staff's duty to remain as "guardians of the public trust" and to carry on the paper's work, especially its critical voice: "The removal of one shall not silence us, senator".

Since then a new editor, Tom Parmeter, has been appointed by the Board of Publications; he has declared that the Daily would continue to take strong editorial stands on controversial issues, but "we will do it in better taste than before".

The issue is closely tied up not only with national politics (Sen. Goldwater needs no introduction) but especially with state politics in Colorado and also in neighboring New Mexico, where similar conditions exist. Both states' legislatures are rural-dominated and susceptible to right-wing pressures to "investigate" and otherwise pressure the respective universities, both of whose campus papers have been under liberal editorship for the past few years. It was undoubtedly such pressures which caused the ultimate outcome of the affair. The situation was exacerbated by the imminent state elections and by the fact that Colorado is one of the few states whose Boards of Regents is elected by popular vote. Thus, the "anti-Goldwater" article precipitated a state-wide political affair, as a Republican regent candidate called for an investigation of the Colorado Daily and other "subversive" elements at the University and pledged himself to work for Newton's removal. As reported above, Newton at first withstood the pressure but finally cracked. Some weeks after the firing of Althen and in the wake of right-wing election victories (including the Republican Regent candidate), Quigg Newton resigned from the presidency of the University. His role in the crisis had succeeded at best only in alienating liberals but not placating or satisfying his right-wing critics of the past six years.

Faculty members generally praised Newton's term of office, in which UC grew greatly in academic stature, but saw his resignation as a "natural consequence" of the Republican election victories.

Two post-scripts seem worth mentioning:

In a regular signed political column in the Daily Illini (the paper at the U. of Illinois), SDS member Roger Ebert had some derogatory things to say about Senator Goldwater, in relation to the UC affair and generally. He questioned whether Goldwater was true to the conservative principle of individual liberty. The Senator fired back, accusing Ebert of incompetence, lack of knowledge, and being anti-civil libertarian. Nothing more seems to be coming of this dispute.

In an interview in the Arizona State C. Lumberjack, Senator Goldwater declared himself in favor of allowing Communist speakers to speak on college campuses; only thus, he maintained, could students obtain the full story of communism.

PROFS BACK STUDENTS DEFYING SPEAKER RULES

(CPS): The Michigan State University chapter of the American Association of University Professors overwhelmingly passed a resolution urging the reinstatement of students disciplined for violation of the MSU speaker rules last month. The students, including the president of the student government and the presidents of six other campus organizations, were disciplined for refusing to co-operate with a university board designated to pass on all speakers for university appearances. The student body president refused to sit on the board, charging that it was necessarily an organ of censorship. He and the presidents of the six groups also invited speakers without clearing them through the board. A number of professors at the AAUP meeting reportedly praised the student leaders concerned for being "far ahead of us in the fight for academic freedom". The AAUP also appointed a committee to investigate the affair.

"...neither has our experience in the universities brought us moral enlightenment. Our professors and administrators sacrifice controversy to public relations; their curriculums change more slowly than the living events of the world; their skills and silence are purphased by investors in the arms race; passion is called unscholastic. The questions we might want raised--what is really important? can we live in a different and better way? if we wanted to change society, how would we do it? --are not thought to be questions of a "fruitful, empirical nature", and thus are brushed aside."

CORRESPONDENCE REGARDING THE NEWSPAPER STRIKE

This letter is from Kim Moody and Ed Shiller of the Baltimore SDS.

January 10, 1963

Dear Jim,

At this time, when the Labor Movement is undergoing a crisis in relation to its position and direction in the American social structure, it is important that its nature and its need be fully understood and supported. The right to strike under any circumstances whatsoever and against any employer whatsoever is one of the most vital necessities of the Labor Movement. This right has come under attack by some who say that striking against the national or public interest is irresponsible. As long as American society is characterized by social and economic inequity labor's first responsibility is to itself.

The New York City newspaper strike is an important manifestation of the right of labor to continually advance its position in society. Opponents of the strike, such as the Publishers' Association and even many liberals, criticize the Typographers' demands as excessive. It must be recognized, however, that labor, and only labor, has a right to determine the extent of its demands. Those who support labor in principle must support it in actuality.

We therefore urge SDS to actively support the Typographers in their strike. We propose that SDS do the following:

1) Issue a public statement in full support of the strike.
2) Establish extensive and effective liason with the Typographers' Union.
3) Offer any assistance to the strikers that may be needed. This might include picketeers, office workers, canvassers, or leafleters.
4) Encourage the strikers to set up a newspaper.
5) Publicize SDS involvement to all chapters and to whatever other organizations that might be interested.

We would appreciate replies and commentaries from all those who read this.

January 13, 1963

Dear Kim,

There are two issues involved in such a decision of support. The first is the right of labor to strike at any time and determine its own demands; the second is whether in this particular instance we feel that the union's demands are justified.

It seems to me that our response to the first must be unequivocal support of the union. To take union's side in a management-union dispute ought to be an automatic reflex for the radical community, quite apart from the issues involved. I myself would take such a stand, I believe that the majority of SDS would take such a stand, and that it would be good for us to do so.

The second issue is more problematic, however. I gather in reading your letter that it deals with the first point almost entirely. Was this deliberate? What is your feeling on the actual issues involved? Before SDS is prepared to make a statement on the matter of the strike we ought to think through whether such a statement should support the right of the unions to make such demands, or the demands themselves.

The member of SDS who is probably most in contact with the whole matter, Jack Newfield, editor of the West Side News, has come out in an editorial opposed to the strike and the demands. We have talked at length with Jack, some of us; and while I am no expert on the strike, the general position I would take would support him mostly.

To summarize the situation, as I see it:

1) The Typographers are asking both for an $18/week increase over two years, on top of their present base pay of $141 for a 36½-hour week; and airtight guarantees against loss of jobs by automation. The total effect of these two demands, if met, would be to put out of business all of the less well-financed papers: The Mirror, The Post, possibly The Herald Tribune, The Journal-American, The Long Island Star-Journal. Or else these would have to boost the price quite a notch. This is not just "crying wolf": these papers actually are in financial difficulty. In view of the potential loss of the Post, the left-wing here will have lost its only major public voice.

2) It seems fairly clear that a good deal of the reason for a strike--if not the major reason--is a matter of union rivalry. The Newspapermen's Guild settled for an $8 increase over two years, not too long ago, and has probably taken the lead away from the Typographers as the more militant union. There are unofficial indications that the decision to strike was made long before there was any effort to negotiate, and that the strike is a prestige one as well as--if not actually in place of--one to benefit the workers. They are sitting quite comfortably with a $4 million strike fund, and the union men are taking home $98/week per family while the strike gets settled.

3) Either of the two demands, by themselves, may be feasible; together, they will lose jobs for union men because of the loss of several newspapers. My own feeling is that they should have made a big issue of automation and left wages alone.

4) On the other hand, the newspaper publishers are no heroes either. Only four papers were struck--the News, Times, World-Telegram, and Long Island Press. The others are lock-out situations; the rationale being to keep one paper from profiting at the expense of another but more importantly by the total news black-out shifting public opinion against the strikers, and using up their striking fund in support of these printers also.

5) Outside of the newspapers themselves, the persons most hurt by the strike are the reporters, copy editors, copy boys, etc. who are in the Guild; while out of work, they are getting some $35/week in support, hardly enough to live on. Yet they have no part in the decision on when the newspapers will resume publishing. By the end of the strike the Guild will be financially in very bad shape.

Jimmy Wechsler summed it up the other day: "there are no heroes on either side." And I understand Murray Kempton, who is not the most conservative guy around, has a long article in the New Republic blasting the union, but I haven't read it.

So I am left personally in the position of supporting totally the right of the union to strike, opposing totally any imposed arbitration or legislation through Congress (which I hear is in the offing), but not supporting the union demands. On the other hand, support of unionism means that I would not want to declare my disagreement publicly.

The involvement of SDS in the strike is primarily a New York affair, of course, and since there is no formal organization here other than the National Administrative Committee, I am going to raise the issue with that body. Frankly, there isn't much else we can do except publish a statement. Token picketing is in progress and no help is needed there; the union is affluent, needs no more volunteer help than it already has; it has a newspaper for its members but has decided that it does not want to take its case to the larger public; and I am not clear on what extended relations would mean or consist of.

Sincerely yours,
Jim

Dear Jim,

We are aware of Jack Newfield's position on the strike. It was, in fact, our knowledge of this that prompted us to send such a letter. That radicals cousd be found in the position of opposing labor was of great concern to us. Like yourself we believe that, "To take the union's side in a management-union dispute ought to be an automatic reflex for the radical community, quite apart from the issues involved." Furthermore, we do not believe that this reflex is irrational but based upon the fact that the progress we desire is dependent upon the labor movement and the direction of its activities. As you are doubtless aware, the NYC newspaper strike is not taking place in a vacuum, but in the midst of a national strike wave of considerable intensity. It is in the context of this national struggle that we view the NYC strike. We see this as the first in a long series of labor crises that will lead to the long awaited liberalization and politicization of the labor movement. Certainly the predicted recession in 1963 will deepen this labor crisis--unless the tax-cut actually alleviates the situation, which we doubt. It is just at such times that labor is most open to help and cooperation from students and radicals in general. Let us not cut ourselves off before that time comes. Though the demonstration by 5,000 workers in Times Square would indicate that the Typographers are not as isolated as we had thought, their isolation is enough to that this would be an excellent time to establish contact.

Before we deal with the five issues that you have outlined, we should like to make a distinction that seems to us important. Opposition and support with criticism are two different things. One criticizes the Trade Union movement for its beaurocratic structure and its conservative leadership; one does not oppose it or suggest its disolution. SDS criticizes the red-baiting of the YPSL, but does not suggest destroying the YPSL as an organization--we are in fact fraternal groups. At the same time, one may say of a union that its demands are mis-oriented, but one does not oppose its strike. If you defend labor's right to strike it is rather contradictory to oppose a strike when it comes--especially because these days this means supporting the right of the government to stop that strike.

1) Granted that $159 a week seems like a lot - $8,168 a year if they work full time. Nevertheless, who are we to say that he can't have the living of a begining advertizing copy writer. Isn't social equality our goal? Once again we would say that "labor, and only labor has the right to determine the extent of its demands." We certainly wouldn't give that right to management. We hardly need to dwell on the necessity and relevance of anti-automation clauses. The fact that labor's demands threaten to put certain to the papers out of business only points up what radicals have always maintained: that the interests of labor and the corporation, whatever form that corporation may take, are basically opposed. If this actually happened, it would further demonstrate the inherent paradoxes of our economy. It might help regain for labor its lost sense of power, which is one of the things that maintains a conservative leadership. As for the Post, we are reminded of the situation that the publisher of the socialist Appeal to Reason (popular in the western states before WWI) found himself in. This "unqualified" defender of labor found that his printers wanted a union. He refused, they struck. He held out for some time until Gene Debs reminded him that he was a socialist; then, of course, he granted the workers the right to organize. Jimmy Wechsler, of course, is not a socialist, nor does he pose as a defender of labor; nonetheless, you will be more likely to find him at the publishers association than at strike headquarters. Poor Jimmy is on the wrong side, even if his stance is not a heroic one. As for Murray Kempton, we would simply suggest that he is out of touch or to be less kind, that he will miss his column in the Post and the salary connected with it--even though it may have been less than the printers will make. That may sound crass, but it should be realized that these are the times that divide the radicals from the well-wishers.

2) We are sure that at least part of the motivation of the Typographers' strike is competition. It is unfortunate that unions are forced to compete and we would recommend deep reforms in the structure of the American Trade Union movement, but this is not the issue at this time. In this particular case, we see the competition as healthy, since it is well known that the AFL-CIO Printers' Guild in NYC has for a long time been signing "Honeymoon" contracts with the publishers. It is important to keep in mind another of the demands that the strikers are making: to get the publishers' agreement to having both the Guild and Typographers' contracts signed at the same time. This demand is an attempt to eliminate both the "Honeymoon" contracts signed by the Guild and the company, not the Typographers. We believe that it is natural for a more militant union to compete with its weak sister in the interests of the workers.

3) We would agree with your criticism of the union's not placing the issue of automation in the foreground, but we do not see this as grounds for opposing the strike.

4) Of course. Are we to assume from the fact that the Post was not originally struck that it has locked-out its printers, or is it still being printed? If it is anti-labor enough to lock-out its workers, one can hardly admire the depth of its liberalism.

5) We deplore the situation of the reporters, copy-boys, etc., but again we see this as a result of economic and structural paradoxes. Are the printers never to strike because others will be hurt, and visa-versa, are the reporters never to strike because the printers would be hurt? This paradox is quite insoluble and cannot be the criterion for not striking.

Before I go on, I would just like to point out that the newspaper strikers in Cleveland have begun to publish a newspaper for city-wide distribution--40,000 a day, at 10¢ a copy. We view this as a bold and somewhat important step for labor to take.

While we wrote to the NO with the intention of involving them in the strike, and this intention has not changed, there was another reason for so doing. When we heard about Jack Newfield's position we were, as mentioned above, concerned. were not only concerned that Newfield and other liberals took this position, but afraid that the NO might do the same. For us this is not a question of personalities in the NO, but rather of the general atmosphere of NYC radical politics. We feel that a strong labor orientation is the basis of any radical program. In the new left jargon that means that we accept what C. Wright Mills called the "labor metaphysic." We will leave our reasons for accepting this until a later date. We also believe, hence our connection with SDS, that the student has a role in progress. This role is, of course, educational. At this time, our educational role, in relation to labor, is largely one of example. Trade unionists do not read us, but they do read about us. For this reason it is important that they know that the radical movement stands with them. If they do not know this they will hardly be inclined to join with us or follow us in our struggle for a better society. The radical movement of the 30's was able to lead, or mislead depending on how you view it, the labor movement because it gained its trust. It gained the trust of labor by demonstrating its unqualified support of that movement. Whatever that particular group of radicals did that was wrong, the fact remains that they did build the CIO. If we are to build a new political movement with labor, we too must win their trust. Is there really even a choice between the trust of labor and an occasional editorial in the Post? Labor today, no matter how friendly to LID, does not know what to make of the student movement. The hospital strike was a good first step toward clearing up their impression of us; the newspaper strike could be another such step.

This letter, like the first one, expresses the opinion of only we two. We have had no opportunity to speak to the others as a result of term papers and exams. We really can't say what the reaction to the strike is.

Fraternally,

Kim Moody
Ed Shiller

The following is further comment on the Newspaper Strike in New York as seen by Mike Vozick of Berkeley.

January 21, 1963

Dear Jim,

The Baltimore correspondence seems to point to a revived interest in the class struggle as such, at least in some circles. The YSA is reported to have a new and sweeter personality on that scene, and I wonder whether anyone is arguing with his position.

In general, in holding the radical torch aloft, must we also close our eyes? Is our response to James Hoffa "unequivocal support of the union?" When, if ever, will we learn to be chary of any "automatic reflexes...apart from the issues involved?"

The kind of radicalism which says "Labor, and only Labor has the right to determine the extent of its demands" ignores that we no longer live in the age of proletarian slavery. Such is a sleazy sort of radicalism. Labor has accepted the collective bargaining process, and that would seem to settle the issue: there must be some external limit to its demands. Recognitions of this sort do not solve the problems, but at least they put us in the problems.

I grant the need for fundamentally new approaches to many of the old issues, but I submit that this requires new reflexes on our part. There are people on the other side of our society saying "the military and only the military has the right to determine the extent of its demands." The great bulk of responsibility in this inadequate democracy will reject both views, and for the same reason: they ignore realities.

The sadness is that there are good ideas on both sides of the correspondence, and that in the case of this strike there is not much that we can do. We would increase the relevance of our thinking by admitting that the right to strike is not the right to strike forever, and ceasing to wave dogmas on thirty and fifty year old flags.

The labor movement can be a tremendous force for social change, and we in SDS have a unique opportunity to point the way. But first we must speak to the real issue; what do we want labor to do?

Best personally,

Mike Vozick

The following is a letter from Barbara Jacobs of Ann Arbor SDS.

Dear Jim,

...On the newspaper strike: I wholeheartedly endorse the position taken by Kim and Ed, and particularly urge that SDS make a public statement of endorsement, and let the union know that we are doing so. We might also make an offer of aid, though I agree with you that there may be little we can do for them concretely.

One point of the Moody-Shiller letter with which I find myself in vehement disagreement (actually they quote it from your letter, so I disagree with you too) is the statement that "To take the union's side in a management-union dispute ought to be an automatic reflex for the radical community, quite apart from the issues involved."

My objections are as follows:

1) The job of thinking people is to stop having automatic reflexes and to consider the issues. True, I consider the issues of a particular strike in the context of my ideological commitments, but that does not mean that anything called a "strike" I should automatically take to be something in the interest of economic and social equality, workers' control of the economy, humanization of employment, and other things which I believe in.

2) On the contrary, because I have these goals I must evaluate the actions and statements of labor in terms of whether they aid or hinder my long range social and political goals. A bad strike, one asking for unjust things, one totally unresponsive to the needs of the community to whom it must turn for support, such a strike I would not support.

Some strikes, as you imply this one is, not only against management, but against another union. In the newspaper strike it is true that there is competition between the Guild and the Typographers. It is also true that, in a larger sense, the competition is between the craft union idea, which is divisive and weakening of the power of unions to bargain, and the industrial union idea, which presents a united front to management, and which increases the potential gains for labor. In the NYC strike, the Typographers have taken a hard stand on this very issue by insisting that the contract expiration dates be made uniform, so that the more militant Typographer's union can participate in the bargaining before the Newspaper Guild signs compromise contracts that affect all the workers in the industry. I maintain that this claim is just, that the publishers have adamantly refused to give in on this point, and that therefore the strike is to be supported.

To quote from the Nation, January 10, "One observer said that there would have been no strike at all, and that even now it would end almost immediately on that single point. Certainly, from almost any viewpoint--except possibly that of the publishers--it would seem to be a happy solution of the present mess, and give the union the much-needed face saver (which they) must be desperately, though silently, praying for."

One other statement in your letter with which I take issue: "Support of unionism means that I would not want to declare my disagreement publicly." I think that support of unionism means that we maintain an attitude of critical support. That means an overall support of labor's aims, help on specific projects when possible (this we have done too little on), setting up a working liaison with the labor movement, and voicing our opinions. This takes place in two ways: In grpups where we have a part in the decision-making process, we proceed as insiders, making our criticisms first to the group, in hopes of bringing abour change. later we may decide that the issue should be laid before the public, in which case we begin to function as an outsider, reporting on the group to society (the largest group of which we are members, and to which we owe allegiance).

The second way in which we exercise our responsibility to criticise is as a sector of the public. This pertains to criticisms of groups in which we do not have a direct voice within our political community as well as of the Kennedy Administration. In terms of the labor movement, as in terms of all other groups (including civil rights groups) with which we have sympathies, we retain the duty to be open in our criticism of them, as we ought to be open in our support of them. It is not to the organization but to the idea, that I at least hold by allegiance. The organizations are deserving of support in so far as they work toward the worthwhile goals, and are deserving of criticism when their actions work against their purported goals.

That is all for now. If I have other thoughts relevant to SDS I will send them along in equally disorganized form....

Drop a line.

Barbara (Jacobs)

And MORE news and views about the newspaper strike...this time from Brewster Kneen, student secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation.

January 23, 1963

Dear Jim:

There are a number of points which I would like to discuss with you that are brought up in your January 17 Bulletin...The real instigation of this letter, however, is the correspondence about the New York newspaper strike.

To put it bluntly, I was startled by some of the premises and discussion in both your letter and that from Kim Moody and Ed Shiller. I guess my major point of disagreement centers on the conception of The Divine Right of Labor, i.e., "The right to strike over any circumstances whatever and against any employer whatever is one of the most vital necessities of the labor movement," "labor's chief responsibility is to itself," "labor and only labor has the right to determine the extent of its demands." This sort of talk utterly amazes me in this latter half of the 20th century! The theory that is here being advanced is that Labor, which curiously enough is nowhere defined, has an inherent right to determine the values and policies of the total society. What is really being said, I think, in the statement "the right of labor to continually advance its position in society" is that Labor by definition exists over against society and is not to by regarded as one element of society. It seems to me that this sort of thinking leads inevitably to a totalitarian conclusion and I think there are enough examples of this that I need not elaborate.

I am surprised at your statement, Jim, that "to take union's side in a management-union dispute ought to be an automatic reflex for the radical community, quite apart from the issues involved." What this seems to be saying is that when the subject of this undefined "Labor" comes up, the intellect must perforce be laid aside and an emotional reaction, totally uncritical, be relied upon. Needless to say as a professed intellectual, I find this idea both inconsistent and disturbing.

In reference to the second letter of Moody and Shiller, I certainly hope that the radical community in this country is not dependent upon Labor and I hope that we can leave behind the mystique of "Labor" which belongs to the last century.

I am certainly not an anti-Marxist, but to force the sort of dialectic between labor and management that the writers do seems false indeed and in addition, a manifestation of utter contempt of public responsibility or service. I might describe this sort of thinking as that of a closed circuit with no room for the increasing number of people such as ourselves who cannot identify with either "management" or "labor".

Of course I have my own theories about the newspaper strike and perhaps with tongue-in-cheek I could say that this whole business is being perpetrated by the Establishment to put an end to Freedom of the Press and the Press itself as one more step towards the development of the Corporate State.

I am grateful for the work that went into the newsletter and look forward to more of these. As always, your friend,

Brewster Kneen

Response to Kneen's letter, written by Steve Max of the National Office of SDS

First to provide the definition of Labor which is called for. I would suppose that in the Moody-Shiller letter "Labor" refers to organized labor in general and to the AFL-CIO in particular. For the sake of the argument which Kneen raises, though, "Labor" might just as will refer to any who work for others and are engaged in production or service for a market.

The problem, it seems to me, is not to pose the question: should labor be thought of as something which exists over and against society, or should it be regarded as one element in society. The problem rather is to examine the position which labor actually opcupies in society and from there, on the basis of values, determine whether a particular action of labor is "justified" or "not justified".

A discussion of labor as one element of society puts me in mind of the high school civics book in which there inevitably appears a drawing of the personifications of "labor," "management," and "the consumer" all sitting around a table working things out to everyone's mutual satisfaction.

We may at the start eliminate the consumer, as he is either labor or management under a different hat, unless he is one of that small group known as professional people. This leaves management and labor, or to put it in other terms, labor and capital. That is to say labor and capital comprise the two elements in the sphere of basic production. It is of course true that the number of pe people who are "professionals" and service industry workers is rapidly increasing in America. However, political and economic power remain polarized at the labor and capital ends of the spectrum, and the fundamental relationship between the two (labor and Capital) is the basic determining factor in shaping the rest of society. I would submit, although I will not argue it here, that the interests of the "middle sector" i.e., white collar and service workers, coincide with those of labor and with the labor movement when that movement acts in the true long-range interest of labor (as opposed to those times when the labor movement supports measures such as arms spending as a stop-gap measure to prevent unemployment).

Now it is no secret that there are some people in our society who own or manage the means of production, and that there are others who own little or nothing but their ability to work. From this perspective, of course, labor is one element in society and not something over against society.

It is also true, however, that those who sell their labor power never receive in return the full value of what they produce. While a lengthy discussion may be embarked to illustrate this point, it is sufficient to say that if labor did receive the full value of what it produced then there would be no profit. Indeed, it is precisely the portion of unpaid labor time which constitutes profit. Therefore, to the extent that unpaid labor can be increased either by lowering wages or by automation, to that extent profit increases. To the extent that wages are increased, to that extent profits decrease.

Viewed from this perspective, in a society where profit rather than need is the basic motive for production, then labor indeed exists over and against society, in that the basis of social production is the exploitation of labor.

In addition it should be pointed out that throughout American history all attempts to raise wages have met with bitter resistance not only from capital, but with the exception of a brief period during the New Deal, from the federal government as well, not to mention local and state governments. A list of particulars starting with the Hay Market Riot and ending with Hazard, Kentucky, in 1963, could be given to illustrate this point, but this information should be readily available to anyone interested in matters concerning the labor movement. Suffice it to say that however one cares to characterize the role of labor vis a vis "society," the fact remains that labor was placed in this role by economic and political conditions which existed before the start of the labor movement and continue to this day. Organized labor did not create these conditions, they created organized labor.

It is true of course that the Labor movement is itself a major political and economic factor in America today. But it is also true that Labor is a responsive movement rather than an aggressive one and has been thus since the organization of the mass production industries in the 30's. I would consider this to be precisely the weakness of the labor movement, but the point here is that labor primarily reacts to the pressures applied to it by "society" as an agent --"over and against society," if you will; and secondarily it shapes "society" as one element of it.

If this is true, it ill behooves us to criticize an action of the labor movement without making mention of the socio-economic conditions which inspired that action.

I will grant that the above makes somewhat of an over-simplification of a much more extensive viewpoint; but if it does not convince, it should at least indicate why I support the statement that "to take union's side in a management-union dispute ought to be an automatic reflex for the radical community, quite apart from the issues involved."

This is not to say that the Trade Union Movement should not be criticized by the radical movement from a fraternal point of view, or criticized strongly when labor fails to act in the best interest of those it represents. But if one accepts as a value proposition that exploitation is wrong, and if one accepts that the basis of profit is exploitation, then one cannot escape taking labor's side in a union-management dispute as an automatic reflex.

Kneen says "I am certainly not an anti-Marxist, but to force this sort of dialectic between labor and management that the writers seem to do seems false and, in addition, a manifestation of utter contempt of public responsibility or service."

Now neither Moody nor Shiller--nor Marx, for that matter--have any need to "force" such a dialectic. It was brought into being historically at the point where an economic surplus was first expropriated by an individual instead of being distributed socially.

In the current newspaper strike the ITU hit only those four papers which were in the best financial position to survive the strike; whereupon the rest of the daily papers promptly locked out their employees, indicating that the "dialectic" exists as much today as ever. In view of this, the question of who is concerned with "public responsibility" and "service" might well be re-examined.

I would commend to the attention of all concerned with the ITU strike the article appearing in the current issue of Common Sense by Paul DuBrul, the educational director of the United Furniture Workers' AFL-CIO.

Steve Max

The following is from Mary Varela, Field Secretary of the Young Christian Students, in response to the original three letters:

...I don't intend to discuss the New York Strike in specifics--but more the problem of labor-mahagement. Please see these remarks in the framework of a student's questioning (even though they sound quite definitive--that's just my way of expressing myself).

What prompts the response, "To take union's side in a management-union dispute ought to be an automatic reflex for the radical community, quite apart from the issues involved"? Is it because this is the tact necessary to gain strength for unionism and then to secure industrial harmony? I can't see giving unequivocal support of anyt ing "quite apart from the issues involved"--in any type of struggle--labor-management, student-university, black-white, US-USSR if you will. Perhaps the basic question to consider is how do we want to reconstruct society? Democratically, of course--where the decisions are initiated, controlled and resolved by those who are affected by those decisions. But from what vantage point: from the vantage point of force or from the point of community (this may be a poor term but the only one I can think of at the moment). A dialectic of force may achieve bit by bit substantial material concessions but I can hardly see this procedure as bringing union and management/industry into societal harmony. I can only forsee industry/business being brought around to serve society, instead of vice versa, by a co-o erative venture of all involved--even the consumer and I can't see this kind of a possibility without community. (By this I mean groupings of men bonded in trust towards common ends.) Perhaps it's possible to have a society organize and progress without community--but I wouldn't want to live in it. That notwithstanding--I question the ability of the human values we give credence to, to exist, much less flourish, without community.

All this by way of saying that ~~xxxx~~ in working for harmony in any stratum--university, politics, or economic life--the reforms, the changes, the new contracts would seem to have to be in terms of organizing the university or corporation into a democratic community. This seems to me where labor is operating with no vision--much like what Fidel once remarked to striking workers--"All you want is your plate of beans". We support entirely labor's right to strike, but this does not require our taking labor's side in the strike. I think we must speak out when the issues involved in the strike--the demands of management and/or the demands of labor--are a strictly profiteering venture not mindful of the welfare of the whole industry and those in society who depend on this industry.

You say that "labor and only labor has the right to determine the extent of its demands". Does this mean labor can act unilaterally--against the Commonweal and we still uniquivocally support it? I think it's time we understand that the profit motive is not restricted to management. I think we can see the utter dependence/relatedness of one sector in economic life to all other strata in society. Are all other strata to be helpless without recourse while one sector goes on unilaterally for its own profit? What's good for G.E. is good for the country!; what's good for labor is good for the country? Kind of reminds me of Orwell's Animal Farm.

It seems to me that just as we defend the right of free speech for all men of any political leanings--left or right-wing, if we want industrial/big business control and harmony we must support those efforts which bring it about--whether they be from management or labor; and likewise we must speak out against those efforts which bring about discord--again whether they be from management or labor.

And finally--I can't see where the automation problem will be affected in the least constructively by contracting for airtight guarantees against loss of jobs. If this doesn't show a self-interested lack of vision I don't know what would.

vard, Brandeis, Boston U., Wheaton, Emmanuel, Simmons, MIT, etc.) and should have some seminal impact on the group leaders represented. But how do we translate this into "SDS local activity"? I think the problem I face in Boston is similar to the problem the other graduate students on the NEC face at other schools. Since I am not "down in the context" of the schools, I must depend on the present outcroppings in a symbiotic way. We are most effective when we have people like Ann Cooper and Nina Felshin with a prior orientation to SDS cropping up in the ranks on campuses and organizing from withinkthe undergraduate student bodies. At Harvard SDS lives in varying shades of friendly relations with the three most visible liberal action groups: Tocsin, Harvard-Radcliffe Liberal Union, and the Harvard civil rights group (NSM). The first and third have taken most of the leadership of the HRLU and it is not clear just where, if anywhere, it is going as a result. I cannot find the freshmen and sophomores at Harvard except through these organizations, especially Tocsin. It may be that Tocsin and, less likely, HRLU, will affiliate wit SDS in the future but meanwhile we work with these groups in a friendly way and have gotten some of their individuals to join SDS. I am unclear about what else we could do here at present. I also suspect that the problem here is as everywhere else: we do not have as many people as we think we have--that is, people really committed to giving hours a week for SDS. Ann is doing a magnificent job at Brandeis. Todd, of course, has his duties with Tocsin itself. Richard Rothstein is active ~~ix~~ with the civil rights group, HRLU, and his thesis. Ann Cook will be leaving Fletcher in January. So most of the basic organizing of anything SDS-like I must do. And, alas, there are general exams.

Let us view a couple more "case studies" of campuses and what SDS might do in and around them. We are getting some of the top leadership from the Boston U. peace group coming to our study group (Lee Webb, Nick Norris--president and veep--and others) and they also came to our organizing conference. We might be able to get an SDS study group going at BU but this is a commuter campus par excellence and it would be hard to do more than wastefully duplicate the peace group's orbit there now--perhaps we could get them to affiliate but this has not been explored too much yet because they are primarily locally-oriented. There has also been talk with some BU people and Ben Page of Turn Toward Peace about organizing a "socialist study club" built around Harvard and BU radicals and emphasizing foreign students of radical persuasion in the area who are at present not communicating with American students very much.

Wheaton College has an excellent cluster of girls who want to break out of their school's provincialism and apoliticalness--but they wonder if starting with SDS is the wisest move--whether they should be a liberal local group unaffiliated at first.

Thanks particularly to the work of Mary Varela for YCS at Emmanuel College, there are a number of little peace and civil rights clusters of people--some of whom attend our study group and attended the conference--but they mainly want to concentrate on local activities and are cautious about identifying with something big to swallow politically on the nationalllevel.

Perhaps some of the problems of "local organization" begin to become clear: we don't have the "sold" people to start with at the persuasive undergraduate level; it is not clear what SDS offers the locally oriented group orwhether it would be wise for SDS to "compete" to any extent with current peace and civil rights groups on these campuses; we are still learning in what ways our "education" can be most effective...and mainly we are learning that we have a helluva lot to learn.

The following letter to Tom Hayden comes from Joe Love, Special Assistant in Latin American Affairs in the International Affairs Section of NSA

Dear Tom,

During the past few months I have established contact with several groups in Latin America--specifically, the Arevalista Youth (Juventud Arevalista) in Guatemala; the Christian Socialist Party (Parti Chretien-Socialiste) in Haiti; and the Democratic Socialist Party (Partido Socialista Democratico) in Argentina. The three groups have quite different orientations ideologically, and I did not feel that ideology was the criterion for establishing contact with a given group; program seemed to me a more critical aspect of an organization's political posture.

The Arevalistas are followers of Juan Jose Arevalo, whose book The Shark and the Sardines you are probably familiar with. Since Arevalo has been in exile during the whole period since the Arbenz crisis, his party (which was dominant in Guatemala during Arevalo's presidency) has disintegrated into several factions. However, during the last few months Arevalo's major rivals for control of what formerly was the (Arevalista) Revolutionary Party have suffered major defeats at the polls, and Arevalo's star is rapidly rising. My contacts in Guatemala say that he could now be elected president of Guatemala, despite total opposition from the right. The ideology of the Arevalistas is a Marxist one, although Arevalo has in the last couple of years taken a very strong stand against any form of collaboration with the Communists. This posture may change, however, with the development of events in Guatemala. In any case contact with the Arevalista Youth is important, for in my opinion this group has the strongest appeal among youth sections of national political parties to Guatemalan students. The Juventud Arevalista should play an important role in the presidential elections in Guatemala in 1963. Currently Ernesto Ramirez is president of the organization; perhaps you remember his speech at the last NSC, when he was also president of the Guatemalan NUS.

The Christian Socialists, like all political parties in Haiti, is mall. Its membership seems to be mostly students and young intellectuals, though they have apparently made some inroads into the labor movement--such as exists in the country. This group is still pretty fuzzy in their ideology, in that they don't know whether they are closer to the Christian Democrats or the "popular" (APRA-type) parties. In any case they are to the left of the Christian Democratic parties of Central America; their orientation is similar to that of the Chilean CDs, which forsees a Latin American revolution and some sort of Christian socialist form of economic organization.

The Democratic Socialist Party of Argentina is probably the most conservative of the three groups so far contacted; at least it is the group most opposed to popular frontism. As you may know, the Argentine Socialist Party in Argentina has suffered internal divisions, like almost every other party in that country; and the PSD (or DSP) was formed as a distinct entity in 1958, when questions of personal rivalries and the issue of the united front split the old Socialist Party. The PSD is largely urban based, having its greatest strength in Buenos Aires. Its ideology is eclectic, accepting some ideas of Marx, with modifications by Lenin (theory of imperialism), Haya de la Torre, and Americo Ghioldi (the party's president).

The initial response of these groups to my initiatives has been good. I would like to have a number of copies of the Port Huron Statement made available for distribution to political groups abroad. A distribution of the PHS to certain groups would be effective even where the rank and file cannot get past the language barrier.

THE NATURE OF THE PEACE MOVEMENT

by Brewster Kneen

There may have been times when many of us thought we knew what was going on in the realm of a student peace movement, but I think this is not one of those times. The phenomena which one encounters on the campus are puzzling indeed, at least superficially, But if one goes deeper, I think there are clues that can be found.

A year or two ago it appeared as if there would really be a national student peace movement, and that it was just a matter of time and organization. Succeeding months have, however, shattered this expectation, I think. In fact, one could say that there is today less of a student peace movement nationally than there was a year ago--certainly less of a national student peace organization--even apart from the Washington Action Project of last February and the continuing growth of membership in the Student Peace Union.

But rather than despair and hand-wringing, however, I am led to think that this lack of a student peace movement is a good thing, or a healthy sign, at this time. It may well be an indication that students understand our society and its ills better than many of us suspect or hope. My point is that the apparent, and I hope real, rejection of organization--at this time--is a manifestation of the realization that a peace movement which is established on the premises of our society and patterns itself after the fashion of a protest movement within society is doomed to the role of functionary in the society. By this I mean that the forces of the status quo, at their most intelligent, should be well aware that some outlet of protest is essential if they are to remain in control of the Machine. Therefore they can and will make a place for a reformist or liberal peace movement safe in the knowledge that such a movement will not be radical enough to threaten the Establishment but will soften criticism and pull the fangs of the potential revolutionaries, if they can be sucked into the movement and then have their energies expended fighting such monstrosities as the HUAC, the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee and the draft which are not at the core of society but peripheral manifestations of its basic nature and malaise. A peace movement, in this context, is then just another functionary of the Establishment, of the War Machine.

Students, then, reject all this, probably un- or sub-consciously, and this is a healthy sign that they have understood. And I am one who tends to think that there is considerable truth in this analysis.

What does this mean, then, if there is only a dying student peace movement, at least on a national scale, and if it is dying for the reason outlined above, coupled with a deep sense of frustration, resignation and despair? It means that we do not try to keep any such movement alive, nor attempt to revive the corpse, but rather seek to develop the ground for a truly radical and significant revolutionary movement, operating on the premise suggested by A. J. Muste: any revolution that is truly revolutionary today must be nonviolent, and only nonviolence is truly revolutionary.

I think that there are still many people who sincerely feel that the real question is one of the right kind of organization sufficiently developed, and that peace lies essentially in the proper organization. This is analogous to the liberal concept that the answer to every problem lies in "Power" as an abstraction undefined but usually meaning the power to destroy, without any consideration of the uses or aims of " Power". In other words, the question of "What for?" is left largely unanswered, and even avoided, perhaps because it is difficult to answer and purveyors of violence are inclined to take the short cut every time, even if it does not solve the problem or address the situation. But I would say here that such a concept of peace and the peace movement will never bring about peace because the concept rests on precisely those attitudes and structures which have gotten us where we are today. Therefore I can be glad when such a "movement" is rejected by all those who are tired of being used, manipulated, regarded as potential converts, and who simply want to live a legitimate life but don't know where to begin. This rejection means that the ground is fertile for the right word. (To illustrate: A few weeks ago I was having dinner at a university conference. I got into conversation with a student who did not know who I was. I asked a number of questions and got a lot of conformist, impersonal and non-committal answers. The conversation continued and about a half an hour later I again asked the same questions. This time I got answers in almost total disagreement with the first ones, and this time they were personal, troubled and honest answers. I could have drawn my conclusions about that girl on the basis of the first set of answers, or the second. I am afraid that we usually base our judgements and actions on the first set of answers.)

If this analysis contains any truth, then it should be clear where the answer to our concern lies. It does not lie in a matter of organization, though this must certainly come in time as the logical expression of a corporate concern. It does not lie in manipulation or fear. There is too much of both already. This then leaves Community, Personalism, Integrity, Universalism, Nonviolence, Faith, Hope, and Joy.

Let me now try to incarnate some of these words.

Community. A world-wide phenomenon today is the increasing tendency towards centralism. Community is the converse of this, based as it is not on Power or Authority, but on persons and their natural associations which strengthen them as persons and at the same time draw them into an organic phenomenon which they can serve and which they can exercise responsibility for and control over. In community there are no middle-men. Persons live for the community and the community exists solely for the persons, and not for any exclusive or external individual or groups of individuals. Community is the natural expression of the corporate life of persons living together. Community cannot be imposed.

Personalism. With centralism, a major characteristic of the modern world is the drive towards impersonalism. A counterpart to this is individualism, that is, the concept of the person existing over against everybody else. This is a key concept in "free enterprise". In such an impersonal society we regard people as functionaries, i.e., students, owners, soldiers, workers, but seldom as persons. We regard people mainly as statistics (war-games, advertising) to be manipulated to serve our private purposes or potential converts to be won over to our religion or ideology. This must be said of the peace movement when it is trying only to win people over rather than working for reconciliation and a human society. Personalism, then, is inherent in community, in regarding the person as a member of the community and a being in his own right whom we may challenge and love, but whom we must respect and serve. It is not individualism, but the regarding of personhood as the state of living with others and on their behalf. It means upholding human or personal values as supreme, people as persons and not things.

Universalism. This follows naturally, since the community we participate in is the human community from which no one can be excluded, but from which man may exclude himself. Universalism calls for the constant task of constructing and extending the community because in fact, as human beings all men are already in it potentially. The task is to break down the walls that divide.

Integrity. In a centralist impersonal society integrity and the determination to maintain it must be paramount in any creative movement. Persons must refuse to prostitute themselves and the community must give every assistance to enable persons to maintain integrity personally and the community itself must maintain its integrity. Like community, integrity cannot be imposed, but must be carved out by persons.

Nonviolence. If the task is to break down the dividing walls and to build community, then nonviolence is perhaps the single most important element. There can be no peace movement which does not adhere fully to the concept of nonviolence as a way of life and as the way of life alone capable of achieving a peaceful society. This means that each person has to struggle with his understanding of himself and the way of love. This is not a position to be taken but a life to be lived. It involves gentleness and strength, the acceptance of abuse and courage. It means accepting suffering rather than inflicting it, compromise and not conquest. It means the overcoming of evil with good.

Faith. The trials are and will be severe. The temporal order cannot be counted as sufficient and an awareness and intimacy with the eternal, the truth, the transcendent, is the only reason for continuing for those of us who cannot believe in "progress" or man's goodness, but who can believe in man's possibility and who must believe in the possibility of history.

Hope. This is the consequence of faith, that which moves when reason says it is impossible, there is not time.

Joy. Leon Bloy has said, "Joy is the most infallible sign of the presence of God." Joy is essential and without it there is not life. Beware of one who is without joy. To be able to see the good, to be able to laugh and rejoice because there is one other, because there is one friend, there are others who can see what we see and see us as we like not to see ourselves but who can make us laugh...Joy is the sign of humanity.

These are some of the elements of a peace movement. A community of friends who share a vision and trust one another...nay, love one another--not to be confused with liking. So we begin by becoming acquainted and ever widening the circle, establishing the community of trust and affection, non-violence and joy, which can sorely tempt those who fear and would hate. The movement shows another way, it wins the hearts and lives of men because it becomes a way of life and not another manipulator. It cannot threaten because it has nothing with which to threaten. It cannot be violent because it knows itself in every other. It frees those caught in the machine. It is radical because it establishes its own terms and does not live on the suffrance of the Establishment. It seeks to overthrow the Establishment, to undermine it and overcome it with personalism community, nonviolence. It is the greate t threat to the present society which will not tolerate it but cannot kill it and which must be won over if only we can grow and love and perservere through the upholding and criticism and affection of one another.

RANDOM THOUGHTS AFTER CUBA
by Donald McKelvey

What follows are mostly just thoughts which have come to mind during and since Deterrence Week, Oct. 22-28. It is not particularly well-organized and is not meant to encompass any definitive analysis of Cuba or the Cuban crisis; i do think, however, that it brings up important questions for people working for peace.

When i originally decided to write these "random thoughts", i was most impressed by the implication of the Cuban crisis for analysis of Soviet military strength. For, if one was to believe Administration statements and press accounts, the emplacement of Soviet missiles in Cuba resulted in a significant and strategic increase in Soviet military power. (This was the basic reason given by the Administration for getting the Soviet missiles out of Cuba.) If this was true, then Soviet military power must be extremely limited, and nowhere near American military power. Clearly this would have extraordinary implications for the respective nuclear strategies of the respective countries. Then the government, through Deputy Secretary of Defense Roswell Gilpatric (on TV show "Issues and Answers" , quoted in I.F. Stone's Weekly of November 19), declared that in fact "there was (not) any major change in the over-all military equation as a result of this particular deployment (of missiles in Cuba)." All that had happened was that "an element of flexibility (for us) introduced into the power equation that the Soviets had not heretofor possessed." The above brings up two questions: first, what is the actual state of Soviet (and American) military strength?; second, why did the Administration feel it had to tell such a blatant lie?, and what implications does this hold for the future?

The government's original position on Soviet military strength and Cuban bases prompted Hanson Baldwin, military editor of the New York Times, to do an analysis of comparative Soviet and American power and of the function of overseas bases (Times, Nov. 7, 1962, p.6). The figures are most revealing, for they show clearly that the Soviet Union does not have the power necessary both to carry out a first strike on military targets and to have enough weapons in reserve to carry out a second strike on cities. (Clearly, it would be suicidal to carry out a first strike on cities, for the automatic response would be retaliation on one's own cities.) This policy of minimum deterrence on the part of the Soviet Union (i.e. retaining only enough nuclear weapons and delivery systems to destroy U.S. cities after an American first strike, and keeping those weapons either sufficiently secret, sufficiently mobile, or sufficiently rapid-firing to save them from an American first strike) and the contrasting policy of counterforce held by the U.S. (i.e. retaining enough weapons to launch a "pre-emptive" first strike on Soviet military targets and to hold in abeyance enough weapons to threaten bombing of Soviet cities--holding them in "hostage"--and even devistation of a third power--China) are most clearly spelled out in an article by Prof. P.M.S. Blackett in The New Statesman of March 2, 1962 (reprinted by Marzani and Munsell, 100 W 23 St., NYC 11; 25¢) entitled "The Military Background to Disarmament". This anaysis by Prof. Blackett, a British military strategist of considerable stature, is most important and should be read, i believe, by every peace-concerned individual--as should an article in the October 1962 "Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists" (935 E 60 St., Chicago 37) by Michael Brower entitled "Nuclear Strategy of the Kennedy Administration" dealing also with the comparative nuclear policies and strengths of the two countries. Perhaps it is fortunate that the Cuban crisis threw into clear relief this whole question of nuclear strength and policy, for the tendency of much of the "peace movement" to equate Soviet and American military policy and threat is clearly erroneous; much more sophisticated analysis and understanding is needed.

Second, what were the Administration's additional reasons for its extreme reaction to Soviet missiles in Cuba, in addition to the stated one of the enhancement (though only tactical, not strategic) of Soviet military power? I suspect at least two such reasons--first, a paranoia about having missiles 90 miles away (especially if potentially available to "that crazy bearded beatnik"); second, a desire to deprive the Castro regime of all possible means of defending itself (note the insistence, since then, that the outmoded--see I.F.Stone's Weekly, Nov. 19, 1962--IL-28 bombers are "offensive" and the further insistence that all Soviet troops leave Cuba, as well as the insistence that the "no-invasion" pledge will not be issued until inspection is accepted by Cuba--though not with counter-inspection of U.S.-sponsored counter-revolutionary plotters throughout the Caribbean). Also, this particular episode reminds us that our government is willing to deceive us in order to justify its aggressive policies; and we should, henceforth, be considerably less than trustful of the government's statements in a future Cuban "crisis" (e.g. the undoubtedly forthcoming invasion).

Without contributing to Cold War-oriented debate, it is relevant to examine "who won". According to the U.S. press, the U.S. won, making Khrushchev back down in the face of our superior might (and right?) and making Castro look ridiculous and insignificant. Furthermore, there was virtually unamimous agreement throughout the world--including Latin America--that the U.S. had acted justly, and U.S. actions had the support of most regimes and peoples. This general analysis must be dealt with on two levels:

First, is it true that the U.S. had the support of the peoples (never mind the reactionary regimes in U.S.-tied underdeveloped countries, especially Latin America) of the world? I really have inadequate information on this, but i do know that even in London there was grave doubt about U.S. actions (see I.F. Stone's Weekly, Oct. 24, 1962); and i suspect that those actions had very little support indeed from peoples--or even from most governments--in the underdeveloped world. In the atmosphere of national support for Kennedy and psychological self-censorship of the press (as well as the usually poor or non-existent reporting of underdeveloped nations' peoples' reactions), it was--and remains--very difficult to tell just how the world's peoples felt during that week. It is important to note, by the way, the condemnatory-of-the-Soviet-Union-and-disappointed-with-Castro statement of important leftist Brasilian leader Leonel Brizola.

If the administration actually believes that it had the support of the world's peoples in this act of power/deterrence, it makes the Administration even more dangerous (it is perhaps even worse if that evaluation is incorrect, for it will show the U.S. government to be out of touch with reality.

Second, did the U.S. "win"? Before the emplacement of missiles in Cuba, it appeared that an invasion was, if not iminent, soon to come. (Why else, for instance, would the government reverse its policy--this was in summer 1962--and accept into the U.S. Army refugees who did not know any English, train them in Spanish-speaking outfits, and hold the option to release them after five months if they still didn't know English?) Now the Castro regime has been given what may very well prove to be a vital breathing spell in which to consolidate its defenses and, more important, build its economy in preparation for the undoubtedly forthcoming invasion. Rather than give its no-invasion pledge (as i naively believed it would as a result of its deal with the Soviets during the crisis), the U.S. has found every way to squirm out of doing so (and successfully), from calling outmoded bombers "offensive" weapons to insisting that eveb Soviet troops leave Cuba to insisting on "inspection" in Cuba despite the U.S. government's own admission that all the "offensive" weapons have left or will soon leave the island. Although the U.S. has not carried out its end of the bargain, nonetheless the emplacement of the missiles did serve the purpose of giving the Cuban regime valuable time. (In any case, the U.S. will have to be even more careful about its invasion, now that it has made an implicit no-invasion pledge.) Also, it should be noted that the official government objective is the overthrow of the Castro regime.

An analysis of "who won" must delve into the question of why the crisis came about. What motives did the Soviets have in placing missiles in Cuba? (Clearly this started the immediate crisis, though it must be recognized that in the total situation of U.S.-Cuba relations from which the specific crisis arose, the U.S. should be almost completely blamed for its still-continuing policy of "unremitting hostility" which put Cuba in a situation in which it had to ask for the missiles or die; thus the Soviet implacement must be seen as a response to U.S. actions, not as an independent action.) Accepting the idea hat the missiles did not strategically enhance the Soviet military position, and recognizing that the existence of a Socialist/Communist Cuba (which could be cultivated and turned into a "socialist showcase" with little trouble, as well as used for the spread of revolutionary and anti-American propaganda) is highly isgnificant in terms of North American hegemony in Latin America, i think there are two other reasons of more or less relevance. One was the hope for a softer American position on Berlin, or perhaps simply an attempt to precipitate negotiations on Berlin; i suspect that this probably failed, though we may never know (cf. James Reston's analysis that the outcome of the Cuban crisis did not necessarily mean that the U.S. would be "tough" and belligerent in future crises--N.Y. Times, 10-29-62, p. 1). Also, the Soviets wanted to bring up the matter of foreign bases. Not only would the Soviets like to get rid of the encircling U.S. bases (it is very instructive to look at a map of the Soviet Union ringed with American missile and bomber bases, and then to remeber American counterforce strategy) and specifically in the case of Turkey to neutralize the only country with a warm water port potentially available to the Soviet Union, but the Soviets would like also to bring pressure upon the U.S. on the question of (soon to be--or already--militarily obsolete) overseas bases. As Hanson Baldwin also points out (Times, 11-11-62, p. 6), increasingly the overseas bases serve the main function of proving that the U.S. is sincere in its commitments to its alliance allies (especially in NATO); removal of this American "presence" would mean potential--and in some cases actual--neutralization if many of these allies. (By this analysis, then, the Turkish bases will not--as i have flet--be removed within a year on part of an unreported agreement between Kennedy and Khrushchev--though much depends on the stability of the Turkish regime and Turkish-American relations.)

I would like especially to challenge the notion t hat the Soviet Union has "lost face" in international opinion by backing down before U.S. might; rather, i suspect t hat many people and peoples share Bertrand Russell's appreciation of Soviet calmness in the face of incredible U.S. belligerence.

On the balance of "victory", then, Cuba "won" most, having been given at least a lease on life; the Soviets "won" next most; and the U.S. came out least ahead, if at all (except in the reinforcement of a whole host of prevailing attitudes on the part of the American people and governments friendly to the U.S.--which is scarcely much of a victory).

Perhaps most of all i wonder about the responses and actions of the "peace movement". Almost exclusively, the method of confrontation with the public was the traditional "public witness" one--demonstrations, walks, rallies, etc. (None of us thought we could do the first thing about the Government's crisis actions, though I.F. Stone's articulation of this feeling drew cries of indignation and "No!" from some of the participants at the Washington rally on Saturday.) To the extent that we were noticed by the public, i think that we concerbated the general crisis effect of polarization of "public opinion"--or rather we narrowed, rather than widening, the portion of individual citizens' minds that doubted the correctness of the Administration's actions. I think this was due, in good part, to the psychological effect on individuals of seeing "those unpatriotic crackpots" from a physical distance and being able easily and satisfyingly to categorize indirect confronters as a group rather than dealing with us as individuals. (In part, this is the old problem of not articulating our position clearly enough so that a passer-by can understand at a relatively short glance what it's all about and not be alienated from it; only rarely has this been done. But this is not the central problem.) It should be noted that the public demonstrations served the very important purpose of keeping open the channels of dissent and making it clear that there were those who opposed brinkmanship policies.

Second, some of the signs we used called for the parties to the conflict to do things which the other party had asked; thus, we were asking them to take "unilateral initiatives" which would look like appeasement of the aggressors.

Taking the second problem first, one must remember the general theory of unilateral initiatives, which says that it is possible to take initiatives when tempers are collest--i.e. between crises, not during crises. Thus crisis situations are not the time for unilateral initiatives; rather, i feel, crises should be used to explain the background of the conflict and to call for actions which cannot be interpreted as a sking for "giving in" to the opponent--e.g. negotiations or going to the U.N.

In general, i believe, the method of confrontation of the public--at all times, whether or not during a crisis--should be as direct and educational as possible, while retaining the features of dissent-channel unclogging and whatever mass media publicity value mass demonstrations have. A couple of possible ways of achieving this triple aim come to mind. One, used by the General Strike for Peace in New York City for months prior to the week of the General Strike itself, would be to send relatively small contingents through a city's streets talking with individuals, passing out multilanguage leaflets if appropriate, in general, decentralizing control and execution of the protest. A second way would be for individuals to go, in tandem, door-to-door talkingto other individuals (imagine the impact if each of the 10,000 of so who showed up at the Sunday walk/rally in New York City had spent that time talking with friends , acquaintances, or just anyone who mught listen--or even if half of them, or a third, had done so). I use the word "demonstrative" here most advisedly; for such people would be involved in a highly important, effective, and significant form of demonstrating their beliefs. And i should like strongly to emphasize the revolutionary and educational effect on peace workers of such a mode of action, which would re uire their learning and knowing about issues and then articulating their positions.

I fully recognize, first, that participation in such demonstration would require a number of things the "peace movement" does not have: highly skilled mass media liaison people, who could make such demonstrations sufficiently imaginative-sounding (afterall, they would be imaginative; we would only have to tell the truth, which is not always the case now) to catch the interest of the general public; second, "peace movement" leaders willing strongly to urge their followers to take a psychologically and intellectually very difficult course of action and able to turn those followers out for such demonstrations; third, a willingness to be highly permissive and non-insistent on a particular political "line" for a demonstration (this follows naturally from decentralisation); and fourth, a group of intelligent, articulate, educated, confident peace-niks who would be willing and able to walk up to a door or a person on the street and start talking about peace effectively (of course, the best and only way of learning how to do this is to do it.) These are problems; but it is there any alternative?

"Many pacifists and socialists argue that it is intolerable for the government to police the peace movement but that the peace movement does have an obligation to police itself, carefully screening its membership so as to eliminate Communists. In some organizations this is attempted directly by purges and loyalty oaths, and in others it is approached indirectly by what Paul Goodman calls the "Byzantine symmetry" with which they strain never to criticize the United States without being sure to lambaste the Soviet Union. I should like to offer three comments [only one is quoted here] on this preoccupation with purging Communists from the peace movement.

"Strange as it may seem, those most concerned to keep Communists out of peace organizations are often those who, in one respect, are most like them--leaders who are more interested in selling a line to the public than stimulating individuals to develop their own independent thoughts and actions in the interests of peace. Communist infiltration is chiefly a threat to those who are themselves trying to develop and control a rather pliable membership..."

the least dishonorable failure
by Lynn Pfuhl

The creation of a new Left, such as is proppsed in the Port Huron Statement of the SDS, is both imperative and impossible; imperative in terms of need and impossible in terms of success.

Unassertainable Values

That absolute values are impossible of attainment and that as a consequence relative values are arbitrary is a fact. Humanistic values, conceptions of human beings, ofhuman relationships, and of social systems are most directly in accord with the subjective nature of any system of values, but even Humanism assigns a value to an object which is ultimately devoid of any such characteristic. Such a Humanism further fails by assuming that man may change independently of his environment and by declaring that majority participation in decision making is desirable or even feasable, a declaration easily invalidated by the facility --- with which the ruling class inculcated in the American public a frenzied desire to obliterate themselves and the rest of the world in a war over Berlin or Cuba.

Any new Left therefore fails, though unavoidably, in the postulation of values upon which the philosophical foundation of such a Left may be laid.

Neglected Facts

But however valid may be the contentions of Humanism, the realization of these contentions is unattainable. That this is true is easily proved by acknowledging a few easily demonstrable facts, facts admitted by the Port Huron Statement itself.

The Statement says, "Economic minorities not responsible to the public in any democratic fashion make decisions of a more profound importance than even those made by Congress." To change this situation, it would be necessary for any new Left to become more powerful than these economic minorities. To believe that this will occur is unjustifiably optomistic. The Left must accept the unpleasant fact of Charles E. Wilson's "permanent war economy".

It is also a fact that the United States defense budget alone is over $160 billion, and that this is only a small part of the total financial aspect of the whole military industrial alliance.

Perhaps it is the very desperation created by these facts which causes a question such as, "Howlong will it take to establish a relation of trust between America and the newly developing societies?" The mentality of any leader of a "newly developed society" which trusts the United States is not newly developed; it is under developed.

Capitalism in short is stagnant, but the motivating assumption of the Port Huron Statement is that it can be reformed.

Unattainable Expectations

Neglected facts are conducive to unattainable expectations. Consideration of the expectations& the goals of the new Left xxx is in this context relevant.

First, the means of attaining these goals. The various conditions of the civil rights movement, the peace movement, labor, and liberalism are in themselves justification for despair.

Consideration of two facts in pertinent to a discussion. Repression and violence increase in direct proportion to the amount of dedication and courage shown by the few actual activists, and the number of half-committed and pseudo-committed is legion. The number of incompetents and status seekers who inject themselves into positions of leadership, particularly in such totally ineffective organizations as the NAACP, is staggering, and accelerated movement through the courts an impossibility. Aside from the fact that the tremendous energy now being directed toward voter registration is being wasted because of the continued impossibility of working within the system which is the agent of oppression, the final end of the integration movement is, with the significant exception of organizations like the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, entrance into bourgeois society.

The peace movement is similarly confused and disoriented. The war mongers are successful in engendering intra-group and inter-group conflict by red-baiting, and the groups themselves have evolved no really effective technique of combatting war or the warfare state. Rather they persist in hopeless competition with that state with inadequate attempts to educate a public already thoroughly inculcated with the virtues, pleasures, and profits, of war.

The labor movement is in an even more hopeless situation. Increasingly restricted by big business government, it is nevertheless viewed, and to a great extent views itself, as another division of the Cold War Complex. The unions also aid management by maintaining segregation in their southern and in many of their norther locals.

Finally the liberal segment of leftwing opinion, represented by organizations and publications such as Americans for Democratic Action, the New Republic, the NationalAssociation for the Advancement of Colored People, and rather unbelievably Senator Eastland's Democratic Party, is in reality the segment of the apologists for the status quo and as such is fundamentally opposed to basic, radical change in the American economic structure.

In essence, despair is admirably justified.

Second, the goals themselves. Some are undesireable and unattainable, others merely unattainable.

"Concern with the challenge to the American economic system" indicates a basic misunderstanding of the necessary goals of a radical left and is a phrase which might as easily come from Goldwater's Conscience of a Conservative as from the Port Huron Statement. One wonders at such concern when it is precisely the American economic system which is the cause of war, hunger, and segregation.

Or again, such a question as, "How long will it take to create a relationship of trust between America and the newly developed societies?" is indicative of a basic flaw in the purposes of any Left which would pose it. When it is manifestly obvious that America's only interest in any of these societies is annexation for military purposes in the Cold War and thus a domination possibly more terrible than that from which they have freed themselves.

The previous points have fallen into the undesirable and unattainable category. The rest are merely unattainable.

For instance, such a question as, "How may democracy be achieved in America?" is indicative either of a complete lack of information concerning American social and economic reality or of complete idiocy on the part of the questioner, and thecontention that "universal controlled disarmament must replace deterrence and arms control as the national defense goal" gives strong evidence of an inability to distinguish between desirability and reality.

This inability is evident throughout. A statement sudh as, "The United States' principal goal should be the creation of a world where hunger, poverty, disease, ignorance, and exploitation are replaced as central features by abundance, reason, love, and international cooperation." or a recommendation for a fifty-year program of industrialization of the underdeveloped countries are only further retreats from reality.

And the proposition that America should show its commitment to democratic institutions not by withdrawing support from undemocratic regimes but by making domestic democracy exemplary is not only unrealistic in that this proposition incorrectly assumes that America has such a commitment, but evil in that it advocates continued support of undemocratic institutions.

It is this underlying illusion of the existence of American democracy which will prove fatal to all radical action. Rather any action of whatever nature must be grounded on the unpleasant realization that America is not a democracy but a military industrial complex existing for the temporary benefit of the few and the eventual destruction of all. Thus recommendations that corporations be made publicly responsible, aside from ignoring the fact fact that "corporation" and "publicly responsible" are mutually exclusive terms, ignores the basic nature of corporations and of capitalism itself.

The foregoing considerations must not, however, be interpreted as an excuse for inaction; for to remain silent is to give consent in an era which demands dissent. Rather they are a call to action motivated by a new courage founded on the realization that such action will not succeed. The radical of a new Left must not realize that the least dishonorable failure is the only honorable goal.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF CHINA'S NUCLEAR CAPABILITY

by Mark Scher

One of the main points of discussion involving world peace today is the so-called threat of a China with nuclear capability. China's economy, it has been asserted, is being sapped to finance an aggressive nuclear arms development program. Those who make these allegations should inspect the facts more closely.

It seems unlikely that China has made a concerted effort toward the construction of a nuclear device; and it is not already an accomplished fact. On the contrary, in all probability the manufacture of such a weapon will in any event be distilled out of China's scientific progress in related areas. Such a device in all likelihood would employ plutonium as the fissionable material, plutonium being quite easily manufactured in a breeder reactor, as compared with the costly uranium isotope separation process necessary for the manufacture of a uranium fission bomb.

Although it would be speculative to fix a date, it appears that China will not be able to produce any sort of nuclear capability reaching even a token amount of the present nuclear powers as far as tactical ability and sophistication within ten years.

In view of China's forbearance in her foreign policy, it is highly unlikely that she will assume the form of an all-devouring Ogre once it achieves nuclear capability. The record shows considerable thought and deliberation about self-protective moves on her part and action only after provocation. Examples include: (1) The Korean War, which she entered five months after its inception, when the U.S. had advanced upon her borders, when MacArthur threatened to bomb Manchuria; carried on private talks with Chiang Kai-shek planning an invasion of the mainland. Only then did China act to repulse these forces with only a mild defense in a limited area at first. Then followed three weeks of non-intercourse. Only MacArthur's "Home by Christmas" offensive brought full involvement of Chinese power. (2) The recent Sino-Indian border conflict, where Indian troops had infiltrated areas of Chinese territory through the subtrafuge of occupying territory which colonialist Britain had attempted to occupy through economic expansionism in the beginning of the century. (3) Other restraints such as the Quemoy-Matsu harassments, and the buildup of military forces on Taiwan.

The Western countries and the Soviet Union have tried to foster ill will between China and her neighbors, by sending outstanding amounts of military supplies and aircraft to India and SEATO countries, and have made concerted efforts to wreck a peaceful solution to the Sino-Indian boundary dispute--which involved less serious complications than has been true between countries where amicable solutions have been found in the past. By using the remaining elements of colonialist thought still extant in some countries, they have made attempts to sabotage China's efforts to implement the Five Points agreement of Bandung and to block negotiations aimed at resolving conflict in the Far East.

The following is a draft National Council resolution on the McCarren Act, on the occasion of its application to Advance Youth Organization:

> It /the McCarren Act/ would put the government of the United States in the thought-control business. It would give government officials vast powers to harass all of our citizens in the exercise of their right of free speech... /these provisions/ represent a clear and present danger to our institutions ...the application of the registration requirements to so-called "Communist Front" organizations can be the greatest danger to freedom of speech, press, and assembly since the Alien and Sedition laws of 1798.
> --President Truman, from his 1950 message vetoing the McCarran Act

Attorney-General Robert Kennedy has petitioned the Subversive Activities Control Board to order ADVANCE, a small youth organization in New York City, to register as a "Communist Front Organization" under the requirements of the Internal Security (McCarran) Act of 1950.

We condemn the McCarran Act on principle as obnoxious to the entire American tradition expressed in the First and Fifth Amendments to the Constitution, the right to trial by jury, the principle of innocence until proven guilty, and the illegality of bills of attainder. We condemn the continued use of the McCarran Act by the Administration on the grounds that its use--and even its very existence--only strengthens those who threaten democracy and peace in the United States: the Ultra-Right and the conservative forces who stand in the forefront of the military-industrial complex and their representatives in Congress and in the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition.

Our concern in this statement is not primarily with ADVANCE. Despite our constant opposition on political grounds to that organization, we feel that defense of their right to hold whatever political ideas they choose is the duty of every democrat. Our concern is with the McCarran Act itself, with the right of all people to organize and to advocate political ideas, and with the record of the Kennedy Administration with respect to civil liberties.

In citing ADVANCE as a Communist Front organization, Attorney-General Kennedy noted that ADVANCE took several positions which were "parallel" to those of the Communist Party; advocacy of a four-power ban on nuclear testing; non-intervention in Cuban affairs, restoration of diplomatic relations with Cuba, and protesting the blockade in October of 1962; negotiations for a peaceful settlement to the Berlin question and withdrawal of foreign troops from the city.

Since every peace and civil rights organization in the country takes some positions more or less similar or "parallel" to those of the Communists, all are more or less vulnerable to inclusion under the provisions of the McCarran Act. Even the 35-hour work week, advocated by George Meany, is a position which the Communists hold.

The Internal Security Act was passed over President Truman's veto in 1950. It provides that organizations which the Subversive Activities Control Board--appointed by the President--finds to be "Communist Action", "Communist Front", or "Communist Infiltrated", shall register with the Attorney-General's Office. It defines the three in the following manner:

> Communist Action Organization: "one substantially directed, dominated or controlled by the foreign government or foreign organization, controlling the world Communist movement..."
> Communist Front Organization: "Any organization in the United States which is substantially directed, dominated or controlled by a Communist Action Organization and is primarily operated for the purpose of giving aid and support to a Communist Action Organization.../and/or/ the extent to which the positions taken or advanced by it from time to time on matters of policy do not deviate from those of any Communist Action Organization, Communist foreign government, or the world Communist movement."

Communist Infiltrated Organization: "one substantially directed, dominated, or controlled by an individual or individuals who are, or who within three years have been actively engaged in giving aid or support to a Communist action organization, a Communist foreign government or the world Communist movement."

In 1961 the Supreme Court upheld by a five-to-four decision the requirement for a Communist Action Organization to register. To date the other provisions have not been tested; however, the Attorney-General has moved to enforce registration orders against eleven "Communist Front Organizations". ADVANCE is the twelfth organization to be cited.

The order to register as a Communist Action Organization is more than a formality. Such registration subjects the organization to certain appalling consequences: (1) the organization is branded as a treasonous conspiracy loyal to a single foreign power bent upon destroyi g the United States; (2) notice of this political character must be labelled on all mailings and publications to any persons or other organizations; (3) it becomes a criminal offense for members of such an organization, or officers of a "Communist Front Organization", to apply for certain government jobs, or to apply for or use a passport, or to apply for a National Defense Education Act scholarship; (4) officers and members may be subject to criminal prosecution under the "conspiracy to teach and advocate the overthrow of the government" section of the Smith Act, as well as under the "membership clause" of the Smith Act which makes it a crime to be a member of the Communist Party, thus subjecting registrars to double jeopardy and forcing them to bear witness against themselves; (5) in states of national emergency, members of such an organization may be subject to imprisonment in detention camps without trial; (6) failure to register entails enormous jail sentences and fines ($5,000 and five years in jail for each day of failure to register); (7) the McCarran Act makes it illegal for a member of a registered organization to work in a "defense establishment". It also provides for the registration of all printing and mailing euqipment in possession of the organization, as well as the registration of membership and mailing lists, if the group has been ordered to register as a "Communist Action Organization".

To determine whether a group is due to register under the McCarran Act, a hearing is held by the Subversive Activities Control Board. The function of prosecutor, judge and jury are all combined in the same body. Once a decision is made, the organization has recourse to the courts to defend itself. The legal assumption is that it is already proven guilty and is appealing.

We support the views of Justice Black in his dissent to the 1961 ruling that (1) the registration procedure violates the Fifth Amendment, which guarantees protection against self-incrimination; (2) the Act is a Bill of Attainder since it inflicts punishment without judicial trial; (3) the Act violates the First Amendment by in fact outlawing the Communist Party and destroying other organizations ordered to register. "When the practice of outlawing parties and various public groups begins, no one can say where it will end."—Justice Black. And we agree with President Truman's veto message given at the betinning of this statement. It is on these grounds that we stand in opposition to the McCarran Act.

Beyond that, we particularly object to its application against a youth organization, whatever its nature. Thought control laws such as the McCarran and Smith

Acts are especially injurious to youth. Hundreds of thousands of young people will think twice before they study any writings of the past and present which are partial to Communism, if they feel that this may be construed in such a way as to brand them in the public eye. With that system holding sway in one-third of the world, and a major force elsewhere, it is the sheerest folly for a nation to try to outlaw ideas and the study of ideas.

Let us not forget that in several states in the South, the NAACP and CORE are already labeled "Communist organizations" by legislative means. Let us also bear in mind that those who staff the House Un-American Activities Committee and the Senate Internal Security Committee, the Dodds, Judds, Eastlands and Walters, would like to label all active liberal and progressive groups as "Communist", "Communist Front", or "Communist infiltrated". As long as such men and their protectors, such as Senator Goldwater, remain a real force in our country, the loss of one or another constitutional liberty is not just a question of the loss of rights for Communists and their immediate friends. With such Right Wing political forces waiting in the wings all liberals are potential victims of the fear machine. Those who could accuse the National Council of Churches of being Communist infiltrated can stop at no rational boundaries.

Men must be free to organize around their ideas. This freedom does not exist if, in fact, the state intervenes to label, punish or attempt to destroy political organizations. Such state intervention is a characteristic of totalitarianism, as is an attempt to justify such actions by arguments which "balance" state security against human rights. If the organization being prosecuted under the McCarran Act constitutes a clear and present danger, there are democratic methods of dealing with them. The government has full power to prosecute acts of violence, espionage, or treason, but "dangerous ideas" can only be defeated by the participation of all contending views in a free political process.

This is particularly important with regard to the development of young people. The problems of all mankind must be included in the curriculum of all youth. It is equally important that ideas of all kinds be tested in action against other ideas. A nation must trust its youth as they experiment and develop, or the youth will have no trust in their nationa.

We fear that the Administration believes that the Cold War can be waged effectively only if political life is shaped bureaucratically from above. The enforcement of the McCarren Act is thus consistent with attempts to impose "self-censorship" on the press, to channel and blunt the activities of the civil rights movement, and to intervene in the process of collective bargaining and the internal life of the trade union movement.

What is the strategy of the Administration in using the McCarran Act? So far the Administration has been careful to use the Act only against plainly Communist or Communist-controlled organizations, or those which are organizationally useful to the Communist Party. Thus it becomes difficult for some liberals to protest such undemocratic acts, since their fear of the "Red Smear" hinders their freedom to act in support of their belief in the principles of the Constitution.

The pattern of persecution of the Communist movement indicates that the Administration is attempting to outlaw, step-by-step, the public functions of the Communist Party. However, the history of such persecution here and abroad indicates that this will not destroy the Communist Party but merely drive it underground. Nonetheless, the removal of the "visible Communist Party" will allow the Administration to claim victory on the home front and thus placate the ultra-right. That the Ultra-right would in fact be placated is dubious, to say the least.

With the Communist Party in existence, fire is drawn to it like unto a lightning rod; but with the Communist Party out of public ken, any group which makes a radical or left analysis of society and which becomes a thorn in the side of the powers-that-be becomes the prime target of the Red-baiters. This state of affairs would in turn give the Administration more control over the very diverse forces which make up the left-liberal wing of the Democratic coalition, including groups from the labor movement to the civil rights movement to some parts of the peace movement. The administration would be in a position where it could at will agree or not agree with the Ultra-right that any segment of the coalition has "gone too far" and with the use of "secret information" from the FBI, CIA, Army or Navy intelligence, T-men, etc., drive it out of existence.

A liberal administration ought to urge Congress to repeal the McCarran Act and other undemocratic laws which give the foes of full civil liberties room in which to act, rather than attempting to outflank the right-wing by persecuting allegedly un-American political organizations. This Administration should trust the creativity and intelligence of its citizens more, and its unconstitutional devices less, in the development of democracy.

We would suggest that if the administration is to accomplish the goals of the Kennedy program, it would be wiser to take another course. The Kennedy Administration is not itself a monolith, but a complex series of alliances and regional interests which clothes itself under a cover of "liberalism". In fact, parts of the Administration do come from the liberal community (Schlessinger, Stevenson, Bowles); other parts are more to the right and represent clearly reactionary interests (Allan Dulles, J. Edgar Hoover, Earl Russell). The ultra-right has always used the issue of anti-communism to discredit the proponents of liberal and welfare legislation. This tactic was first made an institution by Nixon in the 1946 election, and by McCarthy beginning in 1949. Since the Right need not be troubled by facts and is not encumbered by the responsibilities of political power, it can usually outmaneuver the Administration on its chosen field of battle: anti-Communism and super-patriotism. The hunt for Reds, especially when the Communist Party is not, in fact, a danger to anyone but other equally insignificant sects, can only sidetrack the American people from the fight for peace, the fight for New Frontiers legislation, for social welfare and civil rights. The first two years of the New Frontier indicates that more, not less, of such legislation is needed if the American people are to move dynamically to solve the ills of our challenged democracy. If the Administration is to be successful in accomplishing its stated goals, it needs to bloc with the liberal forces against the Right, not to appease the Right at the expense of the liberals. The attacks of the civil liberties of the Communist Party create a situation which seriously endangers the rights and ultimately the existence of the very liberal forces whose strength must be interposed between the Administration and the Right. Let the Administration worry less about Communists, and more about the Dixiecrat-Republican coalition which cripples every piece of liberal legislation. The American enemy at home is prejudice and egotism, inertia and vested interest. Let us move quickly before we find avenues of change closed.

A BRIEF RESPONSE TO THE McCARREN ACT DRAFT
by Donald McKelvey

I have two main criticisms of the draft document on Advance and the McCarran Act. First, i am opposed to the disclaimer which says, in effect, that we recognize what Advance is (even if we don't say what Advance is) and we're not like that. In relation to the civil liberties issue, with which the document purports to deal, there is no question of Advance's political beliefs; it seems to me that that question is irrelevant, as we are supporting the right of any group to hold any political beliefs and to organize to promulgate them.

We should, i think, specifically eschew any disclaimer, saying that the use of such devices only intensifies the anti-communist paranoia which is so rife. To go out of our way to say that we are not communists (or sympathetic to communists or fellow travellers or whatever) only serves to focus attention further on communism as a special Thing to be wary of and exacerbates the tendency to see so many questions of communist/anti-communist.

Secondly, i am more concerned with the very existence of the McCarren Act and, more important, of the societal atmosphere which lies behind and beyond it than i am with the use of the Act in this specific situation or its ostensible potential use against organizations to the "right" of the CP (i don't think formal sanctions will be used against organizations without definite CP connections). This aspect of the whole affair (and, incidentally, of the Women Strike/HUAC set-to) should be emphasized much more than it is in the document (which is meant to perform primarily an educational function). Namely--that the dominant societal atmosphere in this country is such as to make an individual unlikely or wary even of considering "unorthodox" ideas; and if he considers them, wary of believing them--not because they're wrong but because they're unorthodox--; and if he believes them, wary of espousing them to others even privately and of following them to their conclusions; and if they are logically followed and privately espoused, wary of taking a public stand and of attempting to promulgate them. The informal sanctions and tools which the society wields are much more powerful than the formal ones, and much more efficacious in deadeni g individuals' ability to think; thus, the informal societal phenomena should be highlighted, not just mentioned. The running of this societal gambit is something rarely done indeed; too many go through life "conforming" out of a psychological inability to do otherwise.

Text of telegram to the Justice Department

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy
Department of Justice
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Kennedy:

I have asserted before that a reign of terror exists in the state of Mississippi. It is corroborated by the bizarre events in Greenwood, Mississippi today. Loosing dogs on people who only wish to register and vote cannot be explained away in any democratic society. It is apparent that law and order have broken down in LeFlore County, and police power is being used to intimidate and threaten rather than to protect and keep the peace.

We earnestly urge you,as Attorney General, to take whatever steps that are necessary to safeguard the lives and property of the voter registration workers and those who apply. There is an absolute need for them to be protected from the violence of police power as well as that of the hoodlum element.

I will continue to urge our people in LeFlore to remain nonviolent but it is difficult to predict how much longer the Negro in Mississippi can endure this repeated mayhem and attempted murder.

Very truly yours,

being trained by the thousands in the arts of counter-insurgency, i.e., putting down Castro-type insurrections. U. S. corporation money is going into "civic action" programs to persuade the Latin Americans that Uncle Sam knows what is best for them. Lest the Latin American police become too complaisant, they are taught how to handle their own populations by strong-armed Americans. Someone is scared, and it isn't only Castro.

The Patent Giveaway

When the hired scientific brains of a corporation come up with an invention, the title, patent and any ensuing profits belong to the employer. All very natural and right, isn't it? After all, the scientist is working on company time in a laboratory and with materials furnished by the company. But suppose the invention is made in pursuance of a company contract with the Department of Defense, in a laboratory and with materials underwritten by tax money? To whom, then, does the patent belong? Alas, not to the government—the taxpayer, that is—but again to the company. This is standard procedure with Defense when it awards research-and-development (R & D) contracts, the idea being that private initiative simply won't operate unless it is promised the icing along with the cake.

Defense's R & D contracts total $11 billion for fiscal 1964, 60 per cent of which go to ten giant corporations. The dollar value of the patent potentials that lie in those $11 billion is anybody's guess. "Never," Richard J. Barber, Southern Methodist University law professor, recently told a Senate Small Business subcommittee, "has so much money been spent by the government with so little consideration for its ultimate social and economic consequences." Now it is proposed that the government spend even more money with even less consideration; NASA, with a $4 billion R & D budget, wants to abandon its former policy of retaining patents in favor of exercising the same giveaway privilege enjoyed by Defense. But the Senate Small Business subcommittee disagrees, and so does the small handful of Senators and Congressmen who can always be relied upon to fight for the public interest against private non-enterprise. "Let's not have any more giveaways," Sen. Ernest Gruening (D., Alaska), warned. He called NASA's proposal "contrary to Congressional policy and to the best interests of our country." Sen. Wayne Morse, (D., Ore.), charged that NASA was planning to give away "basic, substantive" public rights in government-financed research. Representative Edith Green (D., Ore.) summarized the matter succinctly on the floor of the House:

. . . Where NASA sponsors and pays for research and development . . . the ensuing inventions and discoveries should be the property of the federal government for the benefit of the general public and not for the benefit of only a particular contractor involved.

These are the decent voices of dissent. But a Congress which is ready to give away all future generations of Telstars to A. T. and T. is not likely to stifle NASA's equally generous impulses when it comes to public property.

BOLD DESIGN FOR A NEW SOUTH . . . . . Martin Luther King, Jr.

This is the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s third annual report to the readers of The Nation on the battle for civil rights (see: "Equality Now," Feb. 4, 1961; "Fumbling on the New Frontier," March 3, 1962). — ED.

An arresting paradox emerged in 1962. History will doubtless judge the year as marking a favorable turning point in the struggle for equality, yet it was also the year that civil rights was displaced as the dominant issue in domestic politics. Although thundering events in Oxford, Miss., and Albany, Ga., captured public attention, there was a perceptible diminishing in the concern of the nation to achieve a just solution of the problem.

Part of the blame must be laid to the Administration's cautious tactics. Early in the year, the President backed away from the Senate fight to amend Rule 22, the so-called filibuster rule; had he entered the fray, the amendment would probably have passed and the greatest obstacle to the passage of civil-rights legislation would have been smashed. (Despite this experience, the President again remained aloof, under similar circumstances, in January of this year, and again the amendment failed to carry.) True, 1962 was the year of the Cuban crisis, which understandably tended to dwarf all other issues. Yet even in the shadow of Cuba, such issues as trade legislation and tax reform took the play away from civil rights in editorial columns, public debate and headlines.

The Administration's circumscribed actions in the civil-rights field was generally accepted by the public; even liberal forces proved watchful rather than anxious, hopeful rather than insistent. The demand for progress was somehow drained of its moral imperative, and the issue no longer commanded the conscience of the nation as it had in previous years.

The decline of civil rights as the Number One domestic issue was a direct consequence, I believe, of the rise and public acceptance of "tokenism." The American people have not abandoned the quest for equal rights; rather, they have been persuaded to accept token victories as indicative of genuine and satisfactory progress.

An impressive list of government actions took place in 1962 affecting job opportunities, voting rights, desegregation of public facilities, the appointment of Negroes to official posts, housing discrimination, etc. In fairness, it must be said that this Administration has outstripped all previous ones in the breadth of its civil-rights activities. Yet the movement, instead of breaking out into the open plains of progress, remains constricted and confined. A sweeping revolutionary force is pressed into a narrow tunnel.

This is inevitable when sharply limited goals are set as objectives in place of substantial accomplishments. While merely 7 per cent of Negro children in the South attend integrated schools, the major battle of the year was over one Negro in a Mississippi university. Two thousand school districts remain segregated after nearly a decade of litigation based upon Supreme Court decisions.

Hundreds of Southern communities continue to segregate public facilities, yet even after the immense efforts and sacrifices of the weary Negro citizens of Albany, Ga., the government enters the fray only at the periphery, filing an amicus curiae brief in a law suit.

Negro unemployment has mounted to double the proportion of white unemployment, and government action produces a handful of jobs in industries possessing government contracts.

Housing discrimination confines Negroes to slums, North and South, and an Executive Order forbidding it affects the smallest possible area.

If tokenism were our goal, this Administration has adroitly moved us towards its accomplishment. But tokenism can now be seen not only as a useless goal, but as a genuine menace. It is a palliative which relieves emotional distress, but leaves the disease and its ravages unaffected. It tends to demobilize and relax the militant spirit which alone drives us forward to real change.

Tokenism was the inevitable outgrowth of the Administration's design for dealing with discrimination. The Administration sought to demonstrate to Negroes that it has concern for them, while at the same time it has striven to avoid inflaming the opposition. The most cynical view holds that it wants the vote of both and is paralyzed by the conflicting needs of each. I am not ready to make a judgment condemning the motives of the Administration as hypocritical. I believe that it sincerely wishes to achieve change, but that it has misunderstood the forces at play. Its motives may better be judged when and if it fails to correct mistakes as they are revealed by experience.

The day for assessing that experience is at hand. Token gains may well halt our progress, rather than further it. The time has come when the government must commit its immense resources squarely on the side of the quest for freedom. This is not a struggle in which government is a mere mediator. Its laws are being violated.

In a dispute between capital and labor, the government may assume the role of mediator when the simple determination of wages is the issue. But it did not assume this role in the '30s, when the issue was a basic right—the freedom of labor to organize and be represented. Then a law of stern and sweeping power put the government wholly on labor's side. A National Labor Relations Board legislated and enforced labor rights in every nook and cranny of the nation, bending the most powerful corporations into compliance.

Negro rights have no comparable government bastion. Negroes are isolated in communities which daily violate their constitutional privileges with total impunity. The government cannot merely mediate, because basic legal rights are involved. The scale on which violations exist is so vast that limited approaches will never reach the evil; only enforcement machinery of vast proportions will be equal to the task.

Government has not accepted the philosophy of tokenism in defense of economic planning. We have created scientific and industrial miracles: computers solve in minutes problems humans would require hundreds of years to calculate; man-made instruments guide missiles millions of miles into space, measuring and analyzing the components of other worlds. Yet in a luncheonette in a Southern town, the government cannot make the Constitution function for human rights.

The government cannot merely mediate because the national interest is deeply involved. The widespread, blatant and persistent denial of human rights in huge regions of our nation constitutes our gravest weakness before world tribunals and world opinion. Our national interest compels us to do more than seek tokens of justice.

I stated at the outset that while 1962 was the year in which civil rights receded as the primary domestic issue, it was also a year that marked a favorable turning point in this area. In what sense can 1962 be considered "favorable"?

The Kennedy Administration may have embraced tokenism as a least common denominator, acceptable to the whole South. But the fact is that this approach is tactically and strategically unsound; the South is not, today, one whole. It is already split, fissured into two parts; one is ready for extensive change, the other adamantly opposed to any but the most trivial alterations. The Administration should not seek to fashion policies for the latter; it should place its weight behind the dynamic South, encouraging and facilitating its progressive development.

The simple and arresting truth that became clear in 1962 is that significant elements of the South have come to see that segregation has placed the whole region socially, educationally, and economically behind the rest of the nation. What is the evidence for this? The following are quotations from the leading white newspaper of the South, the Atlanta Constitution:

> We have stopped justifying and begun rectifying racial wrongs. We have traded self-deception for self-respect. . . .
> This is the South we are proud of — a land of gentlemen, plain-spoken, manly and respectful of their people . . . not a swampland of the deceitful where weaselers dodge and cavil and speak half-truths to the unknowing. . . .
> As a Negro is freed from force, the white man is freed from guilt; as narrow political systems pass, our people broaden; as schooling improves, factory payrolls will multiply and as America grows, the South will more than match her. The South is going to pass her. For here on the final frontier, greatness is setting in. . . .

In the same week these challenging words were written as a Declaration of Independence of a new South, the Governor of North Carolina declared in plain-spoken terms that discrimination in employment in his state must go.

This is the moment for government to drive a wedge into the splitting South, spreading it open. Negroes and enlightened whites have already built alliances which are registering momentous gains in the electoral arena. In 1962, Georgia, on the basis of a Negro-white de facto alliance, elected a moderate Governor, a moderate Mayor in Atlanta, a moderate Congressman from the most populous county, and sent a Negro to the State Senate for the first time in nearly a hundred years.

The South is fissuring along a seam which divides the industrializing regions from the stagnating, backward, agricultural areas. This is significant because the new social and political attitudes are rooted in economic necessity. New industry will not come where dying customs create social tensions, second-rate education and cities without the cultural institutions required for the technical personnel of modern industry.

In short, communities have learned that they cannot live in the past and enjoy the fruits of the present. More and more Southerners are speaking out, telling plain truths to the bitter and the blind. Enlightened self-interest makes them accept the Negro's drive for freedom as an ally rather than an enemy.

There will still be differences of opinion in the South. Yet the present direction is forward and the areas in which blind conflict rages are narrowing. We will continue to know jails at first hand because change will not come easily in many places. Nevertheless, we will negotiate desegregation into oblivion in one community as we batter its stubborn walls in another.

The crystallizing of this new social revolution confronts the Administration with the responsibility to pattern programs in bold designs. In place of timorous steps suitable for the Old South, the government should turn to the New South, giving it the aid it needs.

The Administration is at a historic crossroad. It has at stake its moral commitment, and with it its political fortunes. It will not weaken its international posture, but strengthen it, if it takes the road to democratization of the South in active unity with the enlightened South—white and Negro. It will not suffer domestically, because its fate in the large Northern cities will turn on the Negro electorate and these cities will determine who occupies the White House.

The President has called for civil-rights legislation in the present session of Congress in the face of earlier counsels of despair—the hostility of Congress, he was told, made any such proposals futile. The President's specific program includes some constructive measures. Regarding voting and registration, he has again introduced the proposal that completion of six grades of school should be accepted as evidence of literacy, qualifying the applicant for registration. Thousands of potential voters can be benefited by such a law. He has further proposed a mechanism for by-passing obstructive local registrars by specifying objective standards under which Federal Registrars may be appointed to qualify voters.

A legislative struggle this year need not be a quixotic exercise in futility. The obstructive coalition of Southern Democrats and Conservative Republicans can be split on this issue. The Republicans cannot afford to block civil-rights legislation which the President earnestly sponsors, and Southern Democrats cannot defeat it if they are isolated; if, however, the President is lethargic, the Republicans can be tranquil. They can content themselves merely with criticizing the President in the absence of real challenge. If civil rights is elevated to the urgency that trade, tax and military legislation enjoys, 1963 can be a year of achievement and not another annual experience with frustration.

These are practical political considerations all dictating one road. Yet above it all, a greater imperative demands fulfillment. Throughout our history, the moral decision has always been the correct decision. From our determination to be free in 1776, to our shedding of the evil of chattel slavery in 1863, to our decision to stand against the wave of fascism in the 1930s, we grew and became stronger in our commitment to the democratic tradition. The correct decision in 1963 will make it a genuine turning point in human rights. One hundred years ago a President, tortured by doubts, finally ended slavery and a new American society took shape. Lincoln had hoped the slavery issue could be relegated to secondary place, but life thrust it into the center of history. There segregation, the evil heritage of slavery, still remains.

America's Jobless and Russia's Markets

Sir John Lomax

London

There is not the smallest sign that Americans, though businessmen par excellence, realize the central truth that the line of total hostility toward Russia impales them upon a dilemma which has beset the United States economy since the end of the Kaiser's War.

This idea rests upon an assumption which — in round figures — may be stated as United States dependence, for full employment, upon its ability to export a surplus capacity of 20 per cent of its total productive potential. For every 1 per cent of the surplus not so disposed of, so the assumption goes, there will be one million unemployed. The present degree of idle capacity in the United States is indicated by about six million workless. This is not an alarming figure by American standards, but if events are allowed to drift—in the Coolidge manner, for example — unemployment could reach a calamity level of 20 million, as it did in the early thirties. Since one consequence of that situation was the banishment to the wilderness for twenty years of the political party responsible, it may be supposed that the Administration in Washington would do almost anything to prevent a repetition. But what could it do?

For the problem there is no ordinary solution, nor has there ever been. The "classic" solution is for the surplus to pass into ordinary foreign trade, but the limitation on this outlet is the volume of valuta that other countries possess for spending on dollar imports. For the last three decades, this amount has never been enough. In fact, U.S. fiscal methods have tended always to deprive of dollars the very countries — e.g., the underdeveloped — whose need for U.S. commodities, via the trade media, is greatest.

Hence, the surplus has had to be absorbed by some extra-commercial means. This phenomenon is observable as far back as 1915, when the Allies, already ordering madly for their war needs, ran out of dollars and began to borrow. Until the war ended, and even afterwards, U.S. shipments went on and absorbed the surplus. In consequence, there was no unemployment in the United States; instead, vast debts accumulated, and most of them have never been paid to this day. It was America's first exercise — at that time, quite unwitting — in giving away merchandise on a national scale.

There followed a period — 1923-29 — of hectic finance-house lending. This, too, provided borrowers with funds to buy U.S. goods, and the American surplus was duly absorbed. But again a high percentage of the loans defaulted, with the end result that a corresponding proportion of the goods was also given away. Proof is that when, after 1929, the loans ceased, and there were none but commercial exports, the surplus remained unsold—in fact, mostly unmanufactured—and soon after America had 20 million unemployed.

Throughout America's economic story to date the same theme runs. To keep anything like full employment, the United States has had to give away its unsold surplus by a succession of devices: lend-lease, Marshall aid, Point Four allocations, and contributions to defense for practically every country that would accept it. During many years of this period, of course, the surplus was absorbed — and indeed exceeded — by armaments manufacture for the national and Allied armies, and even after World War II by the rearmament provoked by Russia under Stalin.

Incidentally, it was by this giveaway process, in one form and another, that the United States brought about the economic revival of many nations, especially Japan and the countries of Western Europe. But now these countries are restored; they are standing on their own feet, and some act like competitors.

Thus the situation has changed radically. The American surplus problem can no longer be solved by lavish gifts. For one thing, it is coming to light in ominous fashion that the process would soon lead to a currency problem of serious dimensions. Already the drain of benevolence and the cost of keeping small armies all over the world is wasting the U.S. gold reserves. If goods, food and services were given away to the limit of capacity — as during lend-lease, for instance — the gold reserve would have to be expanded fast to redress the payments deficits. No government could tolerate that; gold is a prime defense stockpile.

In this field, the United States is the more vulnerable because its posi-

My dear Fellow Clergymen,

While confined here in the Birmingham City Jail, I came across your recent statement calling our present activities "unwise and untimely." Seldom, if ever, do I pause to answer criticism of my work and ideas. If I sought to answer all of the criticisms that cross my desk my secretaries would be engaged in little else in the course of the day, and I would have no time for constructive work. But since I feel that you are men of genuine goodwill and your criticisms are sincerely set forth, I would like to answer your statement in what I hope will be patient and reasonable terms.

I think I should give the reason for my being in Birmingham, since you have been influenced by the argument of "outsiders coming in." I have the honor of serving as president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, an organization operating in every Southern state with headquarters in Atlanta, Georgia. We have some eighty-five affiliate organizations all across the south -- one being the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights. Whenever necessary and possible we share staff, educational and financial resources with our affiliates. Several months ago our local affiliate here in Birmingham invited us to be on call to engage in a non-violent direct action program if such were deemed necessary. We readily consented and when the hour came we lived up to our promises. So I am here, along with several members of my staff, because we were invited here. I am here because I have basic organizational ties here. Beyond this, I am in Birmingham because injustice is here. Just as the eighth century prophets left their little villages and carried their "thus saith the Lord" far beyond the boundaries of their home town; and just as the Apostle Paul left his little village of Tarsus and carried the gospel of Jesus Christ to practically every hamlet and city of the Graeco-Roman world, I too am compelled to carry the gospel of freedom beyond my particular home town. Like Paul, I must constantly respond to the Macedonian call for aid.

Moreover, I am cognizant of the interrelatedness of all communities and states. I cannot sit idly by in Atlanta and not be concerned about what happens in Birmingham. Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere. We are caught in an inescapable network of mutuality tied in a single garment of destiny. Whatever affects one directly affects all indirectly. Never again can we afford to live with the narrow, provincial "outside agitator" idea. Anyone who lives inside the United States can never be considered an outsider anywhere in this country.

You deplore the demonstrations that are presently taking place in Birmingham. But I am sorry that your statement did not express a similar concern for the conditions that brought the demonstrations into being. I am sure that each of you would want to go beyond the superficial social analyst who looks merely at effects, and does not grapple with underlying causes. I would not hesitate to say that it is unfortunate that so-called demonstrations are taking place in Birmingham at this time, but I would say in more emphatic terms that it is even more unfortunate that the white power structure of this city left the Negro community with no other alternative.

In any non-violent campaign there are four basic steps: (1) Collection of the facts to determine whether injustices are alive, (2) Negotiation, (3) Self-purification and (4) Direct Action. We have gone through all of these steps in Birmingham. There can be no gainsaying of the fact that racial injustice engulfs this community. Birmingham is probably the most thoroughly segregated city in the United States. Its ugly record of police brutality is known in every section of this country. Its unjust treatment of Negroes in the courts is a notorious reality. There have been more unsolved bombings of Negro homes and Churches in Birmingham than any city in this nation. These are the hard, brutal and unbelievable facts. On the basis of these conditions Negro leaders sought to negotiate with the city fathers. But the political leaders consistently refused to engage in good faith negotiation.

Then came the opportunity last September to talk with some of the leaders of the economic community. In these negotiating sessions certain promises were made by the merchants -- such as the promise to remove the humiliating racial signs from the stores. On the basis of these promises Rev. Shuttlesworth and the leaders of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights agreed to call a moratorium on any type of demonstrations. As the weeks and months unfolded we realized that we were the victims of a broken promise. The signs remained. Like so many experiences of the past we were confronted with blasted hopes, and the dark shadow of a deep disappointment settled upon us. So we had no alternative except that of preparing for direct action, whereby we would present our very bodies as a means of laying our case before the conscience of the local and national community. We were not unmindful of the difficulties involved. So we decided to go through a process of self-purification. We started having workshops on non-violence and repeatedly asked ourselves the questions, "Are you able to accept blows without retaliating?" "Are you able to endure the ordeals of jail?" We decided to set our direct action program around the Easter season, realizing that with the exception of Christmas, this was the largest shopping period of the year. Knowing that a strong economic withdrawal program would be the by-product of direct action, we felt that this was the best time to bring pressure on the merchants for the needed changes. Then it occurred to us that the March election was ahead, and so we speedily decided to postpone action until after election day. When we discovered that Mr. Connor was in the run-off we decided again to postpone action so that the demonstrations could not be used to cloud the issues. At this time we agreed to begin our non-violent witness the day after the run-off.

This reveals that we did not move irresponsibly into direct action. We too wanted to see Mr. Connor defeated; so we went through postponement after postponement to aid in this community need. After this we felt that direct action could be delayed no longer.

You may well ask, "Why direct action? Why sit-ins, marches, etc.? Isn't negotiation a better path?" You are exactly right in your call for negotiation. Indeed, this is the purpose of direct action. Non-violent direct action seeks to create such a crisis and establish such creative tension that a community that has consistently refused to negotiate is forced to confront the issue. It seeks so to dramatize the issue that it can no longer be ignored. I just referred to the creation of tension as a part of the work of the non-violent resister. This may sound rather shocking. But I must confess that I am not afraid of the word tension. I have earnestly worked and preached against violent tension, but there is a type of constructive non-violent tension that is necessary for growth. Just as Socrates felt that it was necessary to create a tension in the mind so that individuals could rise from the bondage of myths and half-truths to the unfettered realm of creative analysis and objective appraisal, we must see the need of having non-violent gadflies to create the kind of tension in society that will help men rise from the dark depths of prejudice and racism to the majestic heights of understanding and brotherhood. So the purpose of direct action is to create a situation so crisis-packed that it will inevitably open the door to negotiation. We, therefore, concur with you in your call for negotiation. Too long has our beloved southland been bogged down in the tragic attempt to live in monologue rather than dialogue.

One of the basic points in your statement is that our acts are untimely. Some have asked, "Why didn't you give the new administration time to act?" The only answer that I can give to this inquiry is that the new administration must be prodded about as much as the outgoing one before it acts. We will be sadly mistaken if we feel that the election of Mr. Boutwell will bring the millennium to Birmingham. While Mr. Boutwell is much more articulate and gentle than Mr. Connor, they are both segregationists dedicated to the task of maintaining the status quo. The hope I see in Mr. Boutwell is that he will be reasonable enough to see the futility of massive resistance to desegregation. But he will not see this without pressure from the devotees of civil rights. My Friends, I must say to you that we have not made a single gain in civil rights without determined legal and non-violent pressure. History is the long and tragic story of the fact that privileged groups seldom give up their privileges voluntarily. Individuals may see the moral light and voluntarily give up their unjust posture; but as Reinhold Niebuhr has reminded us, groups are more immoral than individuals.

We know through painful experience that freedom is never voluntarily given by the oppressor; it must be demanded by the oppressed. Frankly I have never yet engaged in a direct action movement that was "well timed," according to the timetable of those who have not suffered unduly from the disease of segregation. For years now I have heard the word "Wait!" It rings in the ear of every Negro with a piercing familiarity. This "wait" has almost always meant "never." It has been a tranquilizing thalidomide, relieving the emotional stress for a moment, only to give birth to an ill-formed infant of frustration. We must come to see with the distinguished jurist of yesterday that "justice too long delayed is justice denied." We have waited for more than three hundred and forty years for our constitutional and God-given rights. The nations of Asia and Africa are moving with jet-like speed toward the goal of political independence, and we still creep at horse and buggy pace toward the gaining of a cup of coffee at a lunch counter. I guess it is easy for those who have never felt the stinging darts of segregation to say wait. But when you have seen vicious mobs lynch your mothers and fathers at will and drown your sisters and brothers at whim; when you have seen hate filled policemen curse, kick, brutalize and even kill your black brothers and sisters with impunity; when you see the vast majority of your twenty million Negro brothers smothering in an air tight cage of poverty in the midst of an affluent society; when you suddenly find your tongue twisted and your speech stammering as you seek to explain to your six-year-old daughter why she can't go to the public amusement park that has just been advertised on television, and see tears welling up in her little eyes when she is told that Funtown is closed to colored children, and see the depressing clouds of inferiority begin to form in her little mental sky, and see her begin to distort her little personality by unconsciously developing a bitterness toward white people; when you have to concoct an answer for a five-year-old son asking in agonizing pathos: "Daddy, why do white people treat colored people so mean?"; when you take a cross country drive and find it necessary to sleep night after night in the uncomfortable corners of your automobile because no motel will accept you; when you are humiliated day in and day out by nagging signs reading "white" men and "colored." When your first name becomes "nigger" your middle name becomes "boy" (However old you are) and your last name becomes "John," and when your wife and mother are never given the respected title "Mrs."; when you are haggard by day and haunted by night by the fact that you are a Negro, living constantly at tip-toe stance never quite knowing what to expect next, and plagued with inner fears and outer resentments; when you are forever fighting a degenerating sense of "nobodiness"; -- then you will understand why we find it difficult to wait. There comes a time when people get tired of being trampled over, and men are no longer willing to be plunged into the abyss of injustice where they experience the bleakness of corroding despair. I hope, Sirs, you can understand our legitimate and unavoidable impatience.

You express a great deal of anxiety over our willingness to break law. This is certainly a legitimate concern. Since we so diligently urge people to obey the Supreme Court's decision of 1954 outlawing segregation in the public schools, it is rather strange and paradoxical to find us consciously breaking laws. One may well ask, "How can you advocate breaking some laws and obeying others?" The answer is found in the fact that there are two types of laws: There are just laws and there are unjust laws. I would be the first to advocate obeying just laws. One has not only a legal but moral responsibility to obey just laws. Conversely, one has a moral responsibility to disobey unjust laws. I would agree with Saint Augustine that "An unjust law is no law at all."

Now what is the difference between the two? How does one determine when a law is just or unjust? A just law is a man made code that squares with the moral law or the law of God. An unjust law is a code that is out of harmony with the moral law. To put it in the terms of Saint Thomas Aquinas, an unjust law is a human law that is not rooted in eternal and natural law. Any law that uplifts human personality is just. Any law that degrades human personality is unjust. All segregation statutes are unjust because segregation distorts the soul and damages the personality. It gives the segregator a false sense of inferiority. To use the words of Martin Buber, the great Jewish philosopher, segregation substitutes an "I-it" relationship for the "I-thou" relationship, and ends up relegating persons to the status of things. So segregation is not only politically, economically and sociologically unsound, but it is morally wrong and sinful. Paul Tillich has said that sin is separation. Isn't segregation an existential expression of man's tragic separation, an expression of his awful estrangement, his terrible sinfulness. So I can urge men to obey the 1954 decision of the Supreme Court because it is morally right, and I can urge them to disobey segregation ordinances because they are morally wrong.

Let us turn to a more concrete example of just and unjust laws. An unjust law is a code that a majority inflicts on a minority that is not binding on itself. This is difference made legal. On the other hand a just law is a code that a majority compels a minority to follow that it is willing to follow itself. This is sameness made legal.

Let me give another explanation. An unjust law is a code inflicted upon a minority which that minority had no part in enacting or creating because they did not have the unhampered right to vote. Who can say the legislature of Alabama which set up the segregation laws was democratically elected? Throughout the state of Alabama all types of convening methods are used to prevent Negroes from becoming registered voters and there are some counties without a single Negro registered to vote despite the fact that the Negro constitutes a majority of the population. Can any law set up in such a state be considered democratically structured?

These are just a few examples of unjust and just laws. There are some instances when a law is just on its face but unjust in its application. For instance, I was arrested Friday on a charge of parading without a permit. Now there is nothing wrong with an ordinance which requires a permit for a parade, but when the ordinance is used to preserve segregation and to deny citizens the first amendment privilege of peaceful assembly and peaceful protest, then it becomes unjust.

I hope you can see the distinction I am trying to point out. In no sense do I advocate evading or defying the law as the rabid segregationist would do. This would lead to anarchy. One who breaks an unjust law must do it openly, lovingly (not hatefully as the white mothers did in New Orleans when they were seen on television screaming "nigger, nigger, nigger") and with a willingness to accept the penalty. I submit that an individual who breaks a law that conscience tells him is unjust, and willingly accepts the penalty by staying in jail to arouse the conscience of the community over its injustice, is in reality expressing the very highest respect for law.

Of course there is nothing new about this kind of civil disobedience. It was seen sublimely in the refusal of Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego to obey the laws of Nebuchadnezzar because a higher moral law was involved. It was practiced superbly by the early Christians who were willing to face hungry lions and the excruciating pain of chopping blocks, before submitting to certain unjust laws of the Roman Empire. To a degree academic freedom is a reality today because Socrates practiced civil disobedience.

We can never forget that everything Hitler did in Germany was "legal" and everything the Hungarian freedom fighters did in Hungary was "illegal." It was "illegal" to aid and comfort a Jew in Hitler's Germany. But I am sure that if I had lived in Germany during that time I would have aided and comforted my Jewish brothers even though it was illegal. If I lived in a communist country today where certain principles dear to the Christian faith are suppressed, I believe I would openly advocate disobeying these anti-religious laws.

I must make two honest confessions to you, my Christian and Jewish brothers. First I must confess that over the last few years I have been gravely disappointed with the white moderate. I have almost reached the regrettable conclusion that the Negroes' great stumbling block in the stride toward freedom is not the White Citizen's Council-er or the Klu Klux Klanner, but the white moderate who is more devoted to "order" than to justice; who prefers a negative peace which is the absence of tension to a positive peace which is the presence of justice; who constantly says "I agree with you in the goal you seek, but I can't agree with your methods of direct action"; who paternalistically feels that he can set the time-table for another man's freedom; who lives by the myth of time and who constantly advises the Negro to wait until a "more convenient season." Shallow understanding from people of goodwill is more frustrating than absolute misunderstanding from people of ill will. Lukewarm acceptance is much more bewildering than outright rejection.

I had hoped that the white moderate would understand that law and order exist for the purpose of establishing justice, and that when they fail to do this they become the dangerously structured dams that block the flow of social progress. I had hoped that the white moderate would understand that the present tension in the South is merely a necessary phase of the transition from an obnoxious negative peace, where the Negro passively accepted his unjust plight, to a substance-filled positive peace, where all men will respect the dignity and worth of human personality. Actually, we who engage in non-violent direct action are not the creators of tension. We merely bring to the surface the hidden tension that is already alive. We bring it out in the open where it can be seen and dealt with. Like a boil that can never be cured as long as it is covered up but must be opened with all its pus-flowing ugliness to the natural medicines of air and light, injustice must likewise be exposed, with all of the tension its exposing creates, to the light of human conscience and the air of national opinion before it can be cured.

In your statement you asserted that our actions, even though peaceful, must be condemned because they precipitate violence. But can this assertion be logically made? Isn't this like condemning the robbed man because his possession of money precipitated the evil act of robbery? Isn't this like condemning Socrates because his unswerving commitment to truth and his philosophical delvings precipitated the misguided popular mind to make him drink the hemlock? Isn't this like condemning Jesus because his unique God consciousness and never-ceasing devotion to his will precipitated the evil act of crucifixion? We must come to see, as federal courts have consistently affirmed, that it is immoral to urge an individual to withdraw his efforts to gain his basic constitutional rights because the quest precipitates violence. Society must protect the robbed and punish the robber.

I had also hoped that the white moderate would reject the myth of time. I received a letter this morning from a white brother in Texas which said: "All Christians know that the colored people will receive equal rights eventually, but it is possible that you are in too great of a religious hurry? It has taken Christianity almost 2000 years to accomplish what it has. The teachings of Christ take time to come to earth." All that is said here grows out of a tragic misconception of time. It is the strangely irrational notion that there is something in the very flow of time that will inevitably cure all ills. Actually time is neutral. It can be used either destructively or constructively. I am coming to feel that the people of ill will have used time much more effectively than the people of good will. We will have to repent in this generation not merely for the vitriolic words and actions of the bad people, but for the appalling silence of the good people. We must come to see that human progress never rolls in on wheels of inevitability. It comes through the tireless efforts and persistent work of men willing to be co-workers with God, and without this hard work time itself becomes an ally of the forces of social stagnation.

We must use time creatively, and forever realize that the time is always ripe to do right. Now is the time to make real the promise of democracy, and transform our pending national elegy into a creative psalm of brotherhood. Now is the time to lift our national policy from the quicksand of racial injustice to the solid rock of human dignity.

You spoke of our activity in Birmingham as extreme. At first I was rather disappointed that fellow clergymen would see my nonviolent efforts as those of the extremist. I started thinking about the fact that I stand in the middle of two opposing forces in the Negro community. One is a force of complacency made up of Negroes who, as a result of long years of oppression, have been so completely drained of self-respect and a sense of "somebodiness" that they have adjusted to segregation, and, on the other hand, of a few Negroes in the middle class who, because of a degree of academic and economic security, and because at points they profit by segregation, have unconsciously become insensitive to the problems of the masses. The other force is one of bitterness, and hatred and comes perilously close to advocating violence. It is expressed in the various black nationalist groups that are springing up over the nation, the largest and best known being Elijah Muhammad's Muslim movement. This movement is nourished by the contemporary frustration over the continued existence of racial discrimination. It is made up of people who have lost faith in America, who have absolutely repudiated Christianity, and who have concluded that the white man is an incurable "devil." I have tried to stand between these two forces saying that we need not follow the "do-nothingism," of the complacent or the hatred and despair of the black nationalist. There is the more excellent way of love and nonviolent protest. I'm grateful to God that, through the Negro church, the dimension of nonviolence entered our struggle. If this philosophy had not emerged I am convinced that by now many streets of the South would be flowing with floods of blood. And I am further convinced that if our white brothers dismiss us as "rabble rousers" and "outside agitators" those of us who are working through the channels of nonviolent direct action and refuse to support our nonviolent efforts, millions of Negroes out of frustration and despair, will seek solace and security in black nationalist ideologies, a development that will lead inevitably to a frightening racial nightmare.

Oppressed people cannot remain oppressed forever. The urge for freedom will eventually come. This is what has happened to the American Negro. Something within has reminded him of his birthright of freedom; something without has reminded him that he can gain it. Consciously and unconsciously, he has been swept in by what the Germans call the Zeitgeist, and with his black brothers of Africa, and his brown and yellow brothers of Asia, South America and the Caribbean, he is moving with a sense of cosmic urgency toward the promised land of racial justice. Recognizing this vital urge that has engulfed the Negro community, one should readily understand public demonstrations. The Negro has many pent up resentments and latent frustrations. He has to get them out. So let him march sometime; let him have his prayer pilgrimages to the city hall; understand why he must have sit-ins and freedom rides. If his repressed emotions do not come out in these nonviolent ways, they will come out in ominous expressions of violence. This is not a threat; it is a fact of history. So I have not said to my people, "Get rid of your discontent." But I have tried to say that this normal and healthy discontent can be channelized through the creative outlet of nonviolent direct action. Now this approach is being dismissed as extremist. I must admit that I was initially disappointed in being categorized.

But as I continued to think about the matter I gradually gained a bit of satisfaction from being considered an extremist. Was not Jesus an extremist in love. "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, pray for them that despitefully use you." Was not Amos an extremist for justice -- "Let justice roll down like waters and righteousness like a mighty stream." Was not Paul an extremist for the gospel of Jesus Christ -- "I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus." Was not Martin Luther an extremist -- "Here I stand; I can do none other so help me God." Was not John Bunyan an extremist -- "I will stay in jail to the end of my days before I make mockery of my conscience." Was not Abraham Lincoln an extremist -- "This nation cannot survive half slave and half free." Was not Thomas Jefferson an extremist -- "We hold these truths to be self evident that all men are created equal." So the question is not whether we will be extremist but what kind of extremist will we be. Will we be extremists for hate or will we be extremists for love? Will we be extremists for the preservation of injustice -- or will we be extremists for the cause of justice? In that dramatic scene on Calvary's hill three men were crucified. We must never forget that all three were crucified for the same crime, the crime of extremism. Two were extremist for immorality, and thusly fell below their environment. The other, Jesus Christ, was an extremist for love, truth, and goodness, and thereby rose above his environment. So, after all, maybe the South, the nation and the world are in dire need of creative extremists.

I had hoped that the white moderate would see this. Maybe I was too optimistic. Maybe I expected too much. I guess I should have realized that few members of a race that has oppressed another race can understand or appreciate the deep groans and passionate yearnings of those that have been oppressed and still forever have the vision to see that injustice must be rooted out by strong, persistent and determined action. I am thankful, however, that some of our white brothers have grasped the meaning of this social revolution and committed themselves to it. They are still all too small in quantity, but they are big in quality. Some like Ralph McGill, Lillian Smith and James Dobbs have marched down nameless streets of the South. They have sat in with us at lunch counters and have written about our struggle in eloquent, prophetic, and understanding terms, and rode in with us on Freedom Rides. They have learned to sing the haunting soul songs of the freedom movement. They have languished in filthy roach-infested jails, suffering the abuse and brutality of angry policemen who see them as "dirty nigger lovers." They, unlike so many of their moderate brothers and sisters, have recognized the urgency of the moment and sensed the need for powerful "action" antidotes to combat the disease of segregation.

Let me rush on to mention my other disappointment. I have been so greatly disappointed with the white church and its leadership. Of course there are some notable exceptions. I am not unmindful of the fact that each of you has taken some significant stands on this issue. I commend you, Rev. Stallings, for your Christian stand on this past Sunday, in welcoming Negroes to your worship service on a nonsegregated basis. I commend the Catholic leaders of this state for integrating Springhill College several years ago.

But despite these notable exceptions I must honestly reiterate that I have been disappointed with the church. I do not say this as one of those negative critics who can always find something wrong with the church. I say it as a minister of the gospel, who loves the church; who was nurtured in its bosom; who has been sustained by its spiritual blessings and who will remain true to it as long as the cords of life shall lengthen.

I had the strange feeling when I was suddenly catapulted into the leadership of the bus protest in Montgomery several years ago that we would have the support of the white church. I felt that the white ministers, priests and Rabbis of the South would be some of our strongest allies. Instead, some few have been outright opponents, refusing to understand the freedom movement and misrepresenting its leaders; all too many others have been more cautious, and have remained silent behind the anesthetizing security of stained glass windows.

In spite of my shattered dreams of the past, I came to Birmingham with the hope that the white religious leadership of this community would see the justice of our cause, and with deep moral concern, serve as the channel through which our just grievances could get to the power structure. I had hoped that each of you would understand. But again I have been disappointed.

I have heard numerous religious leaders of the South call upon their worshippers to comply with a desegregation decision because it is the law, but I have longed to hear white ministers say follow this decree because integration is morally right and the Negro is your brother. In the midst of blatant injustices inflicted upon the Negro, I have watched white churches stand on the sideline and merely mouth pious irrelevancies and sanctimonious trivialities. In the midst of a mighty struggle to rid our nation of racial and economic injustice, I have heard so many ministers say, "Those are social issues which the Gospel has nothing to do with," and I have watched so many churches commit themselves to a completely other-worldly religion which made a strange distinction between bodies and soul, the sacred and the secular.

So here we are moving toward the exit of the twentieth century with a religious community largely adjusted to the status quo, standing as a tail light behind other community agencies rather than a headlight leading me to higher levels of justice.

I have travelled the length and breadth of Alabama, Mississippi and all the other southern states. On sweltering summer days and crisp autumn mornings I have looked at her beautiful churches with their spires pointing heavenward. I have beheld the impressive outlay of her massive religious education buildings. Over and over again I have found myself asking: "Who worships here? Who is their God? Where were the voices when the lips of Governor Barnett dripped with words of interposition and nullification? Where were they when Governor Wallace gave the clarion call for defiance and hatred? Where were their voices of support when tired, bruised and weary Negro men and women decided to rise from the dark dungeons of complacency to the bright hills of creative protest?"

Yes, these questions are still in my mind. In deep disappointment, I have wept over the laxity of the church. But be assured that my tears have been tears of love. There can be no deep disappointment where there is not deep love. Yes, I love the church; I love her sacred walls. How could I do otherwise? I am in the rather unique position of being the son, the grandson and the great grandson of preachers. Yes, I see the church as the body of Christ. But, oh! How we have blemished and scarred that body through social neglect and fear of being nonconformist.

There was a time when the Church was very powerful. It was during that period when the early Christians rejoiced when they were deemed worthy to suffer for what they believed. In those days the Church was not merely a thermometer that recorded the ideas and principles of popular opinion; it was a thermostat that transformed the mores of society. Wherever the early Christians entered a town the power structure got disturbed and immediately sought to convict them for being "disturbers of the peace" and "outside agitators." But they went on with the conviction that they were "a colony of heaven" and had to obey God rather than men. They were small in number but big in commitment. They were too God-intoxicated to be "atronomically intimidated." They brought an end to such ancient evils as infanticide and gladiatorial contest.

Things are different now. The contemporary Church is so often a weak, ineffectual voice with an uncertain sound. It is so often the arch supporter of the status quo. Far from being disturbed by the presence of the church, the power structure of the average community is consoled by the church's silent and often vocal sanction of things as they are.

But the judgment of God is upon the church as never before. If the church of today does not recapture the sacrificial spirit of the early church, it will lose its authentic ring, forfeit the loyalty of millions, and be dismissed as an irrelevant social club with no meaning for the twentieth century. I am meeting young people every day whose disappointment with the church has risen to outright disgust.

Maybe again, I have been too optimistic. Is organized religion too inextricably bound to the status quo to save our nation and the world? Maybe I must turn my faith to the inner spiritual church, the church within the church, as the true ecclesia and the hope of the world. But again I am thankful to God that some noble souls from the ranks of organized religion have broken loose from the paralyzing chains of conformity and joined us as active partners in the struggle for freedom. They have left their secure congregations and walked the streets of Albany, Georgia, with us. They have gone through the highways of the South on tortuous rides for freedom. Yes, they have gone to jail with us. Some have been kicked out of their churches, and lost the support of their bishops and fellow ministers. But they have gone with the faith that right defeated is stronger than evil triumphant. These men have been the leaven in the lump of the race. Their witness has been the spiritual salt that has preserved the true meaning of the Gospel in these troubled times. They have carved a tunnel of hope through the dark mountain of disappointment.

I hope the church as a whole will meet the challenge of this decisive hour. But even if the Church does not come to the aid of justice, I have no despair about the future. I have no fear about the outcome of our struggle in Birmingham, even if our motives are presently misunderstood. We will reach the goal of freedom in Birmingham and all over the nation, because the goal of America is freedom. Abused and scorned though we may be, our destiny is tied up with the destiny of America. Before the pilgrims landed at Plymouth we were here. Before the pen of Jefferson scratched across the pages of history the majestic words of the Declaration of Independence we were here. For more than two centuries our fore-parents labored here without wages; they made cotton king; and they built the homes of their masters in the midst of brutal injustice and shameful humiliation -- and yet out of a bottomless vitality they continued to thrive and develop. If the inexpressible cruelties of slavery could not stop us, the opposition we now face will surely fail. We will win our freedom because the sacred heritage of our nation and the eternal will of God are embodied in our echoing demands.

I must close now. But before closing I am impelled to mention one other point in your statement that troubled me profoundly. You warmly commended the Birmingham police force for keeping "order" and "preventing violence." I don't believe you would have so warmly commended the police force if you had seen its angry violent dogs literally biting six unarmed, non-violent Negroes. I don't believe you would so quickly commend the policemen if you would observe their ugly and inhuman treatment of Negroes here in the city jail; if you would watch them push and curse old Negro women and young Negro girls; if you would see them slap and kick old Negro men and young Negro boys; if you will observe them, as they did on two occasions refuse to give us food because we wanted to sing our grace together. I'm sorry that I can't join you in your praise for the police department.

It is true that they have been rather disciplined in their public handling of the demonstrators. In this sense they have been rather publicly "non-violent." But for what purpose? To preserve the evil system of segregation. Over the last few years I have consistently preached that nonviolence demands that the means we use must be as pure as the ends we seek. So I have tried to make it clear that it is wrong to use immoral means to attain moral ends. But now I must affirm that it is just as wrong, or even more to use moral means to preserve immoral ends. Maybe Mr. Connor and his policemen have been rather publicly nonviolent, as Chief Prichett was in Albany, Georgia, but they have used the moral means of nonviolence to maintain the immoral end of flagrant racial injustice. T. S. Elliot has said that there is no greater treason than to do the right deed for the wrong reason.

I wish you had commended the Negro sit-inners and demonstrators of Birmingham for their sublime courage, their willingness to suffer and their amazing discipline in the midst of the most inhuman provocation. One day the South will recognize its real heroes. They will be the James Merediths, courageously and with a majestic sense of purpose, facing jeering and hostile mobs and the agonizing loneliness that characterizes the life of the pioneer. They will be old, oppressed, battered Negro women, symbolized in a seventy-two year old woman of Montgomery, Alabama, who rose up with a sense of dignity and with her people decided not to ride the segregated buses, and responded to one who inquired about tiredness with ungrammatical profundity: "My feets is tired, but my soul is rested." They will be young high school and college students, young ministers of the gospel and a host of the elders courageously and nonviolently sitting in at lunch counters and willingly going to jail for conscience sake. One day the South will know that when these disinherited children of God sat down in reality they were standing up for the best in the American dream and the most sacred values in our Judeo-Christian heritage, and thusly, carrying our whole nation back to great wells of democracy which were dug deep by the founding fathers in the foundation of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence.

Never before have I written a letter this long (or should I say a book?). I'm afraid that it is much too long to take your precious time. I can assure you that it would have been much shorter if I had been writing from a comfortable desk, but what else is there to do when you are alone for days in the dull monotony of a narrow jail cell other than write long letters, think strange thoughts, and pray long prayers?

If I have said anything in this letter that is an over-statement of the truth and is indicative of my having a patience that makes me patient with anything less than brotherhood, I beg God to forgive me.

I hope this letter finds you strong in the faith. I also hope that circumstances will soon make it possible for me to meet each of you, not as an integrationist or a civil rights leader, but as a fellow clergyman and a Christian brother. Let us all hope that the dark clouds of racial prejudice will soon pass away and the deep fog of misunderstanding will be lifted from our fear-drenched communities and in some not too distant tomorrow the radiant stars of love and brotherhood will shine over our great nation with all of their scintillating beauty.

Yours for the cause of Peace and Brotherhood

Will Commitment to Nonviolence Last?

CARLETON MABEE

NOW THAT victories for the nonviolent integration movement are coming more slowly, those who participate in it have more reason to question their commitment to the nonviolent direct action method.

As individuals Negroes have been somewhat prepared to use nonviolence by the centuries of slavery and second-class citizenship which have taught them to accept suffering without retaliating. Both blacks and whites have been somewhat prepared, too, by centuries of church teaching about loving enemies, taking up crosses, and turning cheeks.

Yet it is difficult for the nonviolent philosophy to penetrate the lives of Southern Negroes because there has been little specific preparation for nonviolent social action in their milieu. The Negroes have grown up in a white tradition of militarism and personal violence to defend "honor." White police have sometimes tolerated weekend razor slashings so long as they have been confined to Negro slums. Neither Quakerism nor the Fellowship of Reconciliation has been a noticeable force among Negroes; Martin Luther King's influence has been the major one in support of deliberate nonviolent direct action—that is, the patterned social technique involving, first, testing for discrimination, then confrontation of the person responsible for discrimination, and finally, peaceful non-cooperation with it—but King's influence began only with the Montgomery bus boycott in 1955 and is limited.

It is also difficult for the nonviolent method to win complete acceptance by youth, North or South, because at the close of the nonviolent movement's third year of accelerated action, other methods of improving Negro status are still being persuasively advocated. Successful Negroes sometimes say that Negro self-improvement is more effective than nonviolence. Leaders of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People are likely to urge the advantages of court action. Negroes under threat of violence sometimes argue, as did Robert Williams (late of Monroe, North Carolina, now of Cuba) that when police protection is lacking, everyone has a right to defend himself physically, and that no one can earn respect unless he does. The Black Muslims, as well as academic sophisticates like the late Professor E. Franklin Frazier of Howard University, have told students that Negroes are making no significant advances in the United States, and that nonviolence is a method for slaves.

When nothing dramatic is happening, enthusiasm for nonviolence is likely to flag. Sometimes defeatism prevails, as in Talladega and Birmingham, Alabama, where students allowed local or state legal action to stop their demonstrations; or as in the advice of an experienced student to a novice who was planning to go to Mississippi: carry a razor with you, so that if you are jailed you can protect yourself from other inmates. Backbiting sometimes occurs within the movement because of racial bias or sensitivity that racial bias might exist. Charges and countercharges are made about the desire to manipulate people, about organizations competing for power, about extravagant praise for certain leaders. Some students criticize King because he doesn't let himself be arrested often enough, but on the other hand when he first let himself be arrested in Albany, Georgia, they interpreted his doing so as an attempt to steal the show from others. All of this represents very human weakness, but nevertheless weakness which makes it more difficult for the movement to gather the momentum to root out segregation.

Perhaps the movement would be stronger if it had more saints among its student participants, but most of them are not saints, any more than most of Gandhi's followers were, and they resent being labelled so. They want to horseplay, dance, love, and laugh, like other youth. They know that many of them came into the movement not only because of commitment to freedom but also because of such other motives as desire for excitement and a sense of personal significance, and a chance to develop their leadership capacities. They believe that such mixed motives continue to operate in themselves and others who stay within the movement. Nor are most participants in the movement purists in following nonviolent discipline. Quite naturally, when violence does not threaten they sometimes release their hostility, as the following incidents from the upper South suggest.

Releasing Hostility

After picketers had succeeded in keeping all customers out of a segregated restaurant except one man, each time the picketers walked past the window behind which he was sitting, some of them glared at him. (Says Martin Luther King, nonviolence does not seek to humiliate opponents but to earn their friendship.) During sit-ins, when waitresses stumbled in reading the complicated language of the Maryland trespass law, which they must read aloud as part of the legal process of requesting a sitter to leave a restaurant, some of the sitters unnecessarily corrected the waitresses' English. To do so "makes you feel good," one of the Negro student leaders explained to me.

When a policeman asked a group of picketers to walk outside a certain line on the concrete sidewalk so as not to block a door, two of the picketers taunted the policeman by placing their feet as close to the line as possible, watching their feet with exaggerated care, and occasionally grinning at him.

Interracial couples going to and from sit-ins necked, flaunting their intimacy in the face of passers-by and police. (They could get away with this in Washington or Atlanta, one student told me, but to try it in Mississippi might mean their lives.) Such questionable behavior, say two girls expelled from college in Baton Rouge for participating in demonstrations, would not occur in Louisiana. "Down there," they say, "the night before demonstrations we have prayer services. Up here, near the Mason-Dixon line, they have drinking parties."

Demonstrations in the North are sometimes well disciplined, as at Ann Arbor or Jersey City, just as they are likely to be in Jackson or Memphis. Differences in local leadership as well as in police and public attitudes are likely to result in different degrees of discipline. Relaxation of discipline is more likely among those who accept nonviolence as a tactic rather than a way of life. In any case, for demonstrators to lapse into physical violence is rare.

Even when apparently disciplined, however, the demonstrators may be ruthless in their use of nonviolence. As a National Council of Churches observer, who is sympathetic to the movement, tells the story, he once saw a Negro demonstrator hand a leaflet to a white man, who tore it up. The Negro smiled at him, and the white, startled, moved away. The Negro followed the white, laughing at him, until the white psychologically collapsed. It might have been more nonviolent to have hit the white man in the first place.

Moreover, when not actually in a demonstration, some participants in the movement do not feel bound to nonviolence. Says a field secretary for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (S.N.C.C.), "When not in a demonstration, I don't usually get into fights, but I will defend myself."

In Maryland, when hoods broke a car window on the street near a home where a student interracial party was in progress, some of the Negro nonviolent leaders attending the party chased the hoods down the street and stopped only when the hoods drew knives on them. Later, when the police seemed to be blaming these students for the confusion that followed, one policeman asked a student leader what the button he was wearing meant by the words: "We shall overcome." The student replied, to his later regret: "We shall overcome whites and cops." (Students usually interpret the words to mean: we shall overcome segregation.)

After a trial in Kentucky in which nonviolent demonstrators unsuccessfully sued police for knocking them down, in the courthouse corridor one of the demonstrators, a robust youngster, walked up to one of the police concerned, and asked belligerently, "Why don't you hit me now?"

Such stumbling on the nonviolent path, whether in demonstrations or not, concerns national leaders of the movement.

There is a violent spirit in much nonviolence, admits Norman Hill of the staff of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE); and it will not be easy to reduce it, he believes, because for some time to come, as the decline of segregation frees Negroes increasingly from their inhibitions, they will release more of their hostility.

Martin Luther King is sensitive to violence which is even indirectly related to the movement. In Albany, Georgia, some Negroes, in a crowd protesting the arrest of nonviolent demonstrators, threw rocks and bottles at police. Though it was not clear that the throwers were identified with the movement, King insisted that it share responsibility for their violence. He joined other leaders of the movement in calling off demonstrations during a twenty-four-hour "penance."

We need to give more training in nonviolence, says CORE's national director, James Farmer. For instance, CORE and other nonviolent groups did not give enough training to the 1961 Freedom Riders for their experience in jail, he believes. As a result, under the tensions of long jail terms some riders broke into fist-fights, some made pledges to undertake hunger strikes which they later found themselves unable to carry out, and some in solitary confinement broke down and screamed to be let out. Studies are now being made under the direction of Allan Knight Chalmers, of the Boston University Theological School, of methods of improving discipline in jail.

On the other hand, many of those who become involved in the movement grow gradually more nonviolent.

• Said a sixteen-year-old leader of demonstrations in Cairo, Illinois: "When I was fifteen, I was arrested for being in a fight. Now that I am in the movement, I would know how to calm a person down. Quite a number of boys in our movement were known for quick temper, but through the movement have changed."

• Said a high-school participant in Louisville, aged seventeen: "Lately I realize that I am nonviolent even when not in a demonstration."

• Said a Freedom Rider from Nashville, aged twenty: "Before I was in the movement I was real mean. I would fight any time anyone came up to me. Now those feelings are all gone."

Tactic or Way of Life?

According to Charles McDew, the chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, S.N.C.C. leadership—including twenty field secretaries—is about evenly divided between those who accept nonviolence as a way of life and those who regard it as a tactic. This division of opinion, widespread in the nonviolent movement, is suggested by an exchange of views at a recent S.N.C.C.-CORE conference between two colored students, both Freedom Riders.

"We can change hearts by redemptive love," said Jerome Smith, a CORE staff member from New Orleans.

"We can't change hearts," argued Stokely Carmichael, a Howard University student. "The people we deal with don't have consciences."

"Everyone has a conscience," answered Smith, "but some people have not awakened theirs yet."

Carmichael persisted. "Again and again I have seen whites beat little Dion Diamond, though he weighs less than one hundred pounds, and did not resist, but cried, 'I love you, I love you.' "

Smith replied: "After I was polite to my Mississippi jailer for three months, he was able to say good morning to me; finally he even admitted that he was sorry for what the state had done to Freedom Riders." And he added: "Perhaps you can force desegregation without reaching hearts, but you can't redeem the nation for integration until you do reach hearts."

"We are not the redeemers of the nation," Carmichael protested; "all we want is our civil rights."

Reflecting a similar division within himself, one of the non-Negro S.N.C.C. staffers, Robert Zellner, the son of an Alabama minister, is troubled by the question of how nonviolent he should be. "I don't know," he says, "whether to take the Niebuhrian view of the necessity of compromise and the imperfection of life, and thus not to expect to use absolute nonviolence all the time, or take the eschatological view that I must be absolutely pure no matter what. If I took the latter view I would be in jail now, instead of allowing myself to be bailed out."

Some students, including Zellner, believe that nonviolence has proved itself in their experience as valid not only for race relations but for international relations as well. Some of these new pacifists think of the nonviolent movement for integration as a preparation for an international nonviolent army.

On the other hand, a law student active in demonstrations says, "In San Francisco we don't talk about nonviolence. We don't talk about changing minds. We talk about changing policies, and just hope minds will change afterwards."

A college student who has been arrested for demonstrating in Kentucky explains with nonchalance: "My motivation for being in the movement is hate. I am an existentialist like Sartre. I just believe in engagement."

A S.N.C.C. staffer says defiantly: "Slitting the throats of ten Mississippi legislators would be worth more than having ten thousand put in jail for nonviolent action." He is cavalier about nonviolence, but is committed to using it as long as it works.

While there are many shades of opinion in the nonviolent movement, the chief bond holding it together is a marriage between those who are means-oriented and those who are ends-oriented. In India Gandhi held a similar marriage together, but in America it is uncertain if the marriage will last. Already a few pragmatists have withdrawn from the movement, to dub nonviolence effeminate and toy with black nationalism.

Voter Registration

CORE and S.N.C.C., like King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the N.A.A.C.P., and the Urban League, are now engaged in Southern voter-registration drives with the aid of funds from private foundations and of occasional legal action from the United States Department of Justice. (Students comment knowingly that by this aid the Kennedy Administration, like Republican Administrations after the Civil War, hopes to gain votes from new registrants in the South and at the same time insure itself of Northern liberal support.)

Some participants in the nonviolent movement do not regard voter registration as strictly nonviolent direct action, and therefore opposed the nonviolent organizations' getting involved in it. But in practice many local nonviolent movements—as in Petersburg, Virginia, Nashville, and Atlanta—have been working at voter registration for several years without disturbing their nonviolent character; sometimes nonviolent training is useful in dealing with officials who use force to prevent registration—as it was in restraining John Hardy, a voter-registration instructor, when he was cursed and struck over the head with a pistol by a voting registrar in Walthall County, Mississippi; and sometimes when a voter-registration project, begun where there was no local nonviolent movement, runs into opposition, it leads through protest demonstrations to the creation of one, as in Pike County, Mississippi.

At recent conferences, North and South, some student leaders have been calling for moves still farther away from strictly nonviolent action toward bringing about a national political realignment, especially by pushing the Dixiecrats out of the Democratic Party. Methods for doing so would include, besides Negro voter-registration campaigns, building ties between the nonviolent movement and labor, and promoting local candidates favorable to civil rights and other liberal causes.

"We can sit-in and stand-in for the next fifty years," S.N.C.C. chairman McDew told a conference in Atlanta. But that's too slow. "We must address ourselves to the political problem. If not, the Talmadges, Russells, and Longs will perpetuate themselves."

"Students must push voter registration in a radical direction," Howard University student Tom Kahn told a student conference in Chapel Hill. "It's not just Negro votes, but the candidates who are important."

Said a Johns Hopkins student at a Students for a Democratic Society convention: "Political action will be less dramatic than sit-ins, but those who have been in the integration movement for some time are ready for it."

The Negro Church

While fascination with the possibilities of greater involvement in politics is common among leaders of S.N.C.C., the most militant Southern civil-rights organization, among others the mood is different.

From the point of view of Methodist minister James Lawson, a former missionary in India who has been one of the most capable Negro leaders in training for nonviolence, the best way to achieve integration is through concentrating on nonviolence. While S.N.C.C. seems to be more and more disillusioned about the possibility of working through the church—which in the view of some student leaders largely cares about power for itself on earth now and pie in the sky for its members later—Lawson insists, along with King and Rev. Ralph Abernathy, that the most enduring kind of nonviolent movement will be built through the Negro church.

In a cafe near the Fisk campus in Nashville, I sat with Lawson and a group of students who were proposing a joint S.N.C.C.-S.C.L.C.-CORE conference in Mississippi to train leaders in nonviolence. The group was suggesting leaders for the conference who would speak about nonviolence in the Biblical terms that would be meaningful to Mississippians. Somebody proposed a member of the F.O.R. staff, and he was accepted. Somebody else proposed a Negro college chaplain who would come only for a fat fee. A student quipped, "Then he is not committed." They ruled out one S.N.C.C. leader as a "black nationalist." In a tone of high seriousness, one student said he hoped to work for the movement as a minister in Mississippi all his life; another insisted that nonviolence could even be used to reconcile S.N.C.C. and S.C.L.C., which are haggling over funds exchanged between them and about who gets credit for what achievements; and still another—the much-jailed Mrs. Diane Nash Bevel—said, "No one can stop us. Threats of violence and jail mean nothing to us any more."

Living Nonviolently

Both North and South there are students, like these, who are more inclined to live nonviolence than many idealists who prate of Thoreau, Tolstoy, and Gandhi. One group of student activists who occupy an apartment together have no phone, no timepiece (they lean out of a window to look at a clock in the street) and yet are generous in sharing what they have with others. By their own decision, most of the S.N.C.C. staff work for forty dollars a week, and sometimes for lack of funds S.N.C.C. is unable to pay even that. One S.N.C.C. staffer can get by with sleeping in a car, eating one meal a day, and wearing a shirt for a week at a time. Students who spend the summer helping the movement wherever they are needed often receive nothing in return except the lodging and meals which local people care to give them.

In the deep South—which Black Muslim Malcolm X calls "the land of the tree and the home of the grave" —some students are expelled from school, estranged from their families, followed in the streets, or beaten and jailed, but they often learn to accept their suffering without bitterness.

Bob Zellner was shown off to visitors in his prison in Louisiana as "that nigger-loving anarchist," yet was able to say: "If some of us have to spend ten years at hard labor, we'll come out stronger, both physically and spiritually."

Bertha Gober tried to buy a bus ticket at a white ticket window, and for doing so was suspended from State College, Albany, Georgia, and jailed. But afterwards she said: "I have gained a feeling of decency and self-respect, a feeling of cleanliness, that neither the dirtiest walls of Albany's jail nor the actions of any institution can take away from me."

Such youth can be powerful agents of social change, because they combine sincere appeals to the accepted traditions of democracy and Christianity with little fear for what anyone can do to their bodies, possessions, or careers. Whether in jail or not, they are among the freest people in America.

That participants in the nonviolent movement are chiefly youths, and that youths are naturally less disciplined than adults, makes their continued commitment to nonviolence, though in various degrees, more impressive.

Their commitment, however, will not necessarily continue. If they accept nonviolence merely as a tactic, as probably over ninety per cent of them do, their commitment is likely to continue (whether the movement turns increasingly to political activity or not) only if they receive a rigorous training in nonviolence and achieve a fair number of victories over segregation.

Integration: The Coming Victory

There is a "New Mood" developing in the New Negro. Practically everyone was caught by surprise a few years ago when the New Negro first emerged—the Negro who carried through the nonviolent Montgomery bus boycott and then went on to "sit in" in thousands of Southern restaurants, take part, again by thousands, in Freedom Rides and innumerable other actions, personal and collective, legal and illegal, to assert their inalienable rights to dignity and decency. Unbelievable sacrifices have been made and incredible courage displayed that has made reflective white people wonder if they dare consider themselves worthy of equality with Negroes (though not a few whites have acted with dignity and courage, too).

There have also been defections, failures and detours—the entrenched power of the reactionary white community is immense; the hypocrisy of the Federal government staggering. The unrecognized racist assumptions of the ordinary "pro-Negro" white, North and South, are sometimes even more difficult to grapple with because they are so subtle and all-pervasive, woven as they are into the social fabric. In addition, the lures of prestige—lecture tours, teas at the White House, public acclaim—have captivated some of the Negro leadership. But the pressure from the ranks is unrelenting and, like the thrust of spring, not to be denied.

LIBERATION looks this month at three relatively unpublicized recent events—and a call to future action—to try to probe the unmistakeable New Mood that is developing among Negroes and will have a lot to do with determining the timing and nature of the coming victory.

NORTHERN PICKETS URGE BOYCOTT OF SOUTHERN BONDS

Pickets from CORE have been appearing in New York's financial district this spring, urging Northerners to stop financing segregated schools. The picket line shown above is in front of Equitable Securities Corporation, 2 Wall Street. Equitable had announced a $1,850,000 bond issue for the Gulfport, Mississippi, school system. Gulfport schools are completely segregated.

The Federal government, Wall Street, and individual investors (most of them from the North) all have a hand in keeping Negro children segregated in the South. Money to build and expand the segregated schools is usually raised by selling school bonds. The Federal government subsidizes the bonds by making the income from them tax free. Concerns like Equitable underwrite the issues and then sell the bonds to individuals, insurance companies, banks, and other investors. CORE is asking everyone involved in this unholy alliance to cease and desist, at once.

You may not be in the market for bonds yourself, but the chances are that your bank or insurance company is. Do you know whether or not they are using your money to perpetuate segregation?

INTEGRATION LEADERS REVEAL NEW EMPHASES

"This is our fight; you white people can go home any time you wish." With these words, a student raised the topical question of black leadership at a recent conference of integration leaders. Gathered in closed session at Midway, Georgia, March 11th through 13th, were fifty front-line fighters for integration from the Congress of Racial Equality, the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. They included James Farmer, national director of CORE, Diane Nash Bevel, in charge of Mississippi work for S.N.C.C., and James Lawson, Wyatt Tee Walker, and Martin Luther King from S.C.L.C. Present as resource leaders were Glenn Smiley of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, Bayard Rustin and A. J. Muste. Veterans of jail and violence, familiar with race-baiting and hero-worship, all these activists felt the need to come together to grapple with the lessons of the last few years in order to take stock of where they are and where they are going. In the course of their explorations, fundamental questions were aired and some tentative answers began to emerge.

Black Leadership: Negroes are tired of being told by whites what to do—by white integrationists as well as white segregationists. Men like Adam Clayton Powell and the black nationalists may be exploiting this reaction for their own ends, but there is a genuine need for Negroes to assert their own selfhood. At Midway, there was agreement that in the long run they can accomplish this best not by emphasizing ties of "blackness," but by developing ties of brotherhood in the struggle itself (as happened for a time in Montgomery). As Glenn Smiley and James Lawson pointed out, a man's real ancestors are his spiritual ancestors, those of whatever race or color who have struggled throughout the ages for the advancement of man rather than for selfish dominance. Precisely because there are white people who can abandon the struggle but don't, new dignity is added to all who participate. But whites are in no position to counsel patience or moderation. When they do so, they may be abandoning the real struggle without realizing it.

Violence and "Self-defense": Nobody can say that individuals do not have the right to defend themselves from attack. But the leadership cannot have guns, not even for self-defense. If they do, they automatically inject this factor into the social struggle, and cause an intensification of the violence, the hatred, and blind self-justification on both sides. For those deeply involved in the struggle in the South, the question of collective armed self-defense that came to a head in Monroe, N.C., a few years ago is no longer an issue. For the most part, such advocacy is now limited to Northern Negroes (and some of their supporters), who are removed

CIVIL DISOBEDIENCE SPREADS TO THE NORTH

There is one point on which Negroes and white Southerners are agreed: the Negro is far from being "free and equal" in the North, where integration continues to be more "token" than real. Speaking in Long Beach, L.I., recently, Robert Brookings Gore, Assistant Director of Community Relations for CORE, said: "The same conditions which exist in Mississippi are here in our own backyards, and we must begin to fight them here, by civil disobedience if necessary."

In Long Beach, Negroes have been fighting not only for open occupancy (which the law grants them and custom denies them) but against rent gouging and slum conditions. A series of sit-ins during March, in the offices of slum landlords and in a white-only apartment house, led to 36 arrests within a ten day period. An injunction has been issued to put a halt to such activities but integration leaders indicate that they may feel called upon to defy it.

Meanwhile, in New York City, 6 members of CORE have been found guilty of disorderly conduct for "sitting in" in a real estate office of a landlord who had refused to rent an apartment to a Negro. After the arrest of these 6, 13 additional CORE members repeated the action and were also arrested.

36 persons were arrested in Long Beach, Long Island, in March, for protesting housing conditions like this.

from the realities of the developing struggle in the South and who fail to understand that in the South, unlike the North, the most violent defenders of segregaton are the police. In this situation, armed "self-defense" becomes an illusion. At Midway, one man said: "The white mobs are not nearly so dangerous these days as the police, who would like nothing better than an excuse to wipe out the militant Negroes. In this situation, nonviolence utterly confounds them."

Perplexing questions remain about the uses of violence and nonviolence, but they revolve mainly about the defense of other persons who are being attacked. What does a male picketer do, for example, when he sees a female picketer being beaten? No one professed to have a completely satisfactory answer. At most there was agreement that nonviolence must not be used as an excuse to evade one's moral responsibility, but that to resort to violence in such situations was, in most cases, to fall into a trap. Several persons reported that after their first nonviolent encounters with violence, they lost their initial fears and were then able to intervene more creatively.

Goals of the Movement: Until recently, integrationists feared that "their struggle" might be turned aside or confused in the public mind by the injection of "side" issues. Experience on the front lines has now convinced them that integration cannot be isolated from the economic and social framework in which it takes place. At one time demonstrators were told to take off their nuclear-disarmament buttons. Now they wear them proudly. As one participant expressed it: "When we ask our young people to vote, many of them say, 'Why should we bother, when we're all going to be blown up tomorrow anyway?' Or, 'Negroes can vote in Harlem and Chicago, but what kind of leadership have they produced, and where has it gotten them?'" Another Negro commented: "It's a lot more discouraging to picket for jobs at a factory that is laying off workers because of automation." And, "It doesn't do a lot of good to have the 'right' to eat in a restaurant if you don't have the money to pay for a meal. The key question is no longer, how many restaurants can we integrate, but what kind of society do we want?"

As yet there is no answer to this question—and there probably never will be a single viewpoint. But one thing is clear. The student movement, which in the past has been characterized as the revolt of middle-class kids with money to spend and nowhere to spend it, has come almost full circle. And in the South, the struggle for integration is coming to be seen as inseparable from the struggle for peace, jobs, and civil liberties.

Self-Reliance vs. Government Intervention: Perhaps the most surprising change in direction mirrored at Midway was that revealed by the emphasis on "self-help" economic cooperation. The most militant Negroes have always been suspicious of pleas to wait for the Federal government to help them. Robert Kennedy's plea to call off the Freedom Rides disillusioned many others. At Midway, the theme was: "We have to do the job ourselves." This spirit embraced not only local nonviolent protests, but self-help economic projects. In one community, Negroes are taking all their fat to a church basement and making soap for their own use—soap being a luxury they cannot normally afford. In another town, they are collecting rags and manufacturing rugs; in a third they are cutting up the rags to make clothes. Others are organizing building cooperatives in which the men work together to rebuild their shacks, in rotation.

Projects like these will not solve the long-run problem of remunerative work in an economy whose capital and jobs are controlled by white men. But they reveal a new emphasis on comprehensive cooperation, mutual aid, and self-reliance. Five years ago these same people would have said: "The hell with junk like that, let's get out and fight the white folks." Now they are searching for a variety of practical ways to express their newly found sense of dignity.

A. PHILLIP RANDOLPH CALLS FOR MARCH ON WASHINGTON

For the third time in his career, A. Phillip Randolph has called for a March on Washington. The dates have been tentatively set for June 14th and 15th, and the proposed action has already received the endorsement of the Negro American Labor Council, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, S.N.C.C., CORE and, according to as yet unconfirmed rumor, the N.A.A.C.P.

Earlier Marches were called by Randolph in 1940 and 1945. Both times the mere threat of a mass invasion of Washington by disgruntled Negroes was sufficient to achieve spectacular results, even though the Marches themselves never took place. Organization of the first MOW led to Franklin D. Roosevelt's Fair Employment Practices proclamation and subsequent F.E.P.C. legislation. The second proposed March was called off when President Truman issued an executive order calling for integration in the armed forces.

This time, the Negroes are appealing to all labor to join them in a mass protest against devastating unemployment. The Call points out that "Negroes have been disproportionately victimized," but it goes on to say:

The condition of Negro labor is inseparable from that of white labor. . . . Negroes do not seek to displace white workers, as both are being displaced by machines. Negroes seek, instead, as an integral part of their own struggle as a people, the creation of more jobs for all Americans.

Once again the Call is issued at a time of widespread Negro dissatisfaction—and some apprehension in governmental circles. Unlike Eisenhower, who refused to receive the Negro leaders, Kennedy has succeeded to a certain extent in palliating the established leadership by inviting them to the White House. He hasn't given them anything except the debilitating illusion that, since they can sit down and eat with the ruling class, they are somehow part of it. But the time is long past when the ordinary Negro is satisfied to bask in the reflected glory of his leaders' prestige, while suffering the tangible indignities of unemployment, poverty and daily discrimination. Hence the continual outbreaks of new aggressive actions.

At this stage, the proposed March on Washington presents a fascinating drama in which it is too early to tell whether the leaders of labor and the conservative Negro organizations will lead it in a safe and relatively unprofitable direction (as happened to the Negro Youth Marches in 1958 and 1959), or the impatience of the rank and file will push it into greater militancy.

For the first time, this March has a reservoir of Negroes with a background of organized Civil Disobedience. The conservative leaders must be nervous at the thought of opposing the March—and almost equally nervous at the thought of endorsing it. How can they be sure that aroused and independent members of Detroit's Trade Union Labor Committee or the South's S.N.C.C. will limit themselves to legal lobbying and mass rallies? And what of President Kennedy and the New Frontiersmen? What can they come up with to parallel F.D.R.'s Fair Employment Practices proclamation or Truman's order to abolish segregation in the Armed Forces? Something which will promise the Negroes enough to get them out of Washington, or even keep them from coming there in the first place.

It is just possible that the words of the preliminary Call may be prophetic: The dynamic that has motivated Negroes to withstand with courage and dignity the intimidation and violence they have endured in their own struggle against racism . . . may now be the catalyst which mobilizes all workers behind demands for a broad and fundamental program of economic justice.

BLACK MUSLIMS URGE SUPPORT OF N.A.A.C.P.

In a surprising development, the Black Muslims, at their annual "Saviors Day Convention" in Chicago, called for "all-out support of the programs of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Committee on Racial Equality and other organizations engaged in a sincere struggle for the rights of black people in America." Previously, the Muslims have been scornful of the N.A.A.C.P. and CORE, for their integrated memberships. Significantly, the same issue of Muhammed Speaks (March 18th) which reports this development also carries a favorable account of A. Phillip Randolph's call for a March on Washington. The story is filled with statistics on the disaster of Negro unemployment, which is "more than twice as high as among whites."

In line with the new approach, Muhammad Speaks gives prominent coverage to a speech by Rabbi Kurt Flascher at a recent conference on Negro-Jewish relations. After identifying Flascher as one of 10 rabbis jailed for assisting Negroes in the freedom fight in Albany, Georgia, they quote him as indicating that "in his opinion Muslim leaders are changing some of their ideas, including what he considered the anti-Semitic ones."

The Chicago convention also reversed previous Black Muslim policy by calling for a drive by "so-called Negroes" to "secure adequate political representation . . . for America's more than 20 million black people." "Elect your own candidates," the directive urged.

During the summer of 1963 CORE plans two challenging new programs for the Task Force. One will be a voter registration campaign in several Louisiana parishes. The other will be aimed at mobilizing community action against segregation and ghetto conditions in one of the vast eastern urban slums. These projects will run concurrently from July 14 to August 25. Applications must be received immediately and will be acted on very shortly.

* * * * * TASK FORCE * NORTH

We are in danger of losing the civil rights battle in the North. Integration gains in housing and education are at best token. Fundamental economic racial inequality spreads, and urban centers develop more and more black ghettos. Too often, slum conditions dominate these all-Negro areas. The problem is two-fold: 1) we must attack the discrimination in housing, schools and employment which cause the ghettos, and 2) we must attack the conditions within the ghettos which destroy the will and motivation to participate in an integrated and democratic society.

TASK FORCE * SOUTH * * * * *

Racial discrimination practiced by individuals and firms is destructive and degrading. When this discrimination becomes institutionalized as a part of governmental policy it is even more dangerous. The denial of the right to register and vote is supported and condoned by state and local governments to deprive Negroes the basic rights of democratic government. CORE's voter registration campaigns not only strike at the heart of the denial of political democracy -- these campaigns also give thousands of people the chance to emancipate themselves by their own actions. In rural areas of the deep South voter registration is the most likely way of involving masses of people in a movement to wipe out every kind of racial discrimination.

* * * * *

The Summer Task Force - North and South - will concentrate on stimulating community involvement. Neither of the projects can be done without substantial involvement of local residents. Volunteers on these projects must be dedicated to interracial nonviolent action and must be able to work well with others. Much of the work will involve knocking on doors and motivating people to take the destinies of their communities into their own hands. This is more difficult than sitting-in at a lunch counter.

Those interested in applying should do so immediately. Cost for the projects including room and board will be paid by CORE. Participants will need to supply their own personal pocket money. Participants will also be required to get to the project (probably either New Orleans or New York) at their own expense. CORE hopes to pay your bus fare home. A CHAIRMAN'S COMMENT

There is a wonderful mythical law of nature that the things we crave most in life---happiness, freedom, and peace of mind---are always attained by giving them to somebody else. Freedom, especially, is a blessing to be shared, for the precious fruits of freedom depend upon the inter-action of the thoughts, ideas and ideals of all men free to be their unique selves, to make mistakes, to fail and, with faith, to try again. Freedom is a wide horizon gleaming with promise, the key to an inspiring future or the finest dream or the highest goal, and no man must be deprived of it by another. Give yourself, therefore, a loftier ambition than merely to stand high in the world: stoop down and lift mankind a little higher, allowing each man in himself to give to his age the gift of a constructive and creative life. Infinitely more enduring than skyscrapers, bridges, cathedrals, and other material symbols of man's achievement are the invisible monuments of wisdom, inspiration and example erected in the hearts and minds of men.....

So near is God to man,

National Conference on Religion and Race: A Beginning

As an effort "to impress the entire American people with the urgent necessity of translating into daily practice the noble concepts of human equality" proclaimed by religion, the first National Conference on Religion and Race was convened in Chicago on January 14-17 by Cardinal Meyers, Archbishop of Chicago, Rabbi Julius Mark, President of the Synagogue Council of America, and Dr. J. Irwin Miller, President of the National Council of Churches.

Much has since been written about this task to implement the moral principles handed down to both Jews and Christians for the brotherhood of man: America sums up the majority of reactions when it refers to the Conference as " a turning point in our nation's history" (February 2, 1963); but Time's observation on the Conference is that the "churches have never summoned enough resolution, originality or unity to help the country significantly in dealing with racial discrimination....and in Chicago proved themselves still unable to offer much wisdom" (January 25, 1963).

By and large, the religious institutions of America have really had little initiative in racial change. In the main, it has come from government, from national, community and voluntary organizations, through the direct action movements, and by political, legal and economic pressures. Therefore, whether the weight of united action by religious leadership will make much difference (which Time seems to doubt) is a question which can only be answered in terms of action.

As Father John LaFarge remarked, "This national conference inspired its participants to a definite commitment of conscience.....Furthermore, it adopted plans for continuance, together with a concrete plan of action for specified regions and situations." The future and success of the Conference idea---the hope and the affirmation that God will move through His people to effect a change---thus lies with the delegates to the Conference and the religious bodies they represented. Chicago was just a beginning, a milestone in inter-religious cooperation, a new openness which cut across the lines of separation doctrinally and institutionally.

NFCCS has already begun to make its contribution to this potential of corporate action: a National Youth Conference on Religion and Race, convened by such youth organizations as NF, National Newman Clubs Federation, the United Christian Youth Movement, and the National Student Christian Federation, is currently under serious consideration; a Human Relations Conference sponsored by the North Central regions of NF, NNCF, USNSA and Hillell will be held in Chicago on March 23rd; and the New York-New Jersey region of NF has already held its regional congress in conjunction with the Third Order of Saint Francis at Manhattanville College on February 17th on the theme, "The Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man."

The last-named congress was opened by Rabbi Marc Tanenbaum, National Director of the Department of Interreligious Affairs of the American Jewish Committee, who read the account of the meeting of Moses and Jethro, his dark-skinned father-in-law, from Exodus 18:1, as an illustration of an early encounter between Jew and Gentile, between dark-skinned and light-skinned. Following Rabbi Tanenbaum was author Frank Sheed, who stated that the recognition that other men are our equals is not enough----love is absolutely essential. "The impetus to action," he said, "is precisely that Christ died for us and for all men." The final address of the day was given by Mr. Roy Wilkins, Executive Director of the NAACP, who spoke on "The Outlook for the Sixties." Some of Mr. Wilkins predictions for the future include more integrated housing, increased job opportunities and desegregation of the schools. He indicated a belief that increased voter registration will help to resolve the situation on the local level, and he expressed a hope for an inward look by the Negroes themselves, that they will adhere to standards for standards' sake, and not merely for the sake of competition.

The National Conference on Religion and Race was merely a beginning. As Cardinal Meyers stated, "Our whole future as a nation and as a religious people may be determined by what we do about the race problems in the next few years." When that spirit forthrightly and unitedly confronts the social and moral chaos of the churches and of the nation, Time's doubts will be answered.

WHO GAINS BY THE STRIKES?

The power to strike is one of the privileges allotted to the workingman. The International Typographical Union, Local No.6, has used its power to trigger the 93-day newspaper strike, thus cutting off the eyes, ears and voice of our nation's largest city.

Escaping Federal restriction, the typesetters held firmly to the demands which had initially caused the strike. They not only asked for a higher wage, but a higher salary for the night shift, a 35-hour week, mor vacation time, and sick leave. Their demands and subsequent refusals affected not only the rest of the newspaper industry (a total of 19,000 people), but almost every facet of city life from state legislation to shoe-shining.

Political "trial balloons were grounded", since the first test of popularity is through press editorials, columns, and letters from the readers. As a result, much legislation was swept under the rug. Ralph Camden, a Fifth Ave. bus driver, complained,"My missus and I read the newspapers every day and night, and after all these weeks we haven't gotten us used to being without them. She's lost, doesn't know where to go, what to buy." Dan Maonti, a boot-black in Grand Central, had this to say: "To me it's all shoes. No pay for no shines for me." And what of the group whose only source of income is from selling newspapers? One blind man said with tart humor, "I suppose I could start selling pencils or playing an accordian."

These are just a few examples; others are advertizing and the theatres. And, ironically, the strikers themselves suffer; they can't go job-hunting because they have cut themselves off from the source of classified ads.

In causing such a tie-up, what did the strikers actually gain? Prior to the dispute, typesetters were receiving a basic salary of $141 a week. At opening settlement talks, the publishers offered an increase to $149 a week over a two year period. However, the printers demanded an increase to $160. For the first year, the publishers offered an increase of $4.25 per week; again the printers refused, demanding an increase to $10. Even if the strikers had won their $10 demand, it would take them twenty-five weeks, or almost half a year of work, to make up for every week lost during the strike. That would mean six years before even beginning to benefit from their present victory!

During this 93-day period, the workers were able to draw some income. The 2,900 idled printers received compensation of $70 to $100 each week. However, these and other workers affected by the union dispute were unable to receive N.Y. State unemployment insurance for the first eight weeks. Although many wives worked in place of striking husbands, the Christmas holidays and first-of-the-year expenses found most of the strikers unprepared, and with no sign of relief in the near future. In general, strikers gain from such an action only under very special and ideal conditions. This was not the case in New York.

As we go to press, a settlement has been made. New York will see newspaper stands overflowing once more. Publishers and striking printers on Friday, March 8th, accepted new contract terms suggested by Mayor Robert F. Wagner, bringing in sight the end of the city's $364,000,000 newspaper blackout. Bert Powers, president of the union's New York local, called it a victory, although he is not fully satisfied. Strikers did get the 35-hour week and an increased sick leave (in the second year). The salary increase still falls short of union demands, however, and is almost equal to the offer made by the publishers at the beginning of this harmful strike. Was it worth all this trouble?

The question remains: are these powerful unions justified in benefitting themselves at such a great expense, not only to all those directly involved, but also to the common man who indirectly must suffer as a result?

FOR YOUR INFORMATION

The attached material is a compilation of varied and sundry bits of information, assembled by the Human Relations Special Project Staff Interns of the National Student YWCA, Southern Region -- Miss Mary E. King and Miss Roberta Yancy.

News Notes:

* Harvey Gantt of Charleston, South Carolina, second-year architecture transfer from Iowa State, walked easily into the administration building of Clemson College. Easily, that is, but for the barrage of newsmen who seemed at the moment to be doing more blocking of South Carolina's"progress" than anyone else.

* Token integration is now a reality in four Georgia schools: the University of Georgia, Georgia Institute of Technology, Georgia State College, and Emory University.

* Although a federal ruling acknowledged the right of a private school to remain segregated, Tulane University in New Orleans, Louisiana, admitted 11 Negro students for the spring semester.

* The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, with headquarters at 6 Raymond Street, N.W., Atlanta 14, Georgia, has launched a direct action program in Pine Bluff, Arkansas and is working in protest areas in Alabama. The Nashville Nonviolent Movement continues its attack on segregation in down-town Nashville. Although Albany, Georgia, is no longer in the national spotlight, the SNCC continues to work at registering Negroes in the counties surrounding Albany in the same manner with which they began a year ago. Not long ago, a white SNCC worker was charged with "accosting young Negro girls" after talking with demonstrators wearing T-shirts with the words, "Don't Buy Downtown or Midtown", printed on them.

* The Southern Region of the National Student YWCA will have a Work Conference in Atlanta, June 2-8, centering on urban problems---an encounter with the city. The areas of housing, education and politics will receive emphasis, and the conference will be broken down into small interracial teams which will work and study together.

* Two students from Michigan State University were arrested during Christmas in Clarksdale, Mississippi, on charges of possessing narcotics, when they brought food, clothing and medicine for Negroes being harassed for trying to vote. They were first held under $15,000 bond which was reduced to $1,500; they were freed after 11 days in jail. Three doctors in Louisville, Kentucky, where the shipment originated, are reported as having made sworn statements that there were no narcotics or sedatives, but such supplies as aspirin and vitamins. The goods were intended for the Delta area where many Negroes have lost jobs, been put off the land, or have been unable to receive surplus foods since voter registration drives increased. Sharecroppers average $300-$400 each year, and day laborers receive $150-$160 yearly. At Thanksgiving, 22,000 Negroes in LeFlore County were taken off welfare because of voting drives.

* Voter registration efforts in Mississippi are being conducted by the Mississippi Council of Federated Organizations, directed by Bob Moses of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. Carry on the work of the Michigan students by organizing a collection of food, money and clothing in your area. Ship to Emergency Welfare and Relief Committee, Haven Methodist Church, 400 Yazoo Avenue, Clarksdale, Mississippi.

* Clyde Kennard, a young Negro, left the University of Chicago in 1955 after completing three years, to support his mother and disabled step-father on a small farm in Hattiesburg, Mississippi. In 1958 Kennard applied for admission to Mississippi Southern University. At the request of Governor Coleman he withheld his application until after the approaching elections. In 1959 Kennard reapplied to MSU and was rejected because of undisclosed "deficiencies and irregularities" in his application.

On September 25, 1960, five sacks of chicken feed, valued at $5.00 each, were taken from the Forrest County Cooperative Warehouse. A 19-year old illiterate Negro confessed to the theft. As a state's witness, the youth testified that Kennard had initiated and planned the burglary. He received a five-year probation sentence; Kennard was sentenced to seven years in Parchman Penitentiary. Kennard has served two years of his sentence.

It has recently been disclosed that Clyde Kennard is dying of cancer. The University Hospital gives the 34 year old veteran a one in five chance of living another 5 years. Last week Ross Barnett suspended Kennard's sentence indefinitely since he had been such a good prisoner and was near death. And now the nation recognizes the case of Clyde Kennard, although the Justice Department never did.

* We hear that the "Atlanta Wall" has shocked the nation. We ask why? The fact is that many such walls exist in every Northern city. There is nothing new about this one except that as former Atlanta Mayor William B. Hartsfield said in criticizing the current mayor, Ivan Allen, "He shouldn't make a mistake that can be photographed."

* In Atlanta, a Negro, Leroy Johnson, was elected to the State Senate for the first time in 50 years (Democratic ticket). Negroes were elected for the first time to statewide office in Massachusetts (Republican) and Connecticut (Democrat). A Los Angeles Negro was the first of his race to win a House seat west of the Mississippi.

* Dr. Donald Matthews, a University of North Carolina political science professor, has recently completed a study of racial attitudes in 11 Southern states. By scientific sampling of 694 whites and 618 Negroes, the study showed that only 22% of the whites realized that Negroes really wanted desegregation, while a startling 53% of the Negroes did not believe the majority of Southern whites favored strict segregation. "Contrary to popular opinion," Dr. Matthews said, "the Negro down here isn't very happy." His findings will be published in 1964.

NORTHERN STUDENT MOVEMENT

Representatives from more than sixty campus groups in the Northeast, extending from Lewiston, Maine to Ann Arbor, Michigan, attended a planning conference at Yale University in October to make decisions on program priorities for the coming year. The conference, while dealing with all campus and community discrimination problems, centered on three areas: educational projects, fund-raising for student voter registration projects in the South, and campaigns to end discriminatory hiring policies by Northern employers. Speakers included Peter Countryman, Carl Anthony and Cliff Henry of the NSM staff, and Timothy Jenkins, Charles Sherrod, Ralph Allen, and Cathy Conwell, field secretaries for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. Representatives from each of nine areas met during the conference to elect a representative to the Executive Committee which was to become the decision-making body for NSM during the year.

As of the first of January, approximately 1800 college students were tutoring 2500 high school students throughout the East in NSM projects. A number of groups have indicated that tutorials are in preparation for the second term. Moreover, the concept of tutorial has spread since the summer to other parts of the country: the University of Michigan, several schools in Chicago, Reed and several schools in the Far West.

An experimental program in College Recruitment was set up and run during the Christmas vacation. One hundred students from twelve colleges participated in this project. They attempted to establish close personal relationships with small groups of Negro high school students, providing these students with information on what it means to go to college, how to apply, etc.

MIGRANT WORKERS AND PUBLIC LAW 78

In a statement prepared for floor deliver in the U.S. Senate, Senator Harrison A. Williams, in appraising the prospects for legislative improvements for migratory farm citizens and their families in the 88th Congress, said: "It's often asserted that a prosperous society tends to forget its poor and that Congress will not concern itself with a group lacking a political voice, especially the migrant citizen whose very mobility costs him his vote. This myth has been exploded.

People from all walks of life---farm and city folk alike---have expressed their concern for the migrant citizen and his family. The Congress has responded, and its work is having an effect. A first firm step has been taken. We must take many steps more, however, if social justice is to become a reality for the many millions who go through life with the burdens of second class citizenship. I am optimistic, however, that this Congress will make a major contribution toward the eventual alleviation of the over-all migratory labor problem."

Public Law 78: How It Works:

Each year several hundred thousand Mexican farm workers are brought into the U.S. under contract to meet an ostensible shortage of domestic farm labor. About the same number of American farm workers leave their homes annually in search of work, many of them coming from the very areas where the majority of Mexican workers, or braceros, are employed.

The Mexican importation program (Public Law 78) takes advantage of extreme poverty and unemployment in Mexico to supply low-cost labor for a comparatively few American farms. In doing so, it increases poverty and unemployment among domestic farm workers for it creates a surplus of farm labor which depresses farm wages. Those farm employers who hire braceros do not have to offer attractive wages and conditions to find workers and they can silence any complaints from imported workers by sending them back to Mexico.

Domestic farm workers in these areas have the choice of staying home and accepting wages geared to the braceros' poverty or of joining the migrant stream to seek work in areas where imported workers are not employed and where farm wages are significantly higher.

Over two million Americans work for wages on farms. Their average annual farm income in 1959 was $829, plus $209 for nonfarm work. The average farm worker in 1959 found only 138 days of farm employment. Farm workers are denied unemployment insurance, minimum wage coverage, protection of the right to bargain. Unprotected, underpaid, underemployed as they are, U.S. farm workers must compete for jobs with Mexican contract workers in many areas.

Write to your congressmen now and ask them to abolish Public Law 78!

A future mailing to Senior Delegates will acquaint your campus with the Report to the President made by the special Study group set up by the Justice Department.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner's Committee in Job Advancement

Have you a committee like this in your Community?

The Mayor's Committee on Job Advancement was established in New York City last year as a community-wide effort seeking to open jobs in executive, administrative, professional and skilled classifications to New York City Negroes, Puerto Ricans and other minority workers. Since its formation, the Committee has undertaken a massive program to improve the educational facilities, upgrade the skills, and open up more and better jobs for citizens of minority groups.

Through its deliberations, the Committee concluded that one of the major problems impeding progress in this area was actually a problem of nation-wide scope and concern. This problem evolves around the image of America as portrayed in advertisements, television, mass circulation magazines and other media. The image as presently portrayed is a distorted one -- an image which excludes Negroes, Latin Americans and other identifiable minority groups.

This situation is an impediment to job advancement as well as to better race relations. It is quite evident and understandable, for example, that a Negro who never sees himself portrayed as a member of the "American Community" will lose the incentive to become an active and leading member of that community.

Concurrent with the lack of motivation in minority groups caused by present advertising practices, companies themselves, though possible not guilty of overt discrimination, do not accept members of minority groups as potential high-level employees. A never-ending circle of bad race relations, lack of ambition, and poor job opportunities is thus perpetuated.

Our Committee can study the problem, investigate advertising practices and attempt to convince the larger companies and agencies that the situation must be corrected. But, in the final analysis, success will be due to community-wide -- nation-wide --support. Companies and agencies will review and change their practices only if they realize that the public desires and supports such a change.

In short, this is a program where success almost completely depends on public awareness and support -- support which we can exhibit in our consultations and which, in itself, will contribute to progress, not only in the area of advertising practices, but in the entire complex of job advancement and human relations.

"Father Edgar Kurt, college chaplain and NFCCS moderator for the Iowa region, served as co-chairman with Rabbi Isaac Neumann on the Committee for Brotherhood Week in Cedar Rapids."

OUR LADY OF THE LAKE COLLEGE, San Antonio -

"Coloring Book: The idea seemed to have such good possibilities that, instead of using it as an editorial in our campus newspaper, as suggested, the Secretariat actually made copies of the coloring book. Copies were placed at several strategic spots on campus....

"Resolution: The resolution included in the Interracial Justice Week Kit was re-typed, run off, and distributed to the student body at the Student Union assembly, on February, 18, 1963 (this resolution pertains to illiteracy test for voters).

"Musical Presentation: The choirs of Temple Beth-El, Alamo Heights Methodist Church, St. Luke's Catholic Church, St. Mary's University, and Our Lady of the Lake College joined voices in a "Fellowship Concert" to promote better relations between the various faiths."

"We have prepared a symposium on the "Negro in American Culture", to be presented next week (week of March 3rd) by our four social science clubs. The History Club will give a brief survey of Negroes in the American historical tradition. This will be followed by talks from the Economic, Government and Sociology Clubs on specific areas of the Negro problems, especially in the North.

"Congratulations on your excellent work! The article you reprinted from Interracial Review was sent to us in the fall from our Regional officers and was very helpful in arousing discussion groups."

SAINT MARY-OF-WOODS COLLEGE, Indiana -

"We are making use of the material for bulletin boards and student reading."

RIVIER COLLEGE, Nashua, New Hampshire -

"At a Student Assembly, several members of the International Relations Club, at the request of the Student Council, presented a short programme on voting discrimination.

"The editorial contained in the kit mentioned an Interracial Justice Week coloring book. The coloring book was drawn on large poster paper and was placed on the main bulletin board which students must check daily."

MERCYHURST COLLEGE, Erie, Pa. -

"A display of the materials contained in the kit was put outside of the cafeteria. Included in this display were books such as Peaceable Lane, On Being Negro in America, Black Like Me, A Dove Flies South, and others. The purpose of the display was to make materials and books known and available to the student body.

"Previous to this Interracial Justice Week, Mercyhurst students wore armbands during the violent action in Mississippi.....Last year, SNCC buttons (from Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee) were sold on campus and Mercyhurst joined other colleges in supporting this movement. We are now planning a home visit program."

"Manhattanville's Interracial Justice Week, began with Mass and a Race and Religion Seminar on Sunday, continued Tuesday evening (February 19, 1963) with a program of Negro spirituals, beautifully and artistically done by a Negro religious. On Thursday evening (February 21) we were honored with a concert by Allen Brown, a talented young Negro pianist (who will also appear at Town Hall on March 24, 1963).

"On campus, "work week" was officially proclaimed; Manhattanville students performed services for other students (typing, ironing, cleaning rooms, etc.) and money earned in this manner was turned over to the Father LaFarge Scholarship Fund for Negro students. In addition, we set up a display on the contributions of Negroes in American history. Our campus newspaper devoted several columns to complete coverage of all events."

PRESIDENT KENNEDY URGED TO CALL WHITE HOUSE PARLEY 'TO MOBILIZE NATION IN SUPPORT OF EQUALITY'

- - - - -

'Truce in Birmingham Will Not End Demands for Racial Equality,' Dr. Prinz of American Jewish Congress Writes President

NEW YORK, May 10 -- The American Jewish Congress called on President Kennedy today to summon a White House conference of religious, educational and social welfare leaders "to mobilize the nation in support of the great principle of equality."

Dr. Joachim Prinz, president of the American Jewish Congress, proposed in a letter to President Kennedy that such a conference be called for Independence Day, July 4.

Out of this conference, Dr. Prinz declared, "should come a Proclamation of Equality in which the full authority and prestige of your office would be placed in support of the great national task before us: to make real for millions of Americans the promise of equality first uttered in our Declaration of Independence."

The American Jewish Congress leader said the Kennedy Administration's role in arranging peace talks in Birmingham between white and Negro representatives there has been a "laudable" one.

"But the struggle in that Alabama city," he said, "is only a symptom of the continued denial of constitutional rights to the Negroes of the South, and of the Negro community's determination to secure these rights now." He continued:

"There will, hopefully, be peace in Birmingham soon. But a truce in Birmingham will not end demands for racial equality in America. It is to this over-all problem that we urge you to address yourself now."

Dr. Prinz, a rabbi and spiritual leader of Temple B'nai Abraham in Newark, N.J., urged the President "to address the nation and make clear for every American and all the world to understand that you stand firmly with those citizens seeking the simple justice and equality that has too long been denied them.

"Such a statement," he continued, "would articulate the sense of moral outrage that the overwhelming majority of Americans feel toward those at the head of state and local governments who continue to defy the Constitution and the mandates of our courts.

"It would, at the same time, serve notice that the South's last desperate stand for segregation is doomed to failure because the American people will no longer permit the basic rights and freedoms to which every citizen is entitled to be trampled under the heels of bigotry."

Dr. Prinz concluded his message to the President:

"This is a great moment in the history of our nation, and in the never-ending struggle for human dignity. Let it not be said that at this moment our leaders were unequal to it, or that the conscience of America was silent in the face of it.

"The times call for moral courage and moral leadership. Your effort to provide that leadership and to mobilize the nation in support of the great principle of equality will command the support of the overwhelming majority of Americans."

INFORMATION SHEET

Greensboro, North Carolina

May 19, 1963

Over 700 students have been incarcerated in a county farm and an abandoned polio hospital for seeking service at resturants and entrance into theatres in Greensboro, N. C., on May 17 and 18. We firmly believe that present conditions are extremely dangerous to their health and safety. Some have been hospitalized as a result of inadequate provisions and treatment.

A few observations in regard to the Above:

1. A committee headed by the lawyer representing the students, Atty. Major High, and composed of Fr. Richard Hicks, Dr. Glenn Rankin, Dr. Louis Dowdy, Dr. J. A. Tarpley, Dr. W. L. T. Miller, DDS, Dr. George Evans, MD, Dr. A. V. Bount, Jr., MD, was not permitted to investigate the conditions of the youths.

2. The over-whelming majority has not been provided with beds. This was confirmed by officals.

3. In a room approximately 50' by 30' there are seven beds and 75 students. Most have been without beds for two nights.

4. On Sunday, May 19, we were not permitted to deliver food and what they were provided with is inadequate.

5. Even parents have not been allowed to visit their sons and daughters even though promises had been made that they could do so.

6. The Mayor has left town and cannot be reached.

News from Fayette Co. Workcamps Project
c/o Virgie Hortenstine
5541 Hanley Road
Cincinnati 39, Ohio May 25, 1963

Through the efforts of thirty-four workcampers from thirteen colleges working with local Negro citizens, a community center is well under way in Fayette County, Tennessee. A baseball park where Negro teams can play has been completed in neighboring Haywood County. In both these counties the problem of unemployment is rapidly increasing as the result of mechanization of the farms following the voter registration drive which began three years ago and resulted in 700 Negro sharecropper families receiving eviction notices.

The community center is being built by the Original Fayette County Civic and Welfare League, they look after the welfare of registered Negroes and put up the Tent City three years ago for evicted Negroes. The building will provide a meeting place for the League and space for doctor's and dentist's office for people boycotted from medical services, adult education classes, recreation, and a kindergarten.

Both counties Civic and welfare Leagues recognized that the recent reprisals, such as evictions, boycotts against the purchase of food, gasoline, crop loans, etc., false arrests and jailings, and even more the current "silent" evictions on grounds of mechanization, were allowed to take place because of efforts to prevent publicity. So they invited students to come and live with them and see for themselves. These students bring firsthand reports back to their colleges.

The students have found that this year, after the Federal Civil Rights case against 160 white citizens in both counties was settled out of court, evictions are continuing by the hundreds of families. These evictions arenot of the spectacular nature of the out-and-out evictions of two years ago. The tenant is simply told he may remain in the house but he will have no land to farm. Registering to vote is carefully kept out of the conversation. Later the rent is raised on the house. The exsharecropper often is not even aware that he is on his way out.

Workcampers in Haywood County interviewed a government official, who told them that 8000 people, mainly Negroes, have been put out of work since the evictions began three years ago. The entire population of Haywood County, including children, is 23,393. The official also stated that there were 17 cotton pickers in Haywood County 3 years ago, 178 today. Cotton farmers have begun to use pre-emergent spray on the cotton fields to prevent the weeds from growing, thus eliminating the need for cotton chopping by hand, the principle occupation of Negroes there during early summer.

Workcampers represented colleges from Massachusettes to Colorado: Smith College, Mass.; Sarah Lawrence College, N.Y.; Haverford College, Pa.; Swarthmore College, Pa.; Oberlin College, Ohio; ooster College, Ohio; Western College, Ohio; Colorado State Teachers College, Florence State College, Alabama and University's of--Michigan; Chicago; Illinois; and Southern Illinois. They lived in the homes of local Negroes, where white people have not visited socially before.

Workcampers are coordinated through the Fayette County Workcamps Project, sponsored by: Baptist Ministers Conference of Cincinnati, Race Relations Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends (Quakers), Cincinnati Chapter of Operation Freedom, International Voluntary Service and Miami (Ohio) Quarterly Meeting of Friends. Other workcamps will be held periodically in the summer.

Work was brought to a halt on the Fayette County Community Center because the workers ran out of funds for building materials. The cente now stands ceiling high, and $2000 is needed for materials to take it to the completion of the roof. Funds are being collected by Fayette County Workcamps Project, c/o Virgie Hortenstine, 5541 Hanley Road, Cincinnati 39, Ohio.

Dear Friend:

A dangerous attempt to change the basic constitutional structure of the United States has been undertaken by a group of state legislators. This attempt received tremendous support, with one or more of the three amendments in the package quietly adopted by state legislatures in 20 states.

Fortunately, these amendments have now been brought into the open light of day. Chief Justice Earl Warren, President Kennedy, the American Jewish Committee, the AFL-CIO and the American Civil Liberties Union have attacked all three amendments. The American Bar Association last week came out in opposition to two of the three states' rights amendments being pushed by conservative groups. The two amendments would: a) permit state legislatures alone to amend the Constitution without recourse to or approval by Congress or a national convention; and the other would b) create a "Court of the Union," composed of all chief justices of the fifty states, to review decisions of the Supreme Court. The Bar Association will consider the third amendment, which would eliminate constitutional restrictions of the apportionment of seats in the state legislatures, at its annual meeting in Chicago next August.

As a result of the public spotlight, the New Jersey Senate recalled two amendments it had supported and in Ohio, where the proposals were expected to pass easily, the amendments are facing tough sledding.

Enclosed, for your information, is a copy of the statement adopted by the American Jewish Committee on the states' rights amendments.

Sincerely yours,

Harry Fleischman

THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE

56TH ANNUAL MEETING

May 16-19, 1963

STATEMENT ON STATES' RIGHTS AMENDMENTS

The attempt of a number of state legislatures quietly to endorse three proposed constitutional amendments in the name of "states' rights" must be exposed to the light of publicity. With virtually no national attention, a dozen or more legislatures have approved dangerous proposals to destroy our system of checks and balances, to weaken our national government, and transform it into a confederacy.

One proposal would change the process of amending the United States Constitution to eliminate the historic role of Congress. It would provide that an amendment must be submitted to the states for ratification if identical language is approved by the legislatures of two-thirds of the states. Because of the malapportionment now tolerated by many state legislatures, this would permit legislators representing as few as 15 per cent of our nation's population to amend the Constitution for all of us. Currently, constitutional amendments must be proposed either by a two-thirds vote of both houses of Congress or by a national convention called by Congress at the request of two-thirds of the states. Then final adoption of an amendment requires ratification by three-fourths of the states.

The second resolution would set up a Court of the Union, composed of the 50 state chief justices (mostly elected and lacking the independence of life tenure), with power to overrule

U. S. Supreme Court decisions in all cases affecting federal-state relations. It would destroy the power of the Supreme Court in almost all controversial areas involving states' rights -- including desegregation of public schools, prayer in public schools and state criminal procedures. It would be a long step backward to an impotent confederacy.

A third proposal would oust the Supreme Court from jurisdiction over state reapportionment cases. It would, for example, permit Southern legislatures to disfranchise Negroes by gerrymandering and other devices, and it would permit rural voters to hold a disproportionate share of power in elections.

The American Jewish Committee opposes these three proposals and calls upon its members and other citizens, bar associations, civic groups, religious bodies and the mass media to join in an effort to inform the nation about these proposals and to urge state legislatures to defeat them.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL EDUCATION BOARD
130 SIXTH STREET, N. W.
ATLANTA 13, GEORGIA
TR 5-9211

FROM: RUDOLPH PATE

FOR RELEASE SUNDAY A.M., JUNE 2, 1963

ATLANTA, GA., May 31.---The Southern Regional Education Board (SREB) has been awarded a contract of $159,351 by the U. S. Office of Education to establish a regional administrative and consultative office to assist the states in the South to develop and use recorded instructional material for educational television.

In making the announcement today (Saturday, May 31), Dr. Winfred L. Godwin, director of the SREB, said the contract was awarded to the Board under the provisions of Title VII, National Defense Education Act, and will enable the SREB to assist seven sub-regional "clusters" of states in the South with the mutual production and utilization of educational TV materials.

Dr. Godwin hailed the development as a means through which the South's colleges and universities can "share and exchange distinguished teaching and high quality instructional materials" in a broadly-based program of interstate cooperation.

Each "cluster" of states grouped together under the new program will involve two to four states, their educational TV stations, university-based closed-circuit systems, and the major universities where film and videotape facilities and personnel exist.

Dr. Godwin also announced the appointment of Duff Browne of Austin, Texas, associate director of radio and television at the University of Texas, as the project director. Browne will assume his duties on June 3.

The SREB director said Browne and the Board's new TV project will offer assistance to the Southern states through three major activities:

√ SREB was established in 1949 under interstate compact, now ratified by the legislatures of Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia.

√ SREB aids in the social and economic advancement of the South by assisting states to improve the quality of higher education . . . provide the widest opportunity possible in higher education . . . build educational programs which meet the social and economic needs of the region

√ SREB is devoted to helping Southern colleges build high quality research and educational programs . . . by providing regional support and utilization of advanced programs . . . and avoiding unnecesssary duplication of facilities among the compact states.

1. Helping the state clusters to develop their own vital patterns of inter-institutional cooperation in the planning, production, use and revision of ETV recorded materials.

2. Helping disciplines within the colleges and universities to plan, produce, use and revise recorded materials of unquestioned excellence which they will identify as critically needed and which they will use extensively in all or most of the seven sub-regional clusters of states.

3. Gathering information about the status and use of new instructional media.

In explaining further details of the project, Dr. William L. Bowden, associate director for regional programs of the SREB, envisioned greatly expanded use of educational TV in the Southern states during this decade. He added:

"The picture of television development in the South, as in the nation, is one of robust growth..."

A year ago, there were 63 educational television stations on the air in the nation, with 23 stations located in the South. Today there are 78 ETV stations in the nation, and 28 of these are in the South.

Among the 28 stations in the region there are eight university owned, eight operated by non-profit community organizations, nine operated by state-wide departments of education or area school systems, and three operated by autonomous state-wide ETV authorities.

In addition, an estimated 75 higher institutions in 15 states use closed-circuit television. The facilities range from modest installations to the massive state-wide cable network in South Carolina leased from the telephone company and to the 11-campus closed-circuit microwave network in central Texas.

Within this decade, Dr. Bowden predicted that approximately 100 open-circuit broadcast stations will be on the air in the Southern region, and the number likely will be larger. In addition, he said "large concurrent growth" of campus and urban school system closed-circuit TV facilities will occur. He added:

"Because of the sizable investments of time and money represented in the production of televised college courses and supporting programs, cooperative arrangements will proliferate between institutions to plan, produce and use televised instruction together. The use of film and videotape for recording, storing and revising courses will be widespread, with or without microwave or other types of interconnections between facilities..."

During 1963-64, the SREB project proposes to bring together inter-institutional groups representing several university disciplines from the several sub-regional "clusters" in the 16 states served by SREB. These groups will plan and carry out cooperative projects to develop instructional materials designed to achieve improvement of instruction through educational television.

Duff Browne, the newly-appointed project director, has a wide range of experience and training in educational television and broadcasting.

Prior to assuming his present position at the University of Texas in 1962, Browne held a number of posts with broad responsibility in the radio and television field.

He was television production supervisor, General Electric Company, Television Station WRGB, Schenectady, N. Y., 1946-50; assistant professor of radio and television and television director, University of Miami, 1950-51, and was a television consultant specializing in the preparation of applications for Television Broadcast Licenses, including the preparation of management and program exhibits required by the Federal Communications Commission, 1951-54.

In addition, he was director of television, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, 1954-56; general manager, Education Television Station WYES-TV, New Orleans, La., 1956-61; and consultant-representative in Washington, D. C., for the National Education Television and Radio Center, New York, N. Y., and special projects development, National Association of Educational Broadcasters, Washington, D. C., 1961-62.

In his new work, Browne will seek to develop regional cooperation in the mutual production and utilization of recorded materials for the South's expanding network of educational TV stations through close association and work with university administrators, faculty members, educational TV personnel, university governing boards, and state legislative committees. He will operate from the SREB office in Atlanta.

'GRADUALISM' HELD A FAILURE IN ACHIEVING RACIAL EQUALITY; BOLD LEADERSHIP BY JFK URGED

American Jewish Congress Urges Strong Action by President to Close 'Civil Rights Gap' -- 8-Point Legislative Program Proposed

NEW YORK, June 9 -- The American Jewish Congress charged today that gradualism as a means of achieving racial equality had proved "a folly and a failure."

The Jewish group called on President Kennedy to move "boldly" in meeting what it called "the crucial domestic issue of our time -- closing the civil rights gap between what the Constitution promises and the way millions of Americans live."

In a statement adopted at a meeting of its national Governing Council today in Stephen Wise Congress House, 15 East 84 St., the Congress' policy-making body declared:

"For ninety years after the Emancipation Proclamation, it was assumed that the principles of emancipation could be put into effect only in part. In 1954, that assumption was rejected by the Supreme Court, which ruled that the Constitution demanded nothing less than complete equality.

"Since 1954, another assumption has been made -- that equality could be approached slowly, gently, with 'deliberate speed' and above all without disturbing anyone too much.

"Events of the last few years have revealed the failure and the folly of that assumption. Events of the last few months compel its abandonment."

The American Jewish Congress statement continued:

"We now know that 'deliberate speed' means no movement at all.

"We know that token integration means continuing segregation.

"We know that gradualism means sacrificing the constitutional rights and the potential for human development of a whole generation of American Negroes.

"Perhaps most important of all, we know that the generation which was to be sacrificed is not in a sacrificial mood. These citizens want equality now; and they are ready to fight for it."

Moderates Held Ready for Strong Leadership

The American Jewish Congress statement said that recent events in the South had shown "there is a large group of law-abiding white Southerners, moderate in their approach to race relations but long silent on the issue, who are now willing to respond to strong national leadership aimed at granting every American his right to equality.

"That leadership is the responsibility of the President. We respectfully urge him to abandon past policies of caution that have proved too little and too late to meet the rising demands for racial equality now.

"The role of the President is not merely to mediate or to negotiate between opposing white and Negro forces. It is, rather, to stand up with the Negroes of the North and South in their demand for equal rights, and to exercise every ounce of leadership and influence of which he is capable in winning support for a comprehensive civil rights program that will assure every citizen in every part of our country equal opportunity and equal justice."

8-Point Legislative Program Proposed

The statement contained an eight-point "basic legislative program" which it urged President Kennedy to include in submitting his civil rights message to Congress this week. The Jewish group called for enactment of measures that would:

1) Give the Department of Justice power to institute court actic to enjoin any denial of equal protection of the laws as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment.

2) Require all public school districts still maintaining racial segregation -- including those that have achieved only token integration -- to prepare and promptly implement plans for full integration at the beginning of the next school year.

3) Provide Federal financial assistance, technical aid and advice to school districts that need such help in integrating their schools.

4) Prohibit discrimination based on race, religion or national origin in all places of public accommodation that affect interstate commerce or are licensed by state or local officials.

5) Establish a Federal Fair Employment Practices Commission along the lines of state anti-discrimination commissions that have operated successfully since 1945.

6) Effectively protect the right to vote, including a provision making a sixth grade education conclusive proof of literacy.

7) Require all present and future legislation providing for Federal benefits to include effective provisions prohibiting discrimination in the distribution of such benefits.

8) Make the Civil Rights Commission a permanent body and give it authority to investigate not only denial of voting rights but every aspect of racial or religious discrimination.

Shad Polier, Chairman of the Governing Council, presided at the meeting, which was attended by leaders of the American Jewish Congress from all sections of the country.

Theodore Bikel, actor and folksinger who is a member of the Council, gave a first-hand report on Negro demonstrations in Albany, Ga. and Birmingham, Ala. in which he had participated.

Seth Glickenhaus, a Council member who serves on the New Rochelle Board of Education, reported on plans to end "de facto" school segregation in that city.

NEW YORK -- Mrs. Martin Luther King, Jr., said this week she was "deeply encouraged" by progress in race relations "all over the South and throughout the nation."

The wife of the Southern integrationist leader spoke here in accepting the first Louise Waterman Wise Award presented by the national women's division of the American Jewish Congress.

"The Negro in America has long since earned his right to sit at the Freedom Table and enjoy the fruits of equality and human dignity," Mrs. King said. "We are not asking for any special concessions, but simply for all the rights and privileges all Americans are entitled to.

Mrs. King flew to New York from her home in Atlanta, Ga., to accept the award from New York State Family Court JudgeJustine Wise Polier, honorary president of the American Jewish Congress women's division and daughter of the late Louise Waterman Wise, founder and first president of the organization.

Mrs. King told the Jewish women's group:

"You, too, have a heritage of bondage, and just as you were delivered from the Pharoahs of ancient Egypt, so will we be delivered from the modern PHaroahs of the Southland in the persons of a Governor Wallace of Alabama and a Gov. Barnett of Mississippi."

Other award recipients were:

Mrs. Itzhak Ben-Zvi, widow of the late President of Israel -- "for service to Israel and Jewish life."

Mrs. Gertrude Berg -- "for service to the arts."

Mrs. Will Korn -- "for service to the community."

The awards were established to honor the memory of Mrs. Wise, "by giving recognition to women liviing today who have made outstanding contributions to the advancement of the causes and concerns with which Mrs. Wise was identified."

The text of the citation to Mrs. King reads:

"Countless American women join in this tribute to your strength of character and purpose in the cause of universal human freedom and world peace. We express as well our appreciation of the dedicated men and women of all races and religions who lead the continuing struggle for full equality in a free society for all Americans."

Letter from Birmingham Jail

Intergroup Org. Mus.

A vigorous, eloquent reply to criticism expressed by a group of eight clergymen.

MY DEAR FELLOW CLERGYMEN:

✦ WHILE CONFINED here in the Birmingham city jail I came across your recent statement calling my present activities "unwise and untimely." Seldom do I pause to answer criticism of my work and ideas. If I sought to answer all the criticisms that cross my desk, my secretaries would have little time for anything other than such correspondence in the course of the day, and I would have no time for constructive work. But since I feel that you are men of genuine good will and that your criticisms are sincerely set forth, I want to try to answer your statement in what I hope will be patient and reasonable terms.

I think I should indicate why I am here in Birmingham, since you have been influenced by the view which argues against "outsiders coming in." I have the honor of serving as president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, an organization operating in every southern state, with headquarters in Atlanta, Georgia. We have some 85 affiliate organizations across the south, and one of them is the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights. Frequently we share staff, educational and financial resources with our affiliates. Several months ago the affiliate here in Birmingham asked us to be on call to engage in a nonviolent direct action program if such were deemed necessary. We readily consented, and when the hour came we lived up to our promise. So I, along with several members of my staff, am here because I was invited here. I am here because I have organizational ties here.

I

But more basically, I am in Birmingham because injustice exists here. Just as the prophets of the eighth century B.C. left their villages and carried their "thus saith the Lord" far afield and just as the Apostle Paul left his village of Tarsus and carried the gospel of Jesus Christ to the far corners of the Greco-Roman world, so am I compelled to carry the gospel of freedom beyond my own home town. Like Paul, I must constantly respond to the Macedonian call for aid.

Moreover, I am cognizant of the interrelatedness of all communities and states. I cannot sit idly by in Atlanta and not be concerned about what happens in Birmingham. Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere. We are caught in an inescapable network of mutuality, tied in a single garment of destiny. Whatever affects one directly affects all indirectly. Never again can we afford to live with the narrow, provincial "outside agitator" idea. Anyone who lives inside the United States can never be considered an outsider anywhere within its bounds.

You deplore the demonstrations taking place in Birmingham. But your statement, I am sorry to say, fails to express a similar concern for the conditions that brought about the demonstrations. I am sure that none of you would want to rest content with the superficial kind of social analysis that deals merely with effects and does not grapple with underlying causes. It is unfortunate that demonstrations are taking place in Birmingham, but it is even more unfortunate that the city's white power structure left the Negro community with no alternative.

II

In any nonviolent campaign there are four basic steps: collection of the facts to determine whether injustices exist, negotiation, self-purification and direct action. We have gone through all these steps in Birmingham. There can be no gainsaying the fact that racial injustice engulfs this community. Birmingham is probably the most thoroughly segregated city in the United States. Its ugly record of police brutality is widely known. Its unjust treatment of Negroes in the courts is a notorious reality. There have been more unsolved bombings of Negro homes and churches in Birmingham than in any other city in the nation. These are the hard, brutal facts of the case. On the basis of these conditions Negro leaders sought to negotiate with the city fathers. But the latter consistently refused to engage in good-faith negotiation.

Then last September came the opportunity to talk with leaders of Birmingham's economic community. In the course of the negotiations certain promises were made by the merchants—for example, the promise to remove the stores' humiliating racial signs. On the basis of these promises the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth and the leaders of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights agreed to a moratorium on all demonstrations. As the weeks and months went by we realized that we were the victims of a broken promise. The signs remained.

As in so many past experiences, our hopes had been blasted, and our disappointment was keenly felt. We had no alternative except to prepare for direct action, whereby we would present our very bodies as a means of laying our case before the conscience of the local and the national community. Mindful of the difficulties involved, we decided to undertake a process of self-purification. We began a series of workshops on nonviolence, and we repeatedly asked ourselves: "Are you able to accept blows without retaliating?" "Are you able to endure the ordeal of jail?" We decided to schedule our direct action program for the Easter season, realizing that except for Christmas this is the main shopping period of the year. Knowing that a strong economic withdrawal program would be the by-product of direct action, we felt that this would be the best time to bring pressure to bear on the merchants.

But Birmingham's mayoral election was coming up in March, and when we discovered that Commissioner of Public Safety Eugene "Bull" Connor was to be in the run-off, we decided to postpone our demonstrations until the day after the run-off so that they could not be used to cloud the issues. It is evident, then, that we did not move irresponsibly into direct action. Like many others, we wanted to see Mr. Connor defeated, and to this end we endured postponement after postponement. Having aided in this community need, we felt that our direct action program could be delayed no longer.

III

You may well ask, "Why direct action? Why sit-ins, marches, etc.? Isn't negotiation a better path?" You are quite right in calling for negotiation. Indeed, this is the very purpose of direct action. Nonviolent direct action seeks to foster such a tension that a community which has constantly refused to negotiate is forced to confront the issue. It seeks so to dramatize the issue that it can no longer be ignored. My citing the creation of tension as part of the work of the nonviolent resister may sound rather shocking. But I readily acknowledge that I am not afraid of the word "tension." I have earnestly opposed violent tension, but there is a type of constructive, nonviolent tension which is necessary for growth. Just as Socrates felt that it was necessary to create a tension in the mind so that individuals could shake off the bondage of myths and half-truths and rise to the realm of creative analysis and objective appraisal, so must we see the need for nonviolent gadflies to create the kind of tension in society that will help men rise from the dark depths of prejudice and racism to the majestic heights of understanding and brotherhood.

The purpose of our direct action program is to create a situation so crisis-packed that it will inevitably open the door to negotiation. I therefore concur with you in your call for negotiation. Too long has our beloved southland been bogged down in a tragic effort to live in monologue rather than dialogue.

One of the basic points in your statement is that the action that I and my associates have taken in Birmingham is untimely. Some have asked, "Why didn't you give the new city administration time to act?" The only answer that I can give to this query is that the new Birmingham administration must be prodded about as much as the outgoing one before it will act. We are sadly mistaken if we feel that the election of Albert Boutwell as mayor will bring the millenium to Birmingham. While Mr. Boutwell is a much more gentle person than Mr. Connor, they are both segregationists, dedicated to maintenance of the status quo. I have hope that Mr. Boutwell will be reasonable enough to see the futility of massive resistance to desegregation. But he will not see this without pressure from devotees of civil rights. My friends, I must say to you that we have not made a single gain in civil rights without determined legal and nonviolent pressure. Lamentably, it is a historical fact that privileged groups seldom give up their privileges voluntarily. Individuals may see the moral light and voluntarily give up their unjust posture; but, as Reinhold Niebuhr has reminded us, groups tend to be more immoral than individuals.

We know through painful experience that freedom is never voluntarily given by the oppressor; it must be demanded by the oppressed. Frankly, I have yet to engage in a direct action campaign that was "well timed" in the view of those who have not suffered unduly from the disease of segregation. For years now I have heard the word "Wait!" It rings in the ear of every Negro with piercing familiarity. This "Wait" has almost always meant "Never." As one of our distinguished jurists once said, "Justice too long delayed is justice denied."

IV

We have waited for more than 340 years for our constitutional and God-given rights. The nations of Asia and Africa are moving with jet-like speed toward gaining political independence, but we still creep at horse-and-buggy pace toward gaining a cup of coffee at a lunch counter. Perhaps it is easy for those who have never felt the stinging darts of segregation to say "Wait." But when you have seen vicious mobs lynch your mothers and fathers at will and drown your sisters and brothers at whim; when you have seen hate-filled policemen curse, kick and even kill your black brothers and sisters with impunity; when you see the vast majority of your 20 million Negro brothers smothering in an air-tight cage of poverty in the midst of an affluent society; when you suddenly find your tongue twisted as you seek to explain to your six-year-old daughter why she can't go to the public amusement park that has just been advertised on television, and see tears welling up when she is told that Funtown is closed to colored children, and see ominous clouds of inferiority beginning to form in her little mental sky, and see her beginning to distort her personality by unconsciously developing a bitterness toward white people; when you have to concoct an answer for a five-year-old son asking, "Daddy, why do white people treat colored people so mean?"; when you take a cross-country drive and find it necessary to sleep night after night in the uncomfortable corners of your automobile because no motel will accept you; when you are humiliated day in and day out by nagging signs reading "white" and "colored"; when your first name becomes "nigger," your middle name becomes "boy" (however old you are) and your last name becomes "John," and your wife and mother are never given the respected title "Mrs."; when you are harried by day and haunted by night by the fact that you are a Negro, never quite knowing what to expect next, and are plagued with inner fears and outer resentments; when you are forever fighting a degenerating sense of "nobodiness"—then you will understand why we find it difficult to wait. There comes a time when the cup of endurance runs over, and men are no longer willing to be plunged into an abyss of injustice where they experience the bleakness of corroding despair. I hope, sirs, you can understand our legitimate and unavoidable impatience.

V

You express a great deal of anxiety over our willingness to break laws. This is certainly a legitimate concern. Since we so diligently urge people to obey the Supreme Court's decision of 1954 outlawing segregation in the public schools, at first glance it may seem rather paradoxical for us consciously to break laws. One may well ask, "How can you advocate breaking some laws and obeying others?" The answer lies in the fact that there are two types of laws: just and unjust. I agree with St. Augustine that "an unjust law is no law at all."

Now what is the difference between the two? How does one determine whether a law is just or unjust? A just law is a man-made code that squares with the moral law or the law of God. An unjust law is a code that is out of harmony with the moral law. To put it in the terms of St. Thomas Aquinas, an unjust law is a human law that is not rooted in eternal law and natural law. Any law that uplifts human personality is just. Any law that degrades human personality is unjust. All segregation statutes are unjust because segregation distorts the soul and damages the personality. It gives the segregator a false sense of superiority and the segregated a false sense of inferiority. Segregation, to use the terminology of the Jewish philosopher Martin Buber, substitutes an "I-it" relationship for an "I-thou" relationship and ends up relegating persons to the status of things. Hence segregation is not only politically, economically and sociologically unsound, it is sinful. Paul Tillich has said that sin is separation. Is not segregation an existential expression of man's tragic separation, his awful estrangement, his terrible sinfulness? Thus it is that I can urge men to disobey segregation ordinances, for such ordinances are morally wrong.

Let us consider some of the ways in which a law can be unjust. A law is unjust, for example, if the majority group compels a minority group to obey the statute but does not make it binding on itself. By the same token a law in all probability is just if the majority is itself willing to obey it. Also, a law is unjust if it is inflicted on a minority that, as a result of being denied the right to vote, had no part in enacting or devising the law. Who can say that the legislature of Alabama which set up that state's segregation laws was democratically elected? Throughout Alabama all sorts of devious methods are used to prevent Negroes from becoming registered voters, and there are some counties in which, even though Negroes constitute a majority of the population, not a single Negro is registered. Can any law enacted under such circumstances be considered democratically structured?

Sometimes a law is just on its face and unjust in its application. For instance, I have been arrested on a charge of parading without a permit. Now there is nothing wrong in having an ordinance which requires a permit for a parade. But such an ordinance becomes unjust when it is used to maintain segregation and to deny citizens the First-amendment privilege of peaceful assembly and protest.

I hope you are able to see the distinction I am trying to point out. In no sense do I advocate evading the law, as would the rabid segregationist. That would lead to anarchy. One who breaks an unjust law must do so openly, lovingly, and with a willingness to accept the penalty. I submit that an individual who breaks a law that conscience tells him is unjust and who willingly accepts the penalty of imprisonment in order to arouse the conscience of the community over its injustice is in reality expressing the highest respect for law.

Of course, there is nothing new about this kind of civil disobedience. It was evidenced sublimely in the refusal of Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego to obey the laws of Nebuchadnezzar, on the ground that a higher moral law was at stake. It was practiced superbly by the early Christians who were willing to face hungry lions rather than submit to certain unjust laws of the Roman empire. To a degree, academic freedom is a reality today because Socrates practiced civil disobedience. We should never forget that everything Adolf Hitler did in Germany was "legal" and everything the Hungarian freedom fighters did in Hungary was "illegal." It was "illegal" to aid and comfort a Jew in Hitler's Germany. Even so, I am sure that had I lived in Germany at the time I would have aided and comforted my Jewish brothers. If today I lived in a communist country where certain principles dear to the Christian faith are suppressed, I would openly advocate disobeying that country's antireligious laws.

VI

I must make two honest confessions to you, my Christian and Jewish brothers. First, I must confess that over the past few years I have been gravely disappointed with the white moderate. I have almost reached the regrettable conclusion that the Negro's great stumbling block in his stride toward freedom is not the White Citizen's Counciler or the Klu Klux Klanner but the white moderate who is more devoted to "order" than to justice; who prefers a negative peace which is the absence of tension to a positive peace which is the presence of justice; who constantly says "I agree with you in the goal you seek, but I cannot agree with your methods"; who paternalistically believes he can set the timetable for another man's freedom; who lives by a mythical concept of time and who constantly advises the Negro to wait for a "more convenient season." Shallow understanding from people of good will is more frustrating than absolute misunderstanding from people of ill will. Lukewarm acceptance is much more bewildering than outright rejection.

I had hoped that the white moderate would understand that law and order exist for the purpose of establishing justice and that when they fail in this purpose they block social progress. I had hoped that the white moderate would understand that the present tension in the south is a necessary phase of the transition from an obnoxious negative peace, in which the Negro passively accepted his unjust plight, to a substantive and positive peace, in which all men will respect the dignity and worth of human personality. Actually, we who engage in nonviolent direct action are not the creators of tension. We merely bring to the surface the hidden tension that is already alive. We bring it out in the open where it can be seen and dealt with. Like a boil that can never be cured so long as it is covered up but must be opened with all its pus-flowing ugliness to the natural medicines of air and light, injustice must be exposed, with all the tension its exposure creates, to the light of human conscience and the air of national opinion before it can be cured.

In your statement you assert that our actions, even though peaceful, must be condemned because they precipitate violence. But is this a logical assertion? Isn't this like condemning a robbed man because his possession of money precipitated an act of robbery? Isn't this like condemning Socrates because his unswerving commitment to truth and his philosophical inquiries precipitated the act by the misguided populace in which they made him drink hemlock? Isn't this like condemning Jesus because his unique God-consciousness and never-ceasing devotion to God's will precipitated the evil act of crucifixion? We must come to see that, as the federal courts have consistently affirmed, it is wrong to urge an individual to cease his efforts to gain his basic constitutional rights because the quest may precipitate violence. Society must protect the robbed and punish the robber.

I had also hoped that the white moderate would reject the myth concerning time in relation to the struggle for freedom. I have just received a letter from a white brother in Texas. He writes: "All Christians know that the colored people will receive equal rights eventually, but it is possible that you are in too great a religious hurry. It has taken Christianity almost 2,000 years to accomplish what it has. The teachings of Christ take time to come to earth." Such an attitude stems from a tragic misconception of time, from the strangely irrational notion that there is something in the very flow of time that will inevitably cure all ills. Actually, time itself is neutral; it can be used either destructively or constructively. More and more I feel that the people of ill will have used time much more effectively than have the people of good will. We will have to repent in this generation not merely for the hateful words and actions of the bad people but for the appalling silence of the good people. Human progress never rolls in on wheels of inevitability; it comes through the tireless efforts of men willing to be coworkers with God, and without this hard work time itself becomes an ally of the forces of social stagnation. We must use time creatively, in the knowledge that the time is always ripe to do right. Now is the time to make real the promise of democracy and transform our pending national elegy into a creative psalm of brotherhood. Now is the time to lift our national policy from the quicksand of racial injustice to the solid rock of human dignity.

VII

You speak of our activity in Birmingham as extreme. At first I was rather disappointed that fellow clergymen would see my nonviolent efforts as those of an extremist. I began thinking about the fact that I stand in the middle of two opposing forces in the Negro community. One is a force of complacency made up of Negroes who, as a result of long years of oppression, are so completely drained of self-respect and a sense of "somebodiness" that they have adjusted to segregation, and of a few middle class Negroes who, because of a degree of academic and economic security and because in some ways they profit by segregation, have unconsciously become insensitive to the problems of the masses. The other force is one of bitterness and hatred, and it comes perilously close to advocating violence. It is expressed in the various black nationalist groups that are springing up across the nation, the largest and best-known being Elijah Muhammad's Muslim movement. Nourished by the Negro's frustration over the continued existence of racial discrimination, this movement is made up of people who have lost faith in America, who have absolutely repudiated Christianity, and who have concluded that the white man is an incorrigible "devil."

I have tried to stand between these two forces, saying that we need emulate neither the "do-nothingism" of the complacent nor the hatred of the black nationalist. For there is the more excellent way of love and nonviolent protest. I am grateful to God that, through the influence of the Negro church, the way of nonviolence became an integral part of our struggle.

If this philosophy had not emerged, by now many streets of the south would, I am convinced, be flowing with blood. And I am further convinced that if our white brothers dismiss as "rabble-rousers" and "outside agitators" those of us who employ nonviolent direct action and if they refuse to support our nonviolent efforts, millions of Negroes will, out of frustration and despair, seek solace and security in black nationalist ideologies—a development that would inevitably lead to a frightening racial nightmare.

VIII

Oppressed people cannot remain oppressed forever. The yearning for freedom eventually manifests itself, and that is what has happened to the American Negro. Something within has reminded him of his birthright of freedom, and something without has reminded him that it can be gained. Consciously or unconsciously, he has been caught up by the Zeitgeist, and with his black brothers of Africa and his brown and yellow brothers of Asia, South America and the Caribbean, the U.S. Negro is moving with a sense of great urgency toward the promised land of racial justice. If one recognizes this vital urge that has engulfed the Negro community, he should readily understand why public demonstrations are taking place. The Negro has many pent-up resentments and latent frustrations, and he must release them. So let him march; let him make prayer pilgrimages to the city hall; let him go on freedom rides—and try to understand why he must do so. If his repressed emotions are not released in nonviolent ways, they will seek expression through violence; this is not a threat but a fact of history. I have not said to my people, "Get rid of your discontent." Rather, I have tried to say that this normal and healthy discontent can be channeled into the creative outlet of nonviolent direct action. And now this approach is being termed extremist.

But though I was initially disappointed at being categorized as an extremist, as I continued to think about the matter I gradually gained a measure of satisfaction from the label. Was not Jesus an extremist for love: "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." Was not Amos an extremist for justice: "Let justice roll down like waters and righteousness like an everflowing stream." Was not Paul an extremist for the Christian gospel: "I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus." Was not Martin Luther an extremist: "Here I stand; I can do no other so help me God." And John Bunyan: "I will stay in jail to the end of my days before I make a butchery of my conscience." And Abraham Lincoln: "This nation cannot survive half slave and half free." And Thomas Jefferson: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal . . ." So the question is not whether we will be extremists but what kind of extremists we will be. Will we be extremists for hate or for love? Will we be extremists for the preservation of injustice or for the extension of justice? Perhaps the south, the nation and the world are in dire need of creative extremists.

I had hoped that the white moderate would see this need. Perhaps I was too optimistic; perhaps I expected too much. I suppose I should have realized that few members of the oppressor race can understand the deep groans and passionate yearnings of the oppressed race, and still fewer have the vision to see that injustice must be rooted out by strong, persistent and determined action. I am thankful, however, that some of our white brothers have grasped the meaning of this social revolution and committed themselves to it. They are still all too few in quantity, but they are big in quality. Some —such as Ralph McGill, Lillian Smith, Harry Golden and James McBride Dabbs—have written about our struggle in eloquent and prophetic terms. Others have marched with us down nameless streets of the south. They have languished in filthy, roach-infested jails, suffering the abuse and brutality of policemen who view them as "dirty nigger lovers." Unlike so many of their moderate brothers and sisters, they have recognized the urgency of the moment and sensed the need for powerful "action" antidotes to combat the disease of segregation.

IX

Let me take note of my other major disappointment. Though there are some notable exceptions, I have also been disappointed with the white church and its leadership. I do not say this as one of those negative critics who can always find something wrong with the church. I say this as a minister of the gospel, who loves the church; who was nurtured in its bosom; who has been sustained by its spiritual blessings and who will remain true to it as long as the cord of life shall lengthen.

When I was suddenly catapulted into the leadership of the bus protest in Montgomery, Alabama, a few years ago I felt we would be supported by the white church. I felt that the white ministers, priests and rabbis of the south would be among our strongest allies. Instead, some have been outright opponents, refusing to understand the freedom movement and misrepresenting its leaders; all too many others have been more cautious than courageous and have remained silent and secure behind stained-glass windows.

In spite of my shattered dreams I came to Birmingham with the hope that the white religious leadership of this community would see the justice of our cause and with deep moral concern would serve as the channel through which our just grievances could reach the power structure. But again I have been disappointed.

I have heard numerous southern religious leaders admonish their worshipers to comply with a desegregation decision because it is the law, but I have longed to hear white ministers declare, "Follow this decree because integration is morally right and because the Negro is your brother." In the midst of blatant injustices inflicted upon the Negro I have watched white churchmen stand on the sideline and mouth pious irrelevancies and sanctimonious trivialities. In the midst of a mighty struggle to rid our nation of racial and economic injustice I have heard many ministers say, "Those are social issues with which the gospel has no real concern," and I have watched many churches commit themselves to a completely otherworldly religion which makes a strange, unbiblical distinction between body and soul, between the sacred and the secular.

We are moving toward the close of the 20th century with a religious community largely adjusted to the status quo—a taillight behind other community agencies rather than a headlight leading men to higher levels of justice.

X

I have traveled the length and breadth of Alabama, Mississippi and all the other southern states. On sweltering summer days and crisp autumn mornings I have looked at the south's beautiful churches with their lofty spires pointing heavenward, and at her impressive religious education buildings. Over and over I have found myself asking: "What kind of people worship here? Who is their God? Where were their voices when the lips of Governor Barnett dripped with words of interposition and nullification? Where were they when Governor Wallace gave a clarion call for defiance and hatred? Where were their voices of support when bruised and weary Negro men and women decided to rise from the dark dungeons of complacency to the bright hills of creative protest?"

Yes, these questions are still in my mind. In deep disappointment I have wept over the laxity of the church. But be assured that my tears have been tears of love. There can be no deep disappointment where there is not deep love. Yes, I love the church. How could I do otherwise? I am in the rather unique position of being the son, the grandson and the great-grandson of preachers. Yes, I see the church as the body of Christ. But, oh! How we have blemished and scarred that body through social neglect and through fear of being nonconformists.

There was a time when the church was very powerful—in the time when the early Christians rejoiced at being deemed worthy to suffer for what they believed. In those days the church was not merely a thermometer that recorded the ideas and principles of popular opinion; it was a thermostat that transformed the mores of society. Whenever the early Christians entered a town the power structure immediately sought to convict them for being "disturbers of the peace" and "outside agitators." But the Christians pressed on, in the conviction that they were "a colony of heaven," called to obey God rather than man. Small in number, they were big in commitment. By their effort and example they brought an end to such ancient evils as infanticide and gladiatorial contest.

XI

Things are different now. So often the contemporary church is a weak, ineffectual voice with an uncertain sound. So often it is an archdefender of the status quo. Far from being disturbed by the presence of the church, the power structure of the average community is consoled by the church's silent—and often even vocal—sanction of things as they are.

But the judgment of God is upon the church as never before. If today's church does not recapture the sacrificial spirit of the early church, it will lose its authenticity, forfeit the loyalty of millions, and be dismissed as an irrelevant social club with no meaning for the 20th century. Every day I meet young people whose disappointment with the church has turned into outright disgust.

Perhaps I have once again been too optimistic. Is organized religion too inextricably bound to the status quo to save our nation and the world? Perhaps I must turn my faith to the inner spiritual church, the church within the church, as the true ecclesia and the hope of the world. But again I am thankful to God that some noble souls from the ranks of organized religion have broken loose from the paralyzing chains of conformity and joined us as active partners in the struggle for freedom. They have left their secure congregations and walked the streets of Albany, Georgia, with us. They have gone down the highways of the south on torturous rides for freedom. Yes, they have gone to jail with us. Some have been kicked out of their churches, have lost the support of their bishops and fellow ministers. But they have acted in the faith that right defeated is stronger than evil triumphant. Their witness has been the spiritual salt that has preserved the true meaning of the gospel in these troubled times. They have carved a tunnel of hope through the dark mountain of disappointment.

I hope the church as a whole will meet the challenge of this decisive hour. But even if the church does not come to the aid of justice, I have no despair about the future. I have no fear about the outcome of our struggle in Birmingham, even if our motives are at present misunderstood. We will reach the goal of freedom in Birmingham and all over the nation, because the goal of America is freedom. Abused and scorned though we may be, our destiny is tied up with America's destiny. Before the pilgrims landed at Plymouth we were here. Before the pen of Jefferson etched across the pages of history the mighty words of the Declaration of Independence, we were here. For more than two centuries our forebears labored in this country without wages; they made cotton king; they built the homes of their masters while suffering gross injustice and shameful humiliation—and yet out of a bottomless vitality they continued to thrive and develop. If the inexpressible cruelties of slavery could not stop us, the opposition we now face will surely fail. We will win our freedom because the sacred heritage of our nation and the eternal will of God are embodied in our echoing demands.

XII

Before closing I feel impelled to mention one other point in your statement that has troubled me profoundly. You warmly commended the Birmingham police force for keeping "order" and "preventing violence." I doubt that you would have so warmly commended the police force if you had seen its angry dogs sinking their teeth into six unarmed, nonviolent Negroes. I doubt that you would so quickly commend the policemen if you were to observe their ugly and inhuman treatment of Negroes here in the city jail; if you were to watch them push and curse old Negro women and young Negro girls; if you were to see them slap and kick old Negro men and young boys; if you were to observe them, as they did on two occasions, refuse to give us food because we wanted to sing our grace together. I cannot join you in your praise of the Birmingham police department.

It is true that the police have exercised discipline in handling the demonstrators. In this sense they have conducted themselves rather "nonviolently" in public. But for what purpose? To preserve the evil system of segregation. Over the past few years I have consistently preached that nonviolence demands that the means we use must be as pure as the ends we seek. I have tried to make clear that it is wrong to use immoral means to attain moral ends. But now I must affirm that it is just as wrong, or perhaps even more so, to use moral means to preserve immoral ends. Perhaps Mr. Connor and his policemen have been rather nonviolent in public, as was Chief Pritchett in Albany, Georgia, but they have used the moral means of nonviolence to maintain the immoral end of racial injustice. As T. S. Eliot has said, there is no greater treason than to do the right deed for the wrong reason.

XIII

I wish you had commended the Negro sit-inners and demonstrators of Birmingham for their sublime courage, their willingness to suffer and their amazing discipline in the midst of great provocation. One day the south will recognize its real heroes. They will be the James Merediths, with a noble sense of purpose facing jeering and hostile mobs and the agonizing loneliness that characterizes the life of the pioneer. They will be old, oppressed, battered Negro women, symbolized in a 72-year-old woman in Montgomery, Alabama, who rose up with a sense of dignity and with her people decided not to ride segregated buses, and who responded with ungrammatical profundity to one who inquired about her: "My feet is tired, but my soul is rested." They will be the young high school and college students, the young ministers of the gospel and a host of their elders courageously and nonviolently sitting in at lunch counters and willingly going to jail for conscience' sake. One day the south will know that when these disinherited children of God sat down at lunch counters they were in reality standing up for what is best in the American dream and for the most sacred values in our Judeo-Christian heritage, thereby bringing our nation back to those great wells of democracy which were dug deep by the founding fathers in their formulation of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence.

Never before have I written so long a letter. I can assure you that it would have been much shorter if I had been writing from a comfortable desk, but what else can one do when he is alone for days in a narrow jail cell, other than write long letters, think long thoughts and pray long prayers?

If I have said anything in this letter that overstates the truth and indicates an unreasonable impatience, I beg you to forgive me. If I have said anything that *under*states the truth and indicates my having a patience that allows me to settle for anything less than brotherhood, I beg God to forgive me.

I hope this letter finds you strong in the faith. I also hope that circumstances will soon make it possible for me to meet each of you, not as an integrationist or a civil rights leader but as a fellow clergyman and a Christian brother. Let us all hope that the dark clouds of racial prejudice will soon pass away and the deep fog of misunderstanding will be lifted from our fear-drenched communities and in some not too distant tomorrow the radiant stars of love and brotherhood will shine over our great nation with all their scintillating beauty.

Martin Luther King Jr. APOSTLE OF CRISIS

Critics accuse him of arrogance and opportunism, but his talent for inspiring "mass violation of immoral laws" has made him the most powerful Negro leader in America.

Since early April, temperatures had been rising inside the racial pressure cooker called Birmingham, Alabama. One muggy afternoon last month the lid blew off.

City Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor, deploying police forces to contain demonstration marches, had watched with growing impatience as a noisy Negro crowd filled Kelly Ingram Park, a square block of tall elms, walkways and green turf in the main Negro business section. Bellowing, laughing and jeering, the crowd—mostly students—taunted Connor's blue-clad policemen and the firemen sweating in dun-colored, knee-length slickers. Whining shepherd dogs strained at chains held by the cops, while the firemen manhandled big monitor nozzles combining two hoses for high pressure.

"Freedom!" shouted a Negro boy, flailing his arms. "Get white dogs!"

"Let 'em have it," said the Bull.

The firemen moved, and water shot from the nozzles. With a sound like automatic gunfire, a powerful stream rattled rapid-fire over elm trees, whacking off strips of thick, black bark. Then it slammed into a slim, white-clad Negro girl in the distance. She braced against it for a moment, then was knocked over into the dirt.

A group of unruly, drunken Negroes swung their arms and rocks began to fly. One crashed near the police. A bottle fell and shattered. Shouts of defiance came from the milling crowd. Rocks continued to clatter. The dogs whined eagerly. And over the cacophony of other sounds lay the crashing of the big hoses. The only still figures were about 200 whites watching somberly from across the street. Finally, with the Negroes pushed back, the water was shut off. "God bless America," a reporter mumbled in disgust.

Thus did racial violence come this spring to the most rigidly segregated major city in America. It marked a collision of two power systems, the first represented by Bull Connor, vigorously enforcing laws that preserve the status quo of racial discrimination, the second by Dr. Martin Luther

By REESE CLEGHORN

Negro girls, arrested for taking part in the Birmingham protests, huddle in 4-H building used to handle overflow from the jail.

King Jr., making a carefully planned assault on those laws and that discrimination.

For the crisis in Birmingham did not just happen. The Negro leader lighted a fire under the pressure cooker, well knowing that the "peaceful demonstrations" he organized would bring, at the very least, tough repressive measures by the police. And although he hoped his followers would not respond with violence—he has always stressed a nonviolent philosophy—that was a risk he was prepared to take. Two months earlier his No. 1 staff assistant, the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, had explained, "We've got to have a crisis to bargain with. To take a moderate approach, hoping to get white help, doesn't work. They nail you to the cross, and it saps the enthusiasm of the followers. You've got to have a crisis."

King got his crisis in a hymn-singing, rock-throwing crescendo of peaceful marches and violent strife that sent more than 2,400 Negroes to jail, most of them for such offenses as parading without a permit. It was the largest number ever arrested in an American racial protest. And even after he seemed to have won his fight for an agreement easing discrimination, 2,500 Negroes angrily responded to night riders' bombings by three hours of midnight rioting. Scores of cars were crumpled, torches were put to ramshackle stores and two apartment houses, a policeman and a cab driver were stabbed, and about 50 other people were injured. Later that black Sunday, President Kennedy ordered riot-trained combat troops to nearby bases.

In the days that followed, the tension eased, and integration leaders in Birmingham and around the nation tried to assess the results of King's invasion of this Deep South bastion. If the city's white business and political leaders stand by the agreement worked out in unofficial negotiations between white and Negro spokesmen, King will have won significant victories for the city's Negro population. This agreement calls for desegregation within 90 days of some lunch counters and other facilities in a number of downtown department and variety stores, for upgrading of Negro employment and hiring on a nondiscriminatory basis, and for the formation of a biracial committee.

On the other hand, coworkers in the civil-rights movement, which today teems with dissent and self-criticism, argue that these gains might have been won even without King. After decades of iron-fisted white supremacy, a series of elections in the past year had brought rejection of the old-line leadership, and white-Negro negotiations had established unprecedented rapport. (Speaking of a local Negro leader and head of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, a white merchant who a year ago grumbled, "I never thought I'd be sitting down with Fred Shuttlesworth," recently volunteered in obvious sincerity, "I'm delighted to know you, Reverend Shuttlesworth.")

Now, however, Birmingham's Negroes face a backwash of troublesome problems. White hoodlums have been aroused. Negro demonstrators may be faced with heavy fines. School authorities suspended or expelled 1,100 children who left classes to march in the protests. And both the outgoing commission-type administration of Mayor Art Hanes and Commissioners Bull Connor and J.T. Waggoner, and the incoming mayor-council form of government headed by Mayor Albert Boutwell have publicly stated that they were not bound by the white-Negro negotiations. It will be months before anyone knows how much the Negroes won, or whether the battle of Birmingham is over.

For these and other reasons, some integrationist leaders felt that King had blundered in bringing crisis to Birmingham. It was not the right place, they maintained; this was not the right time; and mass marches to fill the jails—a tactic that bears King's personal brand—was not the right tactic. Furthermore, King had gone into Birmingham not only against the advice of these leaders but without even informing them. "That's just arrogant," one said in exasperation.

Other detractors within the desegregation movement have bitterly accused King of tackling Birmingham primarily to raise money and to keep his name and his organization, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (S.C.L.C.), out in front on the teeming civil-rights scene.

But despite such criticism, King's magic touch with the masses of Negroes remains. They do not understand the intricacies of his tactics. What they see is a powerful crusader for equality who does something instead of just talking, who sticks lighted matches to the status quo and who is impatient with talk of waiting. Given the increasing unrest among Negroes, King's flare seems likely to spread a trail of little Birminghams through the nation during the next few months.

For King endows this American struggle with qualities of messianic mission. A short man whose thick neck and heavy shoulders convey an impression of height and power, he can fill New York's cavernous Riverside Church with eloquence about "the battering rams of historical necessity," or set rural Negro Baptists in Georgia to clapping and shouting rhythmic responses when he says, "The cloud is dark, but the sun is shining on the other side."

This oratorical blend of intellectual content with the imagery of an old Southern preacher is natural. King, 34, holds a theological degree from Crozer Theological Seminary in Chester, Pennsylvania, and a doctor-of-philosophy degree from Boston University. But some think his family heritage and home community explain much more about him than his education.

His father, usually known as "M. L. Sr.," was a strong figure in Atlanta for many years before young Martin became famous. The son of a hard-drinking part-Negro, part-Irish Georgia sharecropper, M. L. Sr. came to Atlanta as a largely unlettered young working man. He went to college, became a preacher, married a daughter of a man who had founded Ebenezer Baptist Church, and later became pastor of this politically influential church, as he still is today.

"In the North, discrimination is even more agonizing than in the South."

Young Martin grew up as the son of a man of prestige in the community. Except that he was a Negro in a segregated Southern city, it was almost a typical middle-class American setting.

People who knew young Martin noted one characteristic early: He played rough games, but he didn't like a fight. Once the school bully knocked him down a flight of stairs and beat him, but he didn't fight back.

He was sensitive, and twice as a young boy he seemed to lose control of himself in heartbreak. Once A.D., his younger brother, sliding down a banister, knocked their grandmother unconscious. Thinking she was dead, Martin ran to a second-floor window and jumped out, but the fall was only 10 or 12 feet and he was not injured. Later, when he was 11, he learned that his grandmother really had died and took the same jump out the window—again escaping injury.

King's sensitivity and reluctance to fight back physically remain two of his outstanding characteristics. When a 200-pound self-styled American Nazi attacked him during a speech in Birmingham, King took the man's blows and never tried to retaliate. But his courage is not seriously questioned, even by those who find other characteristics to criticize. Although he does get tense and even tighten up in his speech when faced with arrest—possibly because of arm-twisting mistreatment he has received from police in the past—he does not let that deter him from following his chosen path.

Ordinarily he can match Perry Como in languid laziness of appearance. His broad face has an Oriental aspect, with a down-curving moustache and oval eyes, and he never seems to hurry.

His most frequent response is "Oh, yeeees." The word stretches out like a baritone's last four full notes. When he laughs at someone's trivial humor, the laugh seems just a moment too late, as if he has been contemplating even this.

King can clown in private

Many people think he has no sense of humor; yet he can clown in private, parodying a swinging gospel singer's radio routine, for instance. But few people ever see such a performance or realize that, behind a public dignity of ecclesiastical proportions, he is an avid sports fan. Swimming, tennis and fishing have been among his own pursuits, but he has little time for them these days.

His limited time, in fact, is largely spent with his family—his wife Coretta, a pretty former Alabaman who sometimes sings soprano in concerts; Yolanda (Yoki), 7; Martin III, 5; Dexter, 2; and Bernice Albertine, born March 28. They live in a large, two-story brick house in one of Atlanta's less fashionable Negro neighborhoods. He is at home about 10 days a month on the average.

More often he is traveling. A recent schedule took him to Chicago for four speeches on a Sunday, to the University of Minnesota Monday, back to his Atlanta S.C.L.C. office Tuesday with a church meeting at home that night; Wednesday through Friday there were meetings with the S.C.L.C. staff; Saturday, counseling at his church and visits to hospitalized members; Sunday morning, preaching. And then on the road for New York, Connecticut and Tennessee.

Despite the pace, he almost always appears fresh. His dress leans to brown, gray and sometimes dark blue; and his suits, which Mrs. King helps choose, usually look more respectable than stylish. He once bought some suits in the $150-$200 price range, with a preference for high-sheen dressy ones, but his taste seems to be more modest now.

Price, however, is not the problem. Testimony from state investigators in an unsuccessful Alabama tax case against King revealed substantial income. For 1958, for example, he reported $25,348—and the state charged him with having made almost twice that much. He attributed the tax case to persecution, and was acquitted of fraud, but he had by then paid some additional tax which the state claimed was due.

King receives one dollar a year from S.C.L.C. and $6,000 from Ebenezer Baptist Church, which lists him as co-pastor. Most of his income comes from speaking fees, gifts and books, of which his third, titled Strength to Love, has recently been published by Harper & Row.

For these latter sources of income, King naturally must thank his national prominence as a Negro leader; and it is a curious fact that, between crises, his place in the civil-rights struggle seems to slip. After his first ascent to fame during the 1956 bus boycott campaign in Montgomery, Alabama, he passed through a period of limbo. "The rest of my life will be anticlimactic," he told a good friend.

But the next year he reestablished himself on the national scene when he proposed a "prayer pilgrimage" to Washington, won out against N.A.A.C.P. opposition and, on May 17, spoke from the steps of the Lincoln Memorial to 25,000 Negroes. "Give us the ballot" was his theme, rolling out like the refrain of an old hymn. "Give us the ballot, and we will transform the salient misdeeds of bloodthirsty mobs into the abiding good deeds of orderly citizens. Give us the ballot. . . ." The crowd boomed its approval, and editor James L. Hicks of New York City's Amsterdam News wrote that King "emerged from the Prayer Pilgrimage to Washington as the No. 1 leader of 16 million Negroes. . . . At this point in his career, they will follow him anywhere."

Still, King, who in those days wore a floppy, broad-brimmed hat, unfashionable wide-lapel suits and floral-design ties, was often out of the limelight. In the fall of that same year, 1957, the Little Rock explosion thrust other leaders into the headlines; Daisy Bates of the N.A.A.C.P. was the Negro of the hour then.

King slipped further from view after he narrowly escaped death on September 20, 1958, when a mentally deranged Negro woman named Izola Curry plunged a letter opener into his chest as he autographed his first book, Stride Toward Freedom, in a Harlem department store. "I've been after you for six years," she exclaimed. The blade narrowly missed his aorta, and King probably would have died if he had pulled the blade out, a doctor said later. Instead, he waited calmly for medical attention, with the stoical bravery he has shown on other occasions. His recovery was delayed by pneumonia, and for two years he remained largely out of public view except for a trip to India to talk to Nehru.

He did not emerge until 1960, with the advent of more crises. That year he set up offices in Atlanta for S.C.L.C.—"Slick," in the jargon of the movement—which had been largely dormant since he and his supporters had founded it three years earlier. But it was the lunch-counter sit-ins in the Carolinas and the rising restlessness of the Negro students which brought him to the fore again. Not leadership but agility put him there.

Students from about 40 communities where there had been sit-ins met in Raleigh, North Carolina, in April, to organize; and because King was, to them, the great symbol of the movement, they asked him to help. Though they had moved ahead of him in pressing "selective buying" programs—boycotts—he had quickly adopted this as his own cause. ("He had to run to catch up with them," a friend remembers.) And now, when they organized the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (S.N.C.C.), he became its patron saint. S.N.C.C.—usually called "Snick"—has since become a grass-roots organization carrying the dangerous burden of direct action in the tough black-belt areas of the South.

The revolutionary new youth tide that flowed from Raleigh had the effect of thrusting King into the front of a civil-disobedience movement now identified with his name, although in actual practice it was a young people's tactic at that time. Mass violation of the law by sit-ins and jail-ins was the banner that impatient students thrust into his hands for the 1960's. It was a sort of "black man's burden," and he was carrying it when he went to jail in Atlanta's sit-ins of 1960.

The Atlanta showdown exemplifies an essential fact about King: Here, as has often been the case, he was the Negroes' symbol and public spokesman; but actually the sit-in campaign was run by the students, and the command of Negro forces dealing with the Atlanta city administration was exercised by the established Negro power structure of Atlanta. On the operating level, King was a major factor only once, when the power of his oratory was needed to persuade a rally of rebellious students to accept the desegregation timetable which the local Negro leaders had negotiated.

Partly because his method is to move about in evangelical fashion, with local people remaining to reap whatever harvest may come, King has been called the Billy Graham of the civil-rights movement. Unlike Billy Graham, however, King bears heavy organizational responsibilities, and it is in this realm that he is most criticized.

"I really don't have a great interest in administration," King said one day recently, semi-reclining in a swivel chair in his simple, cheaply furnished Atlanta office. He tapped a wooden letter opener rapidly in his palm as he thought. "But I have come to see the necessity of that emphasis. I've never thought I couldn't do it. But I have thought my function was creative leadership, without doing the day-to-day detail. In recent months I have tried to strengthen my administrative ability."

Though King and the N.A.A.C.P.—of which he is a member—periodically deny any rivalry, it is obvious that "the N-double-A" is warily watching one plan he mulls over. It is twofold: First, S.C.L.C. would become a membership organization, composed primarily of individual members rather than affiliate organizations, as at present. Second, it would become truly national. In sum, this move would put S.C.L.C. into full competition with the N.A.A.C.P. for members, dues, contributions and general support.

"I will have to face the decision soon on whether I should be limiting myself to the South," King said. "In the North there are brothers and sisters who are suffering discrimination that is even more agonizing, in a sense, than in the South. . . . In the South, at least the Negro can see progress, whereas in the North all he sees is retrogression."

At present, S.C.L.C.'s most far-reaching and, many civil-rights workers think, most useful activity is its citizenship-training program. In an attractive brick building called the Dorchester Center in rural McIntosh, Georgia, S.C.L.C. trains people it calls "the noncommissioned officers of the civil-rights movement." Most are leaders from small communities, learning how to teach basic literacy, voter-registration processes and procedures for obtaining government benefits. So far, about 600 Negroes from all over the South have gone through Dorchester. In Georgia alone, these graduates recently were conducting 50 local classes.

For these and other operations conducted by its staff of 40, S.C.L.C. has a 1963 budget of about $450,000, up from $60,000 in 1960, when the staff numbered three. Fees from its affiliates amount to only about $15,000 of this. Doctor King himself raises about $100,000 with rallies, dinners and other personal appearances. A surprising $150,000 or so comes through the mail, some spontaneously but most in response to appeals from Doctor King to a mailing list of 35,000 people. When a crisis such as Birmingham's comes, an "emergency appeal" may be sent out, and sometimes it adds substantially to the year's budget. For example, the National Maritime Union alone sent King more than $32,000 in the midst of the Birmingham crisis.

About $100,000 of the S.C.L.C. budget is a grant by the Field Foundation to the home mission board of the United Church of Christ, which finances the citizenship school that S.C.L.C. administers. The remainder of the S.C.L.C. budget comes from periodic benefits, concerts and assorted entertainment.

King's financial reporting worries some people. In contrast to the N.A.A.C.P., which reports its money handling extensively and likes to emphasize that it must be "as above suspicion as Caesar's wife," S.C.L.C. reports little. Its only known published financial statement is a one-page, carbon-copied sheet with a very general listing of income and disbursements in round figures.

Partly because of its laxity in providing reports even to those with whom it deals on a professional level, S.C.L.C. seems to have suffered badly as a participant in the foundation-financed Voter Education Project, set up last year to manage voter-registration programs through five participating organizations. S.C.L.C., which had enthusiastically disclosed that it would receive about $90,000 from the fund last year, actually wound up getting less than $25,000. And when the project drew up its tentative 1963 allocations this April, S.C.L.C. was down for none.

Others in the civil-rights movement are also taking a tough, critical look at S.C.L.C.'s work in voter registration. And, despite King's statement in an April fund-raising letter that "We are making the main thrust of our work in the area of voter registration," the "specialty of the house" with S.C.L.C. remains the mass protest. The ultimate outcome in Birmingham will be a judgment of this tactic, just as Albany was.

The name of Albany has come to have a special meaning in the rights movement. In that busy little city of 58,000 in the old plantation country of southwestern Georgia, a total of more than 1,100 Negroes marched to jail with King in December, 1961, and the spring of 1962, demanding desegregation. Thundering applause had nearly drowned out King's rising, falling oratory when he told a meeting of Albany Negroes: "Get on your walking shoes; walk together, children, and don'tcha get weary!"

King himself had been trapped in the kind of emotion that builds up at these meetings. When he went to Albany he did not intend to go to jail or, apparently, to allow his entire prestige to be committed. But by the time he reached the church, earlier speakers had already fired up the crowd. A local Negro leader, Dr. W. G. Anderson, whirled in the midst of an oration about marching to certain arrest and exclaimed, "Reverend King will lead us, won't you, Reverend King?" The answer had to be yes. "I don't think King leads the movement," said a former associate. "It leads him."

Looking back, an executive of another rights group has commented, "As a professional, I was appalled by the lack of planning in the Albany campaign. They just charged off."

Almost everybody outside King's immediate camp thinks the Albany protest was a failure. "Albany can never be the same again," King had said at the time. But the walls of segregation did not come tumbling down anywhere there, and the Negro's lot today is little different except for some new hardships. Slater King, an Albany Negro leader and businessman, thinks the campaign was worth-while on the whole, but he estimates that 20 percent of the work force of Negro maids and cooks lost jobs permanently because of white hostility aroused by the marches.

"Albany is just as segregated as ever," says Police Chief Laurie Pritchett, who is credited with giving King his first major defeat. And Mrs. Ruby Hurley, Southeastern regional director of the N.A.A.C.P., says, "Albany was successful only if the goal was to go to jail."

A difference in objectives

Doctor King himself, though he admits he might do things differently now, believes the marches did achieve something. "Negroes have straightened their backs in Albany," he says, "and once a man straightens his back you can't ride him anymore." It is a view that sheds light on the cause of many of his differences with leaders of other rights groups. As one such executive said, "We [various rights organizations] meet and decide on tactics for bringing about desegregation. I have the feeling S.C.L.C. does not regard this as the primary objective. For them it's to increase the self-esteem of the Negro. That calls for different tactics."

Doctor King, having established himself as the foremost practitioner of the "fill the jails" tactic, now has set up a legal wing that may be useful when and if thousands more of his followers go to jail. Contributions to this new Gandhi Society will be tax-exempt—unlike those to S.C.L.C., a political-action group. Doctor King, honorary chairman of the Gandhi Society, acknowledges that it may enjoy foundation support—some, hopefully, from the Rockefeller Foundation.

The relationship between King and New York Governor Rockefeller has aroused a good deal of curiosity, especially since an S.C.L.C. official resigned with charges that Rockefeller was a heavy contributor to King for political reasons. The two men met at a Harlem rally in 1957 but had little contact until 1960. That year, when King was to speak at a fund-raising dinner in Albany, New York, the governor greeted him in New York City and then flew him to Albany in his personal plane. They had long talks. "I was very much impressed by him and the strength of his commitment," King recalls. They have talked since then, King says, but not frequently. "I must say he has shown a strong concern for civil rights. I do not think it is wholly political." But King is hard to corner on the question of whether President Kennedy or Governor Rockefeller has more appeal as a civil-rights advocate.

"I don't endorse candidates and will continue to follow this policy," King said, but he added, "I will go to the extent of telling people who ask my advice what I think the candidates stand for."

Even that could be an important endorsement. During the 1960 campaign his father, the Rev. M. L. King Sr., publicly endorsed John F. Kennedy for President because of the candidate's "call of concern" to young Doctor King's wife Coretta, while her husband was confined at Georgia's Reidsville State Penitentiary. That call, and another by Bob Kennedy to a Georgia judge handling a traffic case against King, are credited by many political observers with swinging enough Negro votes to elect Kennedy.

King's position in the rights movement unquestionably is enhanced by the fact that he has the ear of the President and, for that matter, of figures around the world. He knows African premiers better than he does the influential whites in his own hometown—recently he could not recall the names of two of the most important churchmen in Atlanta, both of whom had lunched with him to talk race relations. Not only is he on speaking terms with many African leaders; to an extent few white Americans appreciate, his name is known and revered throughout much of the world.

During the Birmingham push, for example, a Peace Corps official visiting in Senegal was plied with questions about why America had put Martin Luther King in jail. And by now most of the world knows that he has been jailed 14 times—as this is written.

Jail usually is the place where King catches up on his reading, but in the Birmingham jail a few weeks ago he caught up on some writing. Seven leading Alabama churchmen, some of whom had staked their prestige and positions upon a moderate solution in Birmingham, had openly criticized his actions there. He answered them with a publicly released 9,000-word letter which his staff later dubbed Birmingham Jail Treatise of Martin Luther King Jr. It was a telling document. More than ever it split him from the white moderates of the South and suggested that Negroes would plot their own course in the future.

The moderates, he wrote, had "gravely disappointed" him: "I have almost reached the regrettable conclusion that the Negro's great stumbling block in the stride toward freedom is not the White Citizens Council-er or the Ku Klux Klanner, but the white moderate who is more devoted to 'order' than to justice; who prefers a negative peace which is the absence of tension to a positive peace which is the presence of justice; who constantly says, 'I agree with you in the goal you seek, but I can't agree with your methods of direct action'; who paternalistically feels that he can set the timetable for another man's freedom. . . ."

As for his own course, he said, he was the man in the middle in the Negro community. He stood between "a force of complacency" and "one of bitterness and hatred" exemplified by the Black Muslims, and he realized that he should have known that "few members of a race that has oppressed another race can understand or appreciate the deep groans and passionate yearnings of those who have been oppressed. . . ."

More than a "treatise" it sounded like a declaration of black independence in the civil-rights crises of the future. THE END

Unshaven after stretch in Birmingham jail, King (right) and Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy pray silently.

The New Leader 6/24/63

Letter to Dr. King

Following is the text of the public statement on Negro demonstrations directed to Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. by eight Alabama clergymen.

APRIL 12, 1963

We the undersigned clergymen are among those who, in January, issued "An Appeal for Law and Order and Common Sense," in dealing with racial problems in Alabama. We expressed understanding that honest convictions in racial matters could properly be pursued in the courts, but urged that decisions of those courts should in the meantime be peacefully obeyed.

Since that time there had been some evidence of increased forbearance and a willingness to face facts. Responsible citizens have undertaken to work on various problems which cause racial friction and unrest. In Birmingham, recent public events have given indication that we all have opportunity for a new constructive and realistic approach to racial problems.

However, we are now confronted by a series of demonstrations by some of our Negro citizens, directed and led in part by outsiders. We recognize the natural impatience of people who feel that their hopes are slow in being realized. But we are convinced that these demonstrations are unwise and untimely.

We agree rather with certain local Negro leadership which has called for honest and open negotiation of racial issues in our area. And we believe this kind of facing of issues can best be accomplished by citizens of our own metropolitan area, white and Negro, meeting with their knowledge and experience of the local situation. All of us need to face that responsibility and find proper channels for its accomplishment.

Just as we formerly pointed out that "hatred and violence have no sanction in our religious and political traditions," we also point out that such actions as incite to hatred and violence, however technically peaceful those actions may be, have not contributed to the resolution of our local problems. We do not believe that these days of new hope are days when extreme measures are justified in Birmingham.

We commend the community as a whole, and the local news media and law enforcement officials in particular, on the calm manner in which these demonstrations have been handled. We urge the public to continue to show restraint should the demonstrations continue, and the law enforcement officials to remain calm and continue to protect our city from violence.

We further strongly urge our own Negro community to withdraw support from these demonstrations, and to unite locally in working peacefully for a better Birmingham. When rights are consistently denied, a cause should be pressed in the courts and in negotiations among local leaders, and not in the streets. We appeal to both our white and Negro citizenry to observe the principles of law and order and common sense.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY
JUNE 25, 1963

PETITION

TO: United States Junior Chamber of Commerce
Annual Convention
Louisville, Kentucky

FROM: Your Ten Outstanding Young Men of 1962

We were greatly honored when you selected us as America's Ten Outstanding Young Men of 1962. You urged us to continue to work for the betterment of America and to take this responsibility seriously. It is in this vein, and for this reason, that we feel impelled to make the following statement. What we say, we say with the JAYCEES Creed in mind:

> That the brotherhood of man transcends the sovereignty of nations; ....That earth's great treasure lies in human personality; And that service to humanity is the best work of life.

The JAYCEES have risen to meet many challenges, have contributed immeasurably to the improvement of our communities, and have never turned away from a task because of its difficulty.

The current crisis in race relations in America is only the latest in a series of challenges to our Nation's basic principles. It is one to which the President and other high government officials of both parties have frequently and urgently addressed themselves in recent weeks. It is a crisis which is neither sectional nor partisan.

As in the past, the challenge spells opportunity as well as danger. The danger lies in the certainty that our ideals will wither if we apply them sporadically or selectively. We pride ourselves that the American society holds individual dignity inviolate and that it imposes no restraints on the lawful ambitions of any citizens. This conviction is the heart of our vaunted liberty, and the secret of the success of our free enterprise system. America is what it is because our ancestors fled from societies in which men were judged by birth and not by ability. Yet, in 1963, there is within our society a group of persons to whom, in large measure, we deny equal opportunity because of the color of their skin. The President has pointed out that no Negro baby born in America today can hope to have an even chance unless we awaken to the violation of our most sacred principles.

The challenge we now face presents an opportunity to demonstrate anew that social problems are best solved within the framework of a free and democratic society. We who like to teach by example cannot hope to convince the world's overwhelming non-Caucasian majority of the validity of our political and economic system until we can prove that it assures to all persons, regardless of race or color, equality of opportunity. Moreover, the economy of our country, as well as its spirit, is bound to benefit from the entry of 20 million citizens into the mainstream of American life.

Recognizing these facts, and recognizing the need for dynamic business leadership in this as in all other challenges to our society, we call upon the officers and members of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce to take the following steps:

1. Remind the business community that racial discrimination is incompatible with a free enterprise system founded on the premise that both persons and products should compete on their merits.

2. Urge employers in their hiring, training and promotion policies affirmatively to seek out persons with talent and potential regardless of race or color.

3. Impress on businessmen who serve the public that refusal to serve persons because of race is a slur on America as well as on the individual victim and perpetuates the exclusion of Negro Americans from the American way of life.

4. Stimulate businessmen to make a long range commitment of time and energy to work on biracial committees, and other agencies, to find ways to alleviate current racial tensions and make Negroes full participants in the life of our communities.

5. Encourage businessmen to assure Negroes a free choice in the housing market as part of a community-wide effort to build stable and prosperous neighborhoods.

We offer you our assistance to advance these objectives in any manner which you deem appropriate.

PRESS RELEASE

JUL 1 1963

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY
June 25, 1963

The U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce national convention in Louisville has been asked by its group of Ten Outstanding Young Men of 1962 to take five steps aimed at resolving the current crisis in race relations in America.

The TOYM awards are presented annually by the JayCees as proof of their dedication to the belief that the American way of life presents unlimited opportunities to all young men of faith, vision and courage...and to reaffirm that part of the JayCee Creed which says, "service to humanity is the best work of life."

For perhaps the first time since the awards came into being a quarter of a century ago, the ten 1962 recipients have taken a public stand on a controversial issue. In a three-page petition presented to the National JayCee President, Doug Blankenship, the group notes that the JayCees have risen to meet many challenges in the past. The challenge posed now by the controversy over civil rights, the petition states, spells opportunity as well as danger.

The danger lies in the certainty that our ideals will wither if we apply them sporadically or selectively. The opportunity presented is to demonstrate anew that social problems are best solved within the framework of a free and democratic society.

In recognizing these facts, and in recognizing the need for dynamic business leadership in this as in all other challenges to our society, the TOYM call upon the officers and members of the U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce to take the following five steps:

1. Remind the business community that racial discrimination is incompatible with a free enterprise system;

2. Urge employers to hire, train and promote regardless of race or color;

3. Impress businessmen serving the public that racial discrimination is a slur on America;

4. Stimulate businessmen to actively participate on biracial committees to alleviate current racial tensions;

5. Encourage businessmen to assure Negroes free choice in the housing market as part of a community-wide effort to build stable and prosperous neighborhoods.

The TOYM of 1962 also offer their assistance to advance the stated objectives in any manner which the JayCees deem appropriate.

Dear SDS Member or Friend,

Enclosed is a report on the Convention held from 14-17 June at Pine Hill, N.Y. Until the American Scene document, around which much of the Convention focussed, is finished and sent out, this report will not, of course, be complete; but I hope that what is enclosed will serve to give you some "feel" of what happened. We welcome, and strongly solicit, comments from SDS members, whether or not they attended the Convention, on the Convention and/or the "state of the SDS" (such as are contained in National Secretary Lee Webb's enclosed "introduction"); all such comments received will be printed in the first Discussion Bulletin in the Fall. (We plan to have more--and shorter--Bulletins over the next school year.)

We have in the office stocks of Convention and post-Convention materials; if you want any of the following, indicate so on the form at the bottom of this letter.

1. The draft by Tom Hayden and Dick Flacks of the American Scene document (plus a draft/outline of suggested revisions by Ass't Nat'l Sec'y Don McKelvey)
2. Constitutional amendments
3. The new constitution, as amended
4. A list of Convention registrants, with summer addresses
5. Copies of some New Left Day speeches (available in September or so)

The Convention's Saturday night was marked by a truly inspiring demonstration of sacrifice and solidarity by SDS members. In the space of an hour, over $525 in contributions and another $550 in pledges was raised. Because of this, our financial situation is only serious, rather than catastrophic--but it is serious. Those who were at the Convention can dig down a little deeper over the summer; those who were not there can match those who were. There are many ways to help--payment of last year's unpaid dues, prepayment of next year's, or contributions either now (one suggestion is the contribution of a day's or a week's salary) or for the next year in the form of post-dated checks or pledges. (And--little things help--if you request any of the above-mentioned items, enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope--10¢ postage is needed for the Hayden/Flacks draft.)

We would greatly appreciate your sending us the information on your fall address requested below; this will sa ve us money then and will mean your receiving material seoner. Many thanks. And last: If you're in NYC over the summer, be sure to drop by the office and say hello--or call GR32181.

REPORT ON NEW LEFT DAY

The first day of the convention, Friday, June 14, was primarily an educational day for the delegates attending. The theme of the day was the discussion of the New Left in America, and the concerns it should have. The first of the four panels met after the president's report and was entitled "The Student Community and The New Left"; the speakers were Peter Countryman, Executive Director of the Northern Student Movement; Arthur Gorsen, Chairman of Campus ADA; Betty Garman, SDS NEC member from Berkely; and James Wienstein, of the Editorial Board of Students on the Left.

The second panel delt with the problem of formulating a radical approach to the foreign Policy Issues. The speakers in this panel were Robert Gilmore, Executive Director of Turn Toward Peace; Byron Johnson, former Congressman from Colorado and currently with the Agency for International Development; Arthur Waskow, author of The Limits of Defense and on the staff of the Peace Research and Educational Project in Ann Arbor, Michigan.

The third panel was concerned with a discussion of the failure of various institutions as agents of social change. Paul Potter, SDS member from the University of Michigan spoke on Students and Intellectuals; Sumner Rosen, Executive Committee of Massachusettes Political Action for Peace, spoke on the Peace movement; Al Blumenthal, Democratic State Assemblyman, spoke on the Democratic Party; Noel Day of the Boston Action Group, spoke on Civil Rights.

The evening panel discussed the many problems of the American economy. The speakers were Robb Burlage, SDS member from Harvard Graduate School; Bob Hiefits, an unemployed city planner; Bob Engler, a professor at Sarah Lawrence; Ray Brown, a teacher of Economics at the New School for Social Research; Stanley Aronowitz, of the Amalgamated Garment Workers and John McDermett, former Executive Director of New York State ADA.

Many of these speeches will be available from the SDS office on request later in the summer, and a comprehensive summary of what was said will appear in the first Discussion Bulletin in the Autumn.

An Introduction:
CONVENTION REPORT

The 1963 convention signalled a new era in the development of SDS. 150 students attended the four day event at Pine Hill, New York, representing over 32 campuses. The 150 figure is twice that of the attendance of the 1962 convention at Port Huron, Michigan. The geographic distribution was also greater than at Port Huron with large delegations coming from Michigan, Illinois, New York, Massachusettes. Texas and California were also represented as were many other middle Atlantic states.

The Convention was evidance of SDS becoming an organization as it enters the last part of its second year. The organization is developing a substantial campus base which identifies with it, and is no longer based soley on personell relationships.

Most encouraging is the development of new leadership which now goes far beyond the original Port Huron group.

The Convention indicated that the SDS constituency is expanding beyond the base of graduate students who originally drafted the Port Huron Statement into the undergraduate community on the one hand and into the young adult radical community on the other.

The opening day of the convention, designated as New Left Day took the form of a panel discussion in areas of importance to the New Left and was an attempt to unite the Young adult, graduate and undergraduate groupings in a common educational experience.

The content of the convention indicated that a new style of thinking is emerging within the organization. The questions of personal and social values and general critique of American society which were the major points of concern at Port Huron were surpassed at Pine Hill as the convention settled into the work of formulating a specific political analysis and programs.

A new tone was established in the strong critism leveled at the "Kennedy-corporate-liberal" solutions to domestic and foreign problems although the orientation of activity within and without the political structure will be maintained over the coming year.

After the convention, the new National Council met and began the difficult task of implementing the program drafted and accepted by the convention. It agreed to expand the national staff, to enlarge the role of the National Office in national programming, and to increase fund raising for national projects and general operating expenses. The various SDS projects; Students and Labor, University Reform, the Southern Project and the continuation of PREP(Peace Research and Education Project) will expand SDS activity and effectiveness on the national level and will also serve as an effective reference point for local chapter activity.

National Secretary

CONVENTION REPORT

For the benefit of those unable to attend the Pine Hill Convention, and to review for those who did, a description follows of the original draft of the American Scene document and of the process by which it was given a political shape from which the Styles Committee can come up with a final document.

The draft was prepared by Tom Hayden and Dick Flacks of Ann Arbor, at the direction of the National Executive Committee. The NEC's members felt that SDS, which had articulated its values and general political outlook during last year's Convention at Port Huron, should concentrate specifically on conditions in the U.S. in 1963 and SDS's relation to those conditions and to relevant political forces in the country. The draft statement therefore contained an analysis of current problems, a philosophy of organizational activity, and a set of fairly specific programmatic demands. (In the following summary, it should be noted that the specific demands are omitted; suffice to say that they follow relatively logically and clearly from the critical analysis.)

The draft broke down roughly into the following sections:

1) The Post War Period: In the period from the end of the second World War to the close of the Eisenhower Administration, Europe remained a debtor of the U.S.; while there was some motion in the colonial world, the colonial revolution had not yet become a major phenomenon; pent-up consumer demands and war spending maintained a relatively high degree of prosperity. In short, the period was relatively static and stacked in favor of the U.S.

2) The New Period: The revolutionary developments which started during or before the post-war period became acute at about the time when Kennedy took office. A qualitatively new world situation caused new problems for America.

a. The colonial revolution became the dominant feature of the underdeveloped world (the "third World") bringing the threat of loss of markets, loss of raw materials, and the development of anti-imperialist, socialist, and/or pro-Soviet or pro-Chinese governments.

b. The Soviet Union was coming to equivalence to the U.S. in terms of military strength.

c. Europe became a competitor and started to encroach on American markets.

d. Automation brought about a new crisis in American Production: no longer did production increase mean increase in jobs. For young people just entering the job market, for "old" (45 or older) people automated out of work, for underprivileged, undereducated and therefore unretrainable or even unemployable minority group and poor people, jobs were often unattainable. The arms race ceased being a source of economic stimulus; as weaponry became more sophisticated and required continually smaller numbers of more highly trained workers, defense spending became economically dysfunctional.

e. The civil rights movement became a major political phenomenon, with Negroes demanding not only equality in education and use of public facilities and housing, but also equality in a relatively shrinking job market characterized by Negroes' being "last-hired, first-fired."

3) The Response of the Kennedy Administration: While having reasserted an active managerial and planning role, the New Frontier still views its problems in administrative and technical terms rather than in terms of critical conflict, and thus it arrives at the following positions:

a. The new Frontier still regards the Soviet Union as its chief menace, but seeks a detente in terms of a test bann and possibly a disarmament treaty with a view toward freezing some areas of colonial conflict and making possible the use of limited conventional weapons for the maintanence of threatened American interests in the underdeveloped world.

b. Viewing China as the major long range threat, the administration is willing to promote modest change in the colonial world wherever faced with extreme right or left governments.

c. An interdependent European-American economic community is sought to aide the American economy.

d. The Administration had developed a policy of intervention in labor management disputes in the "national interest". It has attempted to offer tax relief for business and opposed attempts to raise wages particularly by use of strikes.

e. High level of unemployment seems to be accepted with grossly insufficient fringe solutions being used to put people to work.

f. no significant program for the alleviation of poverty has been adopted.

g. The administration has trailed behind the civil rights movement belatedly supporting those demands which have mass pressure behind them in an attempt to alleviate defacto and legal segregation and to keep Negroes loyal to the democratic party.

h. The New Frontier favors limited realignment so that its supporters can control Congress.

4. Critique of the Administration: The Administration wishes to maintain a business-oriented status quo, but realizes that major reforms may be necessary in the economy, foreign policy, and civil rights. To the degree that these reforms coincide with progressive interests, the Administration should be supported against the Right; but we must remember that while the Administration poses as liberal in order (successfully) to get liberal support, it is essentially illiberal and concerned with retaining power and allowing only limited and gradual change.

Two basic criticisms of the Administration are offered:

(1) Its approach to problems is tokenistic, in a time of great human crisis here and throughout the world;

(2) Its "style" is manipulative in the extreme; this can only mean a further crippling of human beings' ability to participate in their own lives and in the decisions which shape their lives.

The New Frontier program cannot meet the three greatest pressing needs of this society:

(1) A foreign policy with disarmament as a central goal; the Administration offers only a world safe for limited, counter-insurgency wars (and increasingly potential escalation to nuclear war);

(2) Its economic policy might, at best, slightly redistribute wealth and create a few more jobs, but such tokenism cannot deal with the conservative nature of the social structure or with automation's radical pace; especially, it cannot--and does not try to--create dignified work;

(3) Its racial policy is also tokenistic, and inadequate in a radically segregated society; while many Kennedy policies in civil rights should be supported, it should be recognized that the Administration is trying, first, to muzzle the energy of the mass movement without satisfying its needs, and, second, that it is not feasible within the present policy framework for the government to meet even the minimal Negro demand for relief from economic distress.

Without change in these particular policies, America may pass into a time of even greater social disaster than the present. As the Third World, and the Chinese in particular, increases in turbulence and power, the probability of a terrible nuclear war becomes more difficult to avert. If it rejects the energy-releasing alternative of disarmament, the Administration can manage internal and world conflict only by an obscene and perhaps finally destructive mixture of dole and coercion.

5. Program for Action: The essence of the draft's philosophy of organization is found in the following direct quote:

"Toward local centers of insurgency: At the present time, we are convinced that debate about the shape and direction of mass left organization in America is a fruitless exercise. The prior task is to bring policitically conscious people into connection with ordinary people and their problems, to build the base and gather the resources for constructing a viable left, and the create the programs and analyses around which such a left could organize.

"Such tasks can best be accomplished through work by activists where they are. The primary strategic goal of the moment, we submit, is the development of locally autonomous insurgent political organization and action. Examples of such action presently on-going in communities across the country include:

--direct action movements and voter registration campaigns in the South;
--protest movements against school, housing, and job segregation in Northern communities;
--political reform movements in larger cities directed against entrenched Democratic machines and organized around liberal domestic and foreign policy proposals;
--political action for peace--including independent pressure groups, caucuses within political parties, community peace centers, etc.;
--tutorials, workshops, and other service and action projects among underprivileged youth;
--discussion groups, newspapers, research projects aimed at analysis and exposure of local political, economic and social conditions."

After a brief presentation of the draft to the Convention plenary, the body broke up into small workshops for a general discussion and criticism of the draft. This was followed by a meeting of the workshop discussion leaders who correlated the various points raised in their sessions. It was found(as it had been at Port Huron) that the content of the discussions correlated highly from workshop to workshop. On the basis of this correlation a recommendation was made from the workshop leaders to the plenary for a series of specific workshops to perfect various sections of the draft. The workshops included: economics, peace and foreign policy, civil rights, the New Frontier, political insurgency, labor, and theoretical themes and organization of the document. The reports of this second round of workshops were made directly to the plenary in the form of major concepts and forumlations to be dealt with parliamentarily on the floor and sent to a styles committee for incorporation into the final document.

Although there was extensive revision of the original draft, the overall political outlook of theconvention remained generally within the overview presented in the original.

Three major amendments to the constitution were passed:

1. The National Executive Committee was abolished as a separate body, though there will continue to be 17 national officers on the National Council elected directly by the Convention. The National Council, which meets between Conventions to set direction for the organization and to oversee its administration, consists of these 17 officers and representatives from chapters. Chapters with 25 or more members will elect two representatives (this is an amendment), while other chapters will continue to elect one each.

2. In order to keep major decision-making power within the chapter structure, and at the same time to encourage as many individual members as possible to participate in the Convention, a new system for convention representation was developed: (a) As before, all SDS members have the right to attend the Convention with the right to cast their own vote--though no proxies are to be allowed. Chapters shall have the right to elect one delegate for each five members, and such elected chapter delegates shall have two votes.

3. Amendments to the constitution shall henceforth be by 2/3 vote of the convention or of a membership referendum.

SUMMARY OF NATIONAL COUNCIL MEETING, JUNE 17-18

After the Convention, the new N.C. met for a day in Nyack at the Home of the Fellowship of Reconciliation. The following is a summary of the disdussions at the meeting (full minutes will be available from the office sometime over the summer):

1. Functioning of the Office; Staff: Some of the issues raised about the office and staff included: (1) the difficulty of administrators' getting out from under a plethora of relatively petty details to obtain an overview of what the office is and isn't doing and to sort out and act upon priorities; (2) the need for NYC organizing (both for chapter development and to help the office's functioning) and, at the same time, to assure that the staff doesn't become constantly involved in NYC politicking; (3) field secretaries' difficulty in keeping up with what's happening in the organization after having been away from the office for a good while; (4) the need for more organizing material; over the summer the staff will work on chapter and organizing materials, including an Organizing Manual and a basic brief handout based on the Open Letter, the Port Huron Statement, and the American Scene document; (5) the need to get chapter news to members frequently while also (perhaps monthly or bi-monthly) sending out non-chapter on-campus news and substantive articles and correspondence. Lee Webb, recent Boston U. graduate, was elected New National Secretary; Field Secretary Steve Max was designated Membership Secretary, with duties to be defined by the staff over the summer; Joe Chabot, Chairman of VOICE at the U. of Michigan, will be on staff over the summer and very possibly in the Fall doing organizing work, including aiding in prepration of organizing materials; Ass't National Secretary Don McKelvey remains over the summer; his plans for the Fall are uncertain.

2. Iran Resolution: A resolution supporting Iranian students against the Shah's repression was presented (in absentia) by Ben Page of the Boston area SDS. While the resolution itself was generally agreed with, a couple of questions were brought up: (1) How much time should SDS spend on resolutions on international questions, given our limited influence in such spheres? Also, the question arose of whether to take stands as an organization on potentially divisive specific foreign policy issues. (2) How should we use situations such as the Iranian one and resolutions about them? One suggestion was to send such statements to chapters prior to NC meetings, so as to heighten interest in the situation, educate about it, and assure more democratic control in the passage of resolutions. One result of the discussion was the setting up of an International Organizational Affairs Subcommittee of the NC, comprised of Chairman-in-Exile Bob Ross, Harlan Joye, Paul Potter, Steve Johnson, and Betty Garman.

3. Liberal Study Group: The LSG, a caucus at the NSA's Congress (8-18 to 8-29), involves the generation of a set of "liberal study papers" on various issues to be distributed to Congress delegates, and--at the Congress--the publishing of a daily newspaper and the conducting of daily seminars. Richard Rothstein is Co-ordinator of the LSG this year; SDS and Campus ADA are sponsors as of now; NSM, SNCC, andother organizations will also be invited. The problem was raised of how policy is to be determined. The only real focus for policy is in the newspaper's editorials; otherwise, the LSG serves a service function (it was suggested that this general concept be incorporated into an LSG Statement of Purpose). In past years, there have been problems of assuring both fast-moving effectiveness and democratic control by sponsoring organizations, due to some substantial political differences among sponsors.

4. From a challenge of the actual existence of the Hunter C. (Bronx) chapter, the general question was discussed of how to determine whether or not chapters are real. On the one hand, NC chapter representatives should represent someone; on the other, the Dec. NC decision was recalled, to encourage members to form chapters where possible, even if minimally active, in order to foster at least some activity and to involve them in the national organization's decision-making. It was recognized that better contact is needed between the N.O. and chapters; this will be essayed next year.

5. The question arose of whether administrative and political functions shouldn't be s separated (i.e. that national staff not be on the NC). Those favoring such separation felt that the administrators should be viewed as civil servants and should not have the power over their own hiring. Those opposing separation said (1) "administrative" jobs are political anyway; (2) it is necessary for administrators to feel part of the decision-making process if they are to be effective and not to feel somewhat alienated. On the question of staff members' occupying NC seats which would otherwise go to younger members from chapters, it was suggested that some "old hands" on the NC should resign (since their interest and participation are assured); an alternative proposal was to have permanent staff be automatic NC members. The whole question of NC membership being a constitutional one, it will be dealt with by the membership.

6. Proposed projects: A. Southern Project: Dorothy Dawson proposed a project to tap and develop the growing radical political interest in the South by sending field secretaries to a ctivate multi-issue groups on white and Negro campuses. Robb Burlage's proposed interracial "SDS Southern Office" house in Nashville (where he will be next year) is one possible center for the project; Atlanta was also discussed. Personnel is uncertain--Dorothy is being urged to take this job on.

B. Students and Labor: SDS is proposing to labor unions that two or more special student field secretaries be hired to raise eco nomic issues (including student unionization) on campuses. This is motivated in part by the feeling that the natural community of interests and concerns which should unite students and labor is not perceived, that much misunderstanding exists, and that mutual benefit would ensue.

C. University Reform: Several people's developing views on U.R. resulted in different viewpoints on the potential efficacy of this form of action. Some felt that the University, so interrelated with society, could not be basically democratized until society is; UR thus is often a psychological cul-de-sac and results in disillusionment. Further, students interested in UR often do not take a broader view of society. Others felt that basic dissatisfaction with the University exists among many students, these students are potentially reachable, and some short-range, limited results--through traditional methods or civil disobedience--are obtainable. The UR Service, yet to find a central location, was discussed in terms of stimulating students--through papers, biblios, news, muckraking journalism, etc.--to act on their campuses. Hopefully, the NC's stimulating discussion can be carried on and widened and deepened in membership mailings, as this is such a basic question in SDS's orientation.

D. Peace Research and Education Project: PREP, the only functioning project of the past year, will continue next year from Ann Arbor. The possible expansion and regularization of the PREP Bulletin were suggested and discussed; final decision at Fall NC meeting.

E. March on Washington: Proposed for Spring 1964 is a massive march on Washington around the general theme "Youth Deserve a Better World" and uniting the peace and civil rights movements in a common action and common demands, and also bringing in economics, civil liberties, and other issues. Some questioned whether (a) the mutuality of interests and outlook really exists between the peace and civil rights movements and/or (b) they would be willing to put optimum effort into such a project. The project was suggested by Steve Johnson, who is taking a year off from Harvard and the Tocsin chairmanship to work on it; Steve was asked to explore further the reactions of various organizations to the idea.

7. Informal discussion of the Convention: This took place after formal adjournment and before leaving Nyack; none of the following ideas necessarily represent any particular consensus:

- Concern over a dichotomy between "old" and "new" members and a tendency toward clannishness;
- Lack of time for dealing with legislation; possibility of less formal legislation next year, more time for workshops and informal discussions;
- Lack of participation of individual SDS members in the American Scene document (before and at the Convention) and in the educational proceedings at the Convention;
- The Convention swung to the left, bordering on sectarianness;
- Possible expansion of New Left Day next year;
- More direction, structuring, pre-drafting needed;
- Possibility of focussing next year's Convention on The Ideal Society.

ENCAMPMENT FOR CITIZENSHIP

Small discussion groups are cauldrons of bubbling ideas and opinions when run by skilled leaders like David Singer (second from left).

A dynamic program awakens young citizens to democratic responsibility

"THE SOUTH WILL END segregation long before the North does," the young Negro girl declared, "because they're more honest about their feelings."

The other panelists were stunned, and the small audience stared up at the stage. When one white boy disagreed, another Negro girl told him, "You can't understand us, understand our problems. You can't without being one."

"It looks as if Brotherhood Week is finally over," murmured an observer, as the planned program went out the window and more than 100 campers plunged into a free-swinging, brutally honest hassle over hyprocrisy and race relations.

It had taken six weeks of intense discussion and probing questions to get through to what these young people really thought. The result may have looked like anarchy, but wasn't. It was the Encampment for Citizenship at its best, forcing campers to deal with the kind of harsh truths and hard-core problems that always challenge democracy.

"The Encampment is an overwhelming psychological and emotional experience," said one camper. "Gut-wrenching," a more basic type called it.

To many, the stated aims of the Encampment for Citizenship sound like clichés: "To create a more informed, responsible and effective citizenship among youth; to clarify the history, meaning and dynamics of democracy and the democratic method." But no aims could have greater relevance today.

Men like Algernon D. Black, who founded the organization in 1946, and is its education director, and Saal D. Lesser, the executive director, believe the greatest threat to democracy in

"There are no right answers at the Encampment. We want you to think for yourself."

America is apathy. "The more people who are uninvolved, the fewer people who make the decisions," says Lesser, "the more apathy, the less democracy." The danger is real. With the obvious exception of young Negro integrationists, the great bulk of American youth is hardly stirring. An overemphasis on "team play" and "getting along well with others" makes most young people's organizations look as if they are preparing their members more for "followership" than for leadership.

Black first saw the need for the Encampment program in the mid-30's, when he found many young Americans unsure of democratic values in the face of the totalitarian philosophies that had come to dominate much of the world. The problem remains with us. American students have appeared uninformed and tongue-tied on the rare occasions that they've encountered sophisticated young Communists. In Korea, captured GI's were handicapped by a lack of intellectual armament. Many didn't really understand the democratic process, the system they were defending.

The Encampment alone cannot solve the problem. What it seeks, through its modest program, is to awaken a few young people to an awareness of what democracy is. Hopefully, they will later be able to carry out the responsibilities of democratic leadership in their own communities.

Every year, a total of 250 campers, mostly 18 or 19 but ranging up to 23, attend one of the three encampments held in New York City's Riverdale section, Berkeley, Calif., and near San Juan, Puerto Rico. Most of those whose applications are accepted receive either a full or partial scholarship to help cover the $350 tuition. The selection committee balances each group to include as much racial and regional variety as possible.

The "living-together experience," which Encampment officials stress, is a basic part of the program. While the most dramatic confrontations are probably between Negro campers and their Southern white roommates, there are other significant encounters. Farm youths, on 4-H or Farmers Union scholarships, may bunk next to city-bred youngsters recommended by welfare agencies. Small-town girls from the West mix with Eastern suburban sophisticates, and foreign students meet their first American Indians.

The program includes lectures, field trips, discussion groups and workshops. These are just devices, levers designed to open the campers' minds, to get them to think critically, to question, argue, make their own decisions and commitments. "They've got to become involved," say staff members. "There are no right answers here," newcomers are told. "There are no exams, no one flunks. We want you to think for yourself."

Many find the going rough. "College never prepared me for this," complained one young man. He wasn't the only one to discover that there are no simple solutions to complex problems, and that making critical judgments is a lot tougher than trying to second-guess the professor.

Some campers were shocked by their own ignorance. "I didn't know a thing about Marxist thought," another college student admitted, "but I don't think anyone else in my group did either."

Field trips and lectures provide raw material for the discussion groups and workshops. Economists, political scientists and social workers come to speak. Last year, New York campers were shocked by the realities of the migrant-worker problem during a tour of migrant camps on Long Island. One lecturer provoked hours of angry debate when he pointed out the difficulties involved in disarming America without wrecking an economy that has grown dependent upon defense spending.

Discussion groups are open forums. The aim of group leaders is to draw out individual campers. They often play devil's advocate to force participants to defend their beliefs. As the weeks pass, there is less and less tolerance of fuzzy thinking.

Workshops are group efforts. Members study current problems, like juvenile delinquency, segregation or disarmament, or consider more philosophical ideas. One workshop in Berkeley was busy last summer designing "Myopia," their own Utopian society. "They finally ran into trouble," a staffer reports, "when they got down to the old puzzler of who is going to control the controllers in a controlled society."

Greeting campers in July, at the start of the six-week session, Algernon Black tells them, "The less the staff has to ask or tell you, the more free you'll be and the more successful." However, there is some inevitable conflict between the intellectual freedom the Encampment tries to foster and the discipline needed to keep dozens of high-spirited young people in line.

is the formation of a camp government. Both the form and composition of the government are left to the campers, who usually pick a representative democracy. One year, however, a small group seriously campaigned for a dictatorship on the ground that it would be more efficient. Their fellow campers voted them down.

The camp government runs the camp with the advice of the staff. Some campers grumble that the staff is too free with this advice. Looking back, some of last year's New York group decided that perhaps a revolution would have solved the problem. "After all," they explained, "it would have been in the democratic tradition."

The Encampment is nonprofit, nonpartisan and nonsectarian. It gets aid from around 100 national and local organizations, and has close ties with the New York Society for Ethical Culture, of which Black has long been a leader.

At the end of the session, in mid-August, campers attempt to assess the program and the changes in themselves. "It was like really coming to grips with myself for the first time, discovering what I was and seeing my own limitations," said one. "I guess I reacted pretty compulsively before," admitted another, "always looking at things with the same point of view." "I didn't do a damn thing before," a girl confessed, "but I will now, and I'll make my opinions felt too."

The success of the Encampment program depends upon what happens to these young people after they leave. Many alumni, like William Haddad, associate director of the Peace Corps, date their commitment to public service and public affairs from their Encampment experience.

"What we want," says Lesser, "is to get more people on the cutting edge of the decision-making process. This is what makes democracy work."

Cooper he notes that the "common ground between the two men is an inheritance from the eighteenth-century ideas of order . . . which came down to Poe mainly in their aesthetic application, but which possessed Cooper's political being." But his dependence on dated historical studies (such as the Beards' Rise of American Civilization and Bowers' Hamilton and Jefferson) weakens the argument that the major American novelists urged their readers "to rest content with the compromises which are all man can be expected to make of his ideals."

Fortunately, A. N. Kaul—with much less fanfare — has done what Maxwell seemed about to do. Kaul's study of "the actual and ideal society in nineteenth-century fiction" is a happy marriage of art and politics. Like Maxwell, Kaul questions the accepted view of American literature as radically individualistic, but Kaul emphasizes the desire for Utopian community rather than the acceptance of compromise and the status quo. Where Maxwell quotes Aquinas on the need for a hierarchical society, Kaul quotes Henry James, the elder, on democratic society as the "redeemed form of man."

Socialists rather than Liberals or Conservatives will draw inspiration from Kaul's interpretation of Cooper, Hawthorne, Melville and Mark Twain, authors who confronted the society of their times, evaluated it, turned from it, and projected "the image of an ideal community or an ideal social order." Faced with the atomization of society in an age of commercialized individualism, the classic American writers withdrew from "actual" society — in order to delineate an ideal community. In their visionary art they retold the American epic of flight from the evils of the Old World to the Edenic community of the New. Not only are Cooper's "Littlepage Manuscripts" a "re-visionary" history of society in colonial and early national New York; his Leatherstocking goes forth from white society to a better community of Uncas and Chingachgook, of Mohicans and Pawnees. And even Hawthorne's allegedly anti-Utopian Blithedale Romance is for "the principle of human brotherhood as against the predatory competitiveness of the established system." "Even if it fails to create a potential matrix for radical ideas and rational schemes of action," writes Kaul in a last word on our fiction, "by arousing and redistributing our sympathies it builds a reservoir of moral energy to support such ideas and actions."

I trust that all men dissatisfied with the present literary and political Establishments will applaud Kaul's book, and Maxwell's, as signs of a return to relevance.

FREEDOM SONGS

Robert Shelton

Rarely in time of peace has music played such a strong role in mobilizing people as it is doing every day in the integration movement.

At the funeral of Medgar Evers they sang. In the jails of Danville they sang. Facing the fire hoses of Birmingham they sang. The Negroes of the South are marching to their battles to the tune of what have become generally known as "freedom songs."

One must really hear this use of spirituals, gospel songs, hymns and militant new topical tunes in the actual setting to understand the galvanizing power of this functional music. Few mass meetings in the South could be held without music. Few demonstrations could be held without the morale-building of melody.

But short of witnessing this curious phenomenon, it is possible to get an idea of the songs, old and new, and their impact by hearing the Freedom Singers, a quartet of young field secretaries of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee.

Members of the Freedom Singers are Bernice Johnson, twenty years old; Rutha Harris, twenty-two; Cordell Hull Reagon, nineteen, and Charles Neblett, twenty-one. All have served time in jail for civil-rights activities. All are first-rate singers, and Miss Johnson has stunned listeners especially with the power, intensity and range of her voice.

Coming from the front lines of the integration battles, the Freedom Singers make ideal stage interpreters of the Negroes' battle hymns. They have traveled some 35,000 miles since December, when they were formed in Albany, Georgia, and have presented more than 100 concerts in the North and West to raise money for the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee.

elections for public office held each year. I am proud of the citizens of Orangeburg for having expressed themselves, and I would have been disappointed had they done otherwise. The Times and Democrat of Orangeburg and the citizens of that city were exercising their constitutional rights under the first amendment. I hope that no Federal agency will ever attempt to abridge the free exercise of the rights of freedom of the press and freedom of speech.

The report sent to you by Mr. Johnson is unfair, for it cites only the union's side of the argument. It did not tell of the visits made by the union organizers to the homes of Utica employees. Nor did it mention the union sponsored parties and the letters mailed by the machinists to the potential voters. Does the region 11 office propose that only the unions be allowed to express their point of view?

I have been forced by the evidence to conclude that politics has in this and other cases entered a supposedly impartial process. (Another case in point concerns a trial examiner's recommendation that the results be set aside in the labor election involving Daniel Construction Co. of Greenville, S.C.) Administrative adjudication can only be permitted in our society if imbued with a judicial air of impartiality. How far have we fallen from this standard?

It would be highly unfortunate if we were to blur the distinctions between South Carolina and the highly industralized sections of our country. South Carolina has experienced great industrial growth in recent years largely because of a favorable labor market. If the employees at the Utica plant voted down the machinists union, it was not because of a "reign of terror" but, rather, because 60 percent of the employees personally and individually opposed unionization.

It is my opinion that this election was fair and free. Both sides presented their views, and the vote was taken in a peaceful atmosphere according to R.F. Dukes, sheriff of Orangeburg County. The International Association of Machinists lost, and I urge you to uphold this vote and to restore to the citizens of Orangeburg their rightful dignity.

Thank you very much for your consideration.

Yours very truly,

ALBERT WATSON,
Member of Congress.

COMMUNIST CONNECTIONS WITH NEGRO DEMONSTRATIONS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, on August 2, 1963, I placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, beginning at page 13180 and concluding on page 13187, a number of newspaper articles and other materials bearing on the question of whether the Communists have any connection with the Negro demonstrations which have been turning into race riots in various cities across the country. I have additional articles to call to the attention of the Senate today and I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of these remarks. The material I have today consists of the following:

First. Articles from the Standard-Times of New Bedford, Mass., dated July 21–25, 1958, entitled: "Forced Integration Fails To Promote Harmony," "Communists' Basic Goal: To Incite Racial Strife," "Daily Worker Led the Cry for Federal Intervention," "Reds Goad NAACP To End Moderation," and "Senate Group Says South Red's Target."

Second. An Associated Press article printed in the Sunday Oklahoman on December 11, 1959, entitled "Reds of U.S. Advocate New Negro Policy."

Third. A column from the Milwaukee Sentinel dated March 19, 1960, entitled "Red 'Newsmen' Go South, Aim To Add to Unrest," by Jack Lotto.

Fourth. A column from the Cincinnati Enquirer dated June 9, 1963, entitled "Cincinnati Pastor Named as Head of Red Front," by Jack Lotto.

Fifth. A column from the New York Mirror dated July 4, 1963, entitled "A Rededication to Spiritual Beginnings," by Victor Riesel.

Sixth. An article from the Brooklyn Tablet dated August 1, 1963, entitled "Protest Against Indecency or Riot of Racists?"

Seventh. An editorial from the Daily Advance of Lynchburg, Va., dated August 2, 1963, entitled "Who's Lying?"

Eighth. An excerpt from the testimony of former Communist, Benjamin Gitlow, entitled "World Communist Movement, 1928," and his most recent publication "The Negro Question—Communist Civil War Policy."

Ninth. An editorial from the Evening Star of Washington, D.C., dated Monday, August 5, 1963, and entitled "Communist Righters?"

Tenth. An editorial from the Nashville Banner of July 22, 1963, entitled "Highlander Desegregation: With That Joie De Vivre and Tax Exemption Too."

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FORCED INTEGRATION FAILS TO PROMOTE HARMONY

WASHINGTON.—The luster is wearing thin at Little Rock, Ark., where bayonets were used last fall to enforce integration in a public school. Some of the trailblazers appear to have washed their hands of the cause of Negro rights. Others have been seen in roles considerably less flattering than those they played last fall.

Ernest Green's observation "I'm glad that's all over," is perhaps not untypical. Ernest, 18, was one of the nine Negro youths admitted to Little Rock's Central High School under the guns of federalized National Guardsmen and U.S. paratroopers.

Last month Ernest was graduated. One of the nine was expelled; the other seven may never return to Central.

If the experiment continues at Central, it will have to do so without the assistance of many persons who were instrumental in launching it.

Mayor Woodrow Wilson Mann, of Little Rock, who made the daily telephone calls to the White House that led to Federal intervention, has left town.

He is now a resident of Denver, Colo., working in an investment banking firm.

Max Rabb, the Presidential assistant who was at the White House end of the Mayor Mann calls and was a keyman in the decision to send Federal troops, has left Washington.

He is now a partner in a big New York law firm.

Despite apparent success in its part in obtaining the Little Rock test, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has experienced a "sharp drop" in membership.

Federal Judge Ronald Davies, whose ruling that integration must begin "forthwith" in Little Rock was the foundation for what followed, has long since left Little Rock.

He is now back in his court in North Dakota, where there are but 257 Negroes in the entire State. Arkansas has 462,000.

Harry Ashmore, the Little Rock editor whose editorials in behalf of integration stirred the controversy and brought him a Pulitzer Prize, has conceded he will not employ a Negro on his newspaper.

Mrs. Grace Lorch, the Little Rock "housewife" who attracted national attention by "befriending" one of the nine students, has since refused to declare whether she is a Communist.

Herbert Brownell, whose U.S. Justice Department gave the orders for dispatch of troops, is no longer Attorney General.

He has taken up the more lucrative private practice of law.

The Justice Department, itself, has had a change of heart. Under its new chief, William P. Rogers, the word is "never again" on the use of Federal troops to enforce integration.

The Little Rock School Board, which had worked out a gradual integration program that Judge Davies' ruling nullified, has thrown in the sponge on any integration in the near future.

Central High School has claimed that the educational program for its 2,000 students was so badly dislocated by the 1-year experiment the school could not survive another year without complete disintegration of morale.

This was a major consideration in Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley's approval of a 2½-year stay of integration for the Little Rock high school, a decision that may have made the best of a very unfortunate situation.

MAJORITY NEEDS CONSIDERATION

Judge Lemley, while acknowledging the interest of Negroes in obtaining equal rights, said the "public interest" of the majority rated consideration, too. The burden placed on other Central High students and the "racial tension and unrest" created in Little Rock itself demanded a delay in integration, he said.

The ruling led to another example of apparent change in viewpoint among those who had been insistent on an immediate end of segregation.

When Judge Lemley's decision was taken to the U.S. Supreme Court, whose 1954 "sociological" and subsequent decrees had started the ferment in the South, that body declined to break up its summer vacation for a special sitting.

The Court, in effect, passed the buck to a lower court with an admonition to act fast.

Little Rock, the morning after, appears to have been a venture that has not served racial harmony or promoted integration. As such, its origin, its leaders and its original objectives invited inquiry.

[From the New Bedford (Mass.) Standard-Times]

COMMUNISTS' BASIC GOAL: TO INCITE RACIAL STRIFE

WASHINGTON, July 22.—To incite racial strife is one of the oldest objectives in the Communist program for getting world domination. "We must realize that our party's most powerful weapon is racial tension," states a Communist Party handbook of 1912, well before a few hundred Bolsheviks seized control of Russia.

"By propounding into the consciousness of the dark races that for centuries they have been oppressed by the whites, we can mold them to the program of the Communist Party," the handbook continues.

"In America, we will aim for subtle victory. While inflaming the Negro minority against the whites, we will endeavor to instill in the whites a guilt complex for their exploitation of the Negroes. Thus will begin a process which will deliver America to our cause."

COINCIDENCE OR STRATEGY

Is it coincidence or the result of strategy that, some 45 years later, racial unrest in an outstanding Southern city, Little Rock, Ark., has increased so sharply that the Federal judge called for a 2½-year delay in any integration?

Again, is it coincidence or the result of Communist strategy that one of the most influential of all Southern Negro leaders, the Rev. Martin Luther King, exhorts his followers with these words:

"It (the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott) is a part of something that is happening all over the world. The oppressed people are rising up. They are revolting against colonialism and imperialism and all other systems of oppression."

When Mr. King draws a parallel between the situation of the American Negro and "oppressed peoples" rising against "colonialism" and "imperialism," he is following exactly, to the word, the Communist line.

DIRECT APPROACH FAILED

At first, the Communist drive for creation of racial strife called for a direct approach to Negroes, using labor unions and Communist fronts like the American Negro Labor Congress and the League for Struggle for Negro Rights.

This approach was brazenly direct, and it failed. Former Communist Joseph Kornfelder, one of the party founders in the United States and its first director of Southern operations, has described what happened:

"The South to the Commmunists was always one of the most vexing problems," Kornfelder told a joint legislative committee of the State of Louisiana in March 1957. "Moscow could never understand it * * *. According to Marx' theory, the South should be leading the United States in Communist development.

"It just didn't work out that way.

"It was just to the contrary. The South proved to be a hard nut and it didn't conform to the doctrine."

BLOCKED BY RELIGION

"They decided that the big block against penetration of the South is religion. The Negroes believed in religion; the hillbillies believed in religion; nearly everybody is religious. The South is more religious than the North.

"Therefore, they decided maybe they should get at them under the auspices of the cross."

Kornfelder and two Negro former Communist leaders, Manning Johnson and Leonard Patterson, told the Louisiana committee that the new tactics included, besides use of the church, penetration of reputable Negro organizations and the founding, but not obvious control, of others.

World War II, with its migrations and general dislocation of living habits, produced what Kornfelder described as a "sort of honeymoon situation" between the Communist organizers and Negro organizations.

FOUR AGENCIES INFILTRATED

"It seems the intellectuals during that time had shown a remarkable weakness," he testified. "They were bigger suckers for the Communist propaganda than many others were, apparently because they sort of led a life apart from the daily troubles and toil of the population.

"They were the ivory tower boys who picked up the theories of the Communists, not looking at what is behind the theories."

The results of this "honeymoon" were vital Communist infiltration of the most important agencies in the South dealing in Negro issues. The Communists infiltrated four of these organizations and actually helped found three of them.

They are the Southern Conference Educational Fund, the Southern Regional Council, the Highlander Folk School in Tennessee, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

An almost incredible maze of interlocking officials, ideas and publications linked the three first-named agencies with the Communist Party.

COUNCIL GOT FORD GRANT

The Regional Council and the educational fund were both offshoots of the old Southern Conference for Human Welfare, which was dissolved in 1948 after twice being described by the Federal Government as a Communist front serving the Soviet Union and its subservient Communist Party.

Former directors and officers of the Conference for Human Welfare became directors and officers of the Regional Council and the Educational Fund and of the Highlander School. The Communist Daily Worker openly boasted that James E. Jackson, chief of the southern branch of the U.S. Communist Party, was a cofounder of the Regional Council.

Although the Regional Council is not widely known in the North, its influence in the South is attested by its receiving a $497,000 grant from the Ford Foundation Fund for the Republic.

Likewise, the Highlander School plays an important role in southern civil rights developments, although it is scarcely known in the North. The school, according to testimony before the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, was cofounded by a Communist and by a man who refused to testify on his beliefs.

NAACP INFILTRATED

During these organizing years by the Communist Party, the NAACP was extensively infiltrated, although not dominated, by Communist sympathizers. Many of its leading officials were members of Communist fronts.

In fact, by 1954 and the crucial Supreme Court decision, the Communist Party was so confident it had set the stage for developments in its favor that the party's national convention in the winter of 1953 declared, "The next period ahead will witness momentous struggles of the Negroes * * * given the vanguard leadership of the Communist Party, we may be confident that the Negro liberation movement will ally itself more fully with the camp of peace and democracy."

The Communist Party was in a position to follow its long-proved doctrine:

To get a "sociological" or pro-Communist book on the reading list of influential persons, like a Supreme Court Justice.

To persuade a Negro to violate a civil rights statute, in the cause of civil disobedience.

To inject a fellow traveler in the forefront of a civil rights dispute.

To support the program of the NAACP.

These objectives were attained in the year to come.

[From the New Bedford (Mass.) Standard-Times]

REDS GOAD NAACP TO END MODERATION

WASHINGTON, July 23.—The success of Communist efforts to exploit the southern Negro under the guise of "democratization" became fully evident in 1954 and the 3 subsequent years. The Supreme Court's historic 1954 ruling on school segregation was in judgment on four cases brought before it by the National Association of Advancement for Colored People, which for years had been a priority objective of Communist infiltration.

The NAACP charged that Negro children in Delaware, Kansas, South Carolina, and Virginia were being denied their rights under the 14th amendment.

The Court did not rule on this aspect. Instead, Chief Justice Earl Warren in the written opinion declared that the Court found for the NAACP because segregated schools induced a feeling of inferiority among Negro children.

SIX BOOKS CITED

This sociological view, the Justice stated, is "amply supported by modern authority." He cited six books by such "modern authority."

Two of the six authorities were Theodore Brameld and E. Franklin Frazier. Between them, they have been members of or identified with 28 organizations listed as Communist, Communist-fronts, or Communist-dominated.

A third "authority" was K. B. Clark. While arguments were being heard by the Court on the four cases; Clark was on the payroll of the NAACP as a "social science expert."

A fourth authority cited by Justice Warren was the book, "An American Dilemma," edited by Gunnar Myrdal, a Swedish Socialist. The Chief Justice emphasized the importance of this book in the Court's deliberations by saying it was depended on "generally," that is from cover to cover.

RECORDS NOTED

Sixteen of the contributors to Myrdal's book have long records of pro-Communist affiliation and activity. One, W. E. B. Dubois, identified by the Communist Party as the "honorary chairman" of the NAACP, had a hand in 82 parts of the book. Dubois has been identified with 80 Communist fronts, reportedly more than any other American citizen.

Dubois intervened in behalf of executed Communist spies Julius and Ethel Rosenberg and sent the Kremlin a message of condolence on the death of Stalin.

Myrdal, himself, has written that the U.S. Constitution is "impractical and unsuited to modern conditions." Its adoption was "nearly a plot against the common people," said this foreign authority on American Negro problems.

The Court's decision gave new influence to the NAACP. Its officers hailed the decision but indicated that it would not change the organization's plan for calm and orderly progress in race relations.

"We accept the decision quietly, unless there is deliberately-fomented trouble," said the late Walter White, then executive secretary of NAACP.

WANTED STRUGGLES

Thurgood Marshall, chief NAACP counsel, who had argued the school cases before the Court, said, "The people will get together and work this thing out."

The Communist Party, however, wanted no part of moderation. It wanted the "big sharp struggles" its leaders had forecast, and racial unrest. Communist publications and officials shrilled for "immediate implementation of the Supreme Court decision, immediate abolition of segregation and discrimination from every facet of American life, immediate enforcement" * * * etc.

The record from the Supreme Court decision until the climax at Little Rock makes it plain which philosophy was the dominant one.

Moderation was forgotten.

The next 3 years brought unprecedented civil disobedience and violence in the South's racial affairs. There were all-out "incidents" of long duration in Tuskegee, Ala., Charleston, S.C., Tallahassee, Fla., Montgomery, Ala., Americus, Ga., and Clinton, Tenn., to name only the major ones.

COMMUNISTS BLAMED

The NAACP played a prominent role in each, but the atmosphere was not the moderate one ostensibly espoused by the NAACP.

"In my opinion, every major racial disturbance in the South since 1954 has been incited and directed by the Communist Party," Mrs. Paul Crouch, widow of a former Communist leader, told the Standard-Times. Her husband was a top Communist functionary in the South for 13 years, and she was his aid throughout the period.

Communist exploitation of the Negro through the NAACP is attested by the proceedings of the 1957 national convention of the Communist Party. That convention adopted as its main resolution, "the question of Negro freedom * * * the crucial domestic issue of the day * * * requiring support of the program of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People."

Communist penetration of the NAACP in these important years is conceded by the NAACP itself.

ALL CHAPTERS WARNED

On February 14, 1956, Leroy Watkins, who succeeded White as NAACP executive secretary, warned all chapters to guard against the "intensive efforts" of Communists to infiltrate.

At that very time, however, the NAACP's official publication, "The Crisis," was recommending as must background reading for Negroes, books by Claude Lightfoot, chairman of the Illinois Communist Party, and Doxey E. Wilkerson, member of the party's National Committee. Both have written extensively in behalf of racial unrest.

Communists dominance of Negro civil rights developments after the Supreme Court decision is illustrated, also, in the activities of the Highlander School, influential "sociological" workshop in the South Highlander, according to testimony before a congressional committee, was founded by a Communist and by a man who refused to state his beliefs.

IS PROGRAM SINCERE?

Since 1954, Highlander has held a series of "workshops to develop plans for an orderly transition from segregated to integrated schools." At the last workshop, held over the Labor Day weekend just before the trouble at Little Rock, the leaders of every important racial strife incident in the South since 1954 were present.

How sincere is the Highlander program for "orderly transition" in desegregation?

The actual curriculum at Highlander, its pamphlet statement in behalf of "orderly transition" notwithstanding, preached that "desegregation is more effectively accomplished in a single step than in a series of steps with delays in between."

This is fellow-traveler vernacular for the straight-out Communist program of "immediate desegregation."

Among those attending the important Highlander workshop was the Rev. Martin Luther King, leader of the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott. King was to be at Little Rock, and, in 1958, at the White House, protesting integration delay.

By the time Central High School in Little Rock was to open for its 1957–58 school year, the Communist Party was marching step by step with the NAACP, whether the good element in the NAACP liked it or not.

DAILY WORKER LED THE CRY FOR FEDERAL INTERVENTION

WASHINGTON, July 24—"The honor of our country requires Federal intervention now, to end the organized defiance of decency and justice in the South." These words were not spoken by Mayor Mann of Little Rock. Nor by Maxwell Rabb, White House assistant to whom the mayor talked daily by telephone in the hectic days preceding intervention by the National Guard and paratroopers.

They were not spoken by an official of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the dominant U.S. Negro organization.

The words were an official pronouncement of the Communist Party of the United States, issued 2 years before Little Rock, and printed in the party's official political guide, Political Affairs, issue of October 1955.

UTTERED BY COMMUNIST

"The Federal Government has the power and the duty to use troops and whatever other constitutional means are available to enforce the law of the land."

Use of the word "constitutional" in the above might lead someone to think a good American had said those words.

They were uttered 18 months before Little Rock's Federal troop intervention by Benjamin J. Davis, chairman of the Negro Commission of the U.S. Communist Party.

"The Federal Government hasn't hesitated to use the force of jail and seizures in trying to destroy the Communists and other foes of Jim Crow," said Davis, who, like other Communists, has been able to predict the future in civil rights matters.

PRESSED FOR TROOPS

"It should not hesitate to use whatever force—troops if necessary—to put down violent defiance of the law of the land, and murderous terror against peaceful citizens seeking to exercise their constitutional rights."

From the very beginning of the Little Rock incident, the Communists pressed for "dispatch of Federal troops to keep order in the South."

The Communist Daily Worker shrilled a demand for "action," on Sept. 5, the day after Governor Faubus stationed National Guardsmen around Central High School.

"The insurrection in Arkansas" must be put down, strummed the Worker the next day.

"G-men must be sent," said another edition, blasting FBI Director Hoover for refusing to do so.

OTHER PHRASES

"Every prerogative" must be used by the President, was another phrase in the daily demands for use of the military.

"Threats of blood running in the streets" were cited by the Worker, without identifying the source.

Southern whites were charged with being "immune to education, cajolery, and pleas of moderation," so that troops were the only recourse.

"Why wait?" asked one Worker editorial.

"Patience!" scoffed another.

"Nothing is to be gained by handling Faubus with kid gloves," stated another diatribe.

"Shilly-shallying" was laid to the President.

And so it came to pass. On September 24, paratroopers were airborne to Little Rock. Exactly the methods advocated by the Communist ace agitators—speed and force—were used in a civil rights dispute.

"A tremendous victory for the American people," rejoined the next day's Daily Worker.

Use of armed troops climaxed years of incitement by violence and distortion of truth by the Communists and their sympathizers. Again a helping hand came from the Supreme Court that had "opened the way to Negro freedom," as the Communist Party observed, and from the misled NAACP.

Mrs. Daisy Bates, president of the Arkansas Conference of NAACP branches, had a key role at Little Rock.

MRS. BATES LAUDED

In an adulatory interview with Mrs. Bates, the New York Post's reporter Ted Poston stated, "both sides in this embattled southern town agreed on one thing: If there had been no Daisy Bates, there would have been no 101st Airborne Division patrolling the halls of Central High School.

"And no nine Negro children in the once all-white high school."

Mrs. Bates' husband, Lucius C. Bates, is a director of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, which former Communists have indicted as a "Communist transmission" agency for inculcating and carrying out Communist doctrine.

The Southern Conference Educational Fund took over many of the officers and all of the publications of the old Southern Conference for Human Welfare, twice listed as a Communist front, "doing the work of the Communist Party," by the U.S. Government.

Mrs. Bates is listed as a "sponsor" of the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

ANOTHER WOMAN INFLUENTIAL

Mr. Bates was a member of the organization known as Negroes for Wallace, a Communist rallying point. He was a sponsor of the Bill of Rights Congress, a Communist Party front.

Also influential at Little Rock was Mrs. Grace Lorch, white woman who "befriended" one of the Negro students refused admission to Central High.

Widely published press dispatches described Mrs. Lorch as a white housewife who protected a Negro girl before a jeering mob, and as having defied an angry crowd of whites to offer sympathy.

It was not reported, however, that Mrs. Lorch, according to Senate Internal Security Subcommittee records, has a thorough Communist Party background.

HUSBAND INDICTED

She has been identified as a one-time Communist Party organizer in Boston, as having attended a Communist Party convention, as a member of the New England District of the Communist Party, as former vice president of the Teachers Union, and as a director of the Samuel Adams School for Social Studies, both Communist fronts.

At the time Mrs. Lorch was active in Little Rock, her husband, Lee Lorch, was under Federal indictment on eight counts of refusing to answer questions on his alleged Communist background put to him by the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Here, too, the Supreme Court rendered an assist. The charges against Lorch later were dismissed by a Federal judge on the basis of the Supreme Court's freeing of John T. Watkins, United Auto Workers official who refused to name Communists he knew while he was one himself.

Little Rock found the U.S. Supreme Court, the NAACP, and the Communist Party teammates.

It was a dazzling demonstration of what can happen, to quote former Communist Joseph Kornfelder, when "the ivory tower boys picked up the theories of the Communists, not looking at what is behind the theories."

SENATE GROUP SAYS SOUTH RED'S TARGET

WASHINGTON, July 25.—What lies ahead for race relations in the South and, indirectly, for the Nation? If the pattern of the last 3 years is followed in the future, the outlook is not favorable. Some may want to ignore the record, but they cannot hide it. Racial disturbances since the Supreme Court decision of 1954, culminating in the use of armed force at Little Rock, have made two areas of opinion where there were three.

The middle-ground on southern civil rights issues, the ground on which progress had been steady if slow, is virtually deserted. Sides have been chosen, of necessity.

TWO EXTREMIST CAMPS

Without this conciliatory middle area, there are two extremist camps.

One is headed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The Communist Party officially has planted its standard in this camp, its purpose to promote racial tension behind the NAACP program.

The other camp includes various white citizen organizations, established authorities of many Southern municipalities and States and, as time passes, more and more of the moderates.

The no man's land between these two camps is widened in an election year, like the present, and with the 1960 presidential campaign drawing closer. Neither major political party, nor, apparently, the Federal Government, wishes to intervene.

A HANDSOFF ATTITUDE

The handsoff attitude in Washington was evident during Senate Judiciary Committee examination of incoming U.S. Attorney General William P. Rogers. The prospective head of the Federal agency that sent troops to Little Rock was not asked about his views on civil rights, not even by Southern Senators.

Absence of leadership from Washington has increased the importance of the role played by the NAACP. Its leaders apparently plan no change in policy.

Reviewing events through Little Rock, Dr. Channing Tobias, board chairman of the NAACP, declared:

"But this record of advance is only a beginning. Unjust practices are still commonplace in many parts of the Nation. The people have a continuing responsibility to take the lead, to assure the winning of equality in all communities, large and small, North and South.

GOOD OBJECTIVE

"The pattern is set; it's up to us to fill in the details of the picture. Only then will we have achieved our goal of a democratic America living up to its ideals."

These words from an influential Negro leader describe an objective which the majority of Americans would be happy to work toward.

But there is little reason to suppose that the good intentions of the NAACP will not capitulate, as they have before, to the driving, inflammatory race-tension strategy of the Communist Party.

After the 1954 court decision, the leadership of the NAACP promised moderation, a "quiet" "talking over" of issues among all segments.

EXACTLY AS FORECAST

Instead what transpired was a series of big, sharp struggles in civil disobedience and violence, exactly as forecast by Benjamin J. Davis, chairman of the Negro Commission of the Communist Party.

Today, Davis and his coworker, James E. Jackson, Communist chief for southern affairs, are using phraseology much like Dr. Tobias in predicting the future.

"The people must take the lead," says Davis. "Negro liberation is now the property of the whole American people."

Jackson's view: "The response to Little Rock has signalized that ours is the time ripe with opportunity to secure major victories in the cause of Negro freedom."

These words have a ring like Dr. Tobias, but an utterly different intent.

AIMS NEFARIOUS

"You are aware, of course," FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover commented for the Standard-Times, "the Communists have no sincere interest in promoting racial harmony, but are ever alert to exploit any issue to further their nefarious aims."

This observation may be obvious to many Americans.

But is it obvious to Dr. Tobias, who has been associated with 40 Communist fronts, board chairman of NAACP, or to W. E. B. DuBois, honorary chairman of NAACP, who has been identified with 82 Communist fronts, more than any other American citizen?

Apparently it is not.

As recently as March 1958, the NAACP leadership brought a court action in Florida seeking to halt an investigation by the Florida Legislature of Communist activity in that State.

Besides the NAACP, leadership in the integrationist camp will come from the Reverend Martin Luther King, leader of the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott. Mr. King also seems hazy in distinguishing between the Communist way and the American way.

A COMMUNIST EXPLANATION

At its 1957 national convention, the U.S. Communist Party selected a man identified by the Communist Daily Worker as Mr. King's "secretary," Bayard Rustin, to be an official "observer." Rustin praised the "democratic proceedings of the convention in a report later denounced by FBI Director Hoover.

Mr. King was quoted as telling a Chicago assembly last year, "It (the Montgomery boycott, in which there was much violence) is a part of something that is happening all over the world. The oppressed people are rising up. They are revolting against colonialism and imperialism and all other systems of oppression."

This explanation is exactly that of the Communist Party, the depiction of the American Negro as a kicked-around colonial, oppressed by imperialists.

Yet the same Rev. Martin Luther King was one of four Negro "leaders" who called upon President Eisenhower in June 1958 to try and set the pattern for racial progress.

A LOOK TO FUTURE

A former Negro Communist official, who later worked for the U.S. Department of Justice, sees the future in these words:

In my opinion the Negro leadership should realize that they have responsibility," a Louisiana legislative committee was told by Manning Johnson, "a responsibility to guide and spirit their people along the right paths, help to pull themselves up by their own bootstraps, and to work together as a group for cooperation, mutual cooperation between races, to the end result that they can keep what they have, strengthen their economic and political position, and move on to higher things.

"Men of King's type will not give that kind of leadership. The only thing they know is the threat and a sword.

"I know the NAACP can't do that. They have called the leaders of Southern life every conceivable type of name. They have labeled them everything they can, and there is no basis for them to negotiate with them because they have already built up a wall that cannot be gotten over, gotten under, or gone around."

Former Communist Johnson's judgment may be harsh. But the future will make him an accurate prophet unless there is wider understanding of the Communist background to "immediate" integration, to be accomplished by "force" if necessary.

In a little-publicized report of last November, the U.S. Senate Internal Security Subcommittee declared: "There is a present-day pattern of Communist activity in the mid-South area. The Communist participants * * * make up the basic framework of a Communist operation that is directed against all generations of people in the South."

To that could be added, "and in the Nation."

REDS OF UNITED STATES ADVOCATE NEW NEGRO POLICY

NEW YORK.—The American Communist Party announced Saturday an about-face on a long-established Negro policy. The party no longer advocates the formation of a Negro nation within the United States, party leaders said.

Instead, the objective now "is to secure to the Negro people with all speed the complete realization of genuinely equal economic, political, and social status with all other American citizens."

The action, taken in a resolution adopted at the party's 17th national convention in a Harlem hotel, marks a fundamental change in the line of the American Communist Party dating back to 1930, a party spokesman said.

ACTION EXPLAINED

He said the former policy is being abandoned because it smacks of segregation.

The convention, said to be attended by 222 delegates from 40 States, is a closed affair but newsmen are briefed regularly by party officers.

The turnabout on Negro policy was announced by James Jackson of Richmond, Va., party secretary for southern and Negro affairs. He told newsmen the resolution was introduced by Claude Lightfoot of Chicago, chairman of the Illinois State Committee of the Communist Party.

POLICY MISCONSTRUED

Jackson said the old policy had been based on the premise that Negroes in the Deep South, where in places they outnumber the white population, were entitled to Negro representation and the right to form a separate political entity.

This policy, he said, has been determined to be incorrect because "it has been misconstrued as a form of segregation."

Jackson asserted the effect of the new resolution was that "the Negro people are not a nation, they are an oppressed people within the Nation. They are full members of the American Nation but are deprived of many rights within the Nation."

In another resolution, the convention urged the United States to stay out of Cuba.

RED "NEWSMEN" GO SOUTH, AIM TO ADD TO UNREST

(By Jack Lotto)

Two top Kremlin agents have moved into the southern lunch counter demonstrations in an attempt to provoke bloody racial strife.

The pair, ostensibly newspapermen, are a Russian-born spy recruiter-agitator, and the Red boss of all Negro and southern trouble-making activities.

Simultaneously, Communists and their supporters were told by the Red press to "express your solidarity" with the striking students by joining in the picket line demonstrations."

One of the "agit-prop" men on the scene in the South is Joseph North, 56, the "foreign editor" of The Worker, official mouthpiece of the Communist Party, U.S.A.

The other is James E. Jackson, 45, the newly named propaganda czar of the party, and editor of the Red newspaper. Jackson won't say whether he would side with the United States in a war with Russia.

North has, in the past, shown up at trouble spots. He was in Cuba, meeting with all the Communist brass, setting up the "line" to be followed, a few days after Castro took over.

He served with the Communists during the Spanish Civil War, and was one of the chief agitators in the Scottsboro rape case in the thirties. According to sworn congressional testimony, North helped recruit agents for the international Red espionage apparatus.

Soon after the arrival of North and Jackson in the South, Communist newspapers began blossoming with such headlines as "front line dispatch" and "written directly from the battlefront."

These veteran Communists will try to cash in on the civil rights issue and problems for Moscow's benefit. They can be expected to stir Negro-white animosity in the hope of creating big incidents.

The underlying theme to be pushed in pamphlets, leaflets, and newspapers: The true champions of the Negro people are the Communist Party and the Soviet Union.

The movement of the two agents into the South also showed up another Red lie. It came at a time when the Communist newspaper claimed it was having trouble collecting enough money to keep its presses rolling.

It should be remembered that no member of The Worker goes anywhere merely to write news stories. Also not to be forgotten is the fact the Communists, adroit at exploiting issues of genuine concern to all Americans, have betrayed the Negro's cause whenever it was expedient.

CINCINNATI PASTOR NAMED AS HEAD OF RED FRONT

(By Jack Lotto)

One of the top leaders of the integration movement in the South has been named head of a big pro-Communist front.

He is the Reverend Fred L. Shuttlesworth, 965 Dana Avenue, pastor of the Revelation Baptist Church, 1556 John Street.

The post he was elected to is president of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, with headquarters in New Orleans, and active in 17 Southern States.

Both the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee and the House Committee on Un-American Activities have described the SCEF as an organization set up to promote communism throughout the South.

This group has a long history of activity in the South. It originally was known as the Southern Conference for Human Welfare. One of its founders was a veteran Communist, the late Louis E. Burnham.

When the SCHW was cited as a Communist front in 1947 by the House committee, it ostensibly went out of business.

It quickly reopened at the same New Orleans address, under the new name and with the same telephone number.

According to the Senate subcommittee, the Southern Conference Educational Fund was operating with substantially the same leadership and purposes of its predecessor.

Said the House report on the SCHW:

"It seeks to attract Southern liberals on the basis of its seeming interest in the problems of the South. Its professed interest in Southern welfare is simply an expedient for larger aims serving the Soviet Union and its subservient Communist Party in the United States."

The field secretary for the SCEF, and editor of its publication, the Southern Patriot, is Carl Braden, of Louisville, Ky. Braden, identified in sworn testimony as a member of the Communist Party, recently finished serving a 1 year prison term for contempt of Congress.

New additions to the board of the Southern Conference Educational Fund included the Rev. James A. Zellner, Methodist minister in Panama City, Fla. He is the father of Bob Zellner, the "freedom-walker" active in the "student nonviolence committee," and now serving a jail term in Alabama.

Another board member is Mrs. Diane Bevel, of Cleveland, Miss., active in Nashville student demonstrations, and currently working in Alabama and Mississippi.

She is jailed in Gadsden, Ala., for taking part with Zellner in a prointegration march, following in the steps of William Moore, the postman shot and killed during a one-man protest march.

Communist and pro-Communists are moving into the South to provoke friction between whites and Negroes. On the scene is James E. Jackson, a member of the four-man ruling secretariat of the U.S. Communist Party.

Jackson, who is propaganda boss in the United States for the Reds, is also the party's secretary for southern and Negro affairs—a polite term for chief racial troublemaker.

This Moscow-trained Negro has been in the forefront of Communist organizational and agitational work in the South for years.

In 1959, he went to Russia as the representative of the U.S. Communist Party at the 21st World Congress of Communist Parties. There he hailed the Soviet Union and denounced the United States.

A REDEDICATION TO SPIRITUAL BEGINNINGS

(By Victor Riesel)

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Before Victor Riesel left on a newsgathering tour of South America, he asked FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover for his comments on Independence Day—a holiday often observed by a gaiety which real security makes possible, and a cynicism which could undo both gaiety and security. Here is Mr. Hoover's reply.)

WASHINGTON, July 3.—On July 4, as bells ring out in celebration across the United States, some of us will be reminded that the bell which pealed the first jubilant notes announcing the adoption of the Declaration of Independence in 1776 reached all of the way back into Old Testament days for its message: "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof." (Leviticus, XXV, 10).

That statement, engraved on the bell ordered for the State House at Philadelphia in 1751, is a living reminder that our origins as a nation are spiritual and idealistic. The Founding Fathers believed that man, with God's help, is capable of self-rule, and the blueprint of government which they gave us remains a continuing challenge.

For though the men who projected that magnificent experiment in government gained for us the liberty we currently enjoy, they cannot preserve it for us. They gave us the guidelines for continuance of our freedom in a brief document which has safeguarded that freedom for 174 years.

But we can continue to reap the benefits of the Founding Fathers' knowledge and vision only if we in turn are willing to expend similar effort and to act with intelligence and foresight.

For today, the premise that governments are instituted to secure certain natural rights and that such governments derive "their just powers from the consent of the governed" is under vicious attack. Totaliarian communism is increasing its challenging thrust in many areas.

With mounting intensity, domestic Communists seek to spread their influence among our youth and to exploit racial unrest in the United States. They are unceasing in their efforts to infiltrate and secure a foothold in American labor unions.

Late in 1962, the Communist Party distributed within Party circles a document entitled "To Reestablish the Priority of Working Class Emphasis in the Work of the Communist Party." This document is important. It is a statement on labor policy, and from a careful reading of it we may anticipate forthcoming Communist action in the labor field.

No area of American life is safe from Communist attempts to infiltrate and exploit, and communism thrives best in a world in which faith is in retreat. Therefore, in this week of celebrating the anniversary of a Declaration which holds "these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights," the words of the man whose active leadership made that Declaration live are pertinent. The first President of these United States said:

"It is impossible to govern the world without God. He must be worse than in infidel that lacks faith, and more than wicked that has not gratitude enough to acknowledge his obligation."

This year, as freedom bells ring out in celebration of the birth of this greatest of all Republics, may the living reminder of our spiritual beginnings renew in us the dynamic faith which motivated the Founding Fathers. May we rededicate ourselves to the task of preserving the immortal dream which we inherited.

THAT NORTH CAROLINA CAMP INCIDENT: PROTEST VERSUS INDECENCY OR RIOT OF RACISTS?

A citizens' protest against indecency was twisted in news stories to make it appear as an action of racists, according to the editor of a national anti-Communist biweekly published in Staten Island.

Frank A. Capell, editor of the Herald of Freedom and Metropolitan Review and former chief of the Subversive Activities Control Board of Westchester County, reported on the results of a special edition of his publication dealing with Summerlane School and Camp of Manhattan and Rosman, N.C.

NO CENSORSHIP

The special July 3 issue reproduced promotional literature for the camp, widely advertised as integrated, stating that there is no censorship of any kind and no regulation of private behavior of the teenager campers, and that teachers and counselors "are not expected to hide their weaknesses from the children."

The issue also contained information on George von Hilsheimer, camp director, whom it described as "a former minister who admittedly has engaged in acts of sexual degeneracy, who is a radical and a nihilist." A brochure was quoted saying many of Summerlane's teachers had worked in the Highlander Folk School, cited as a Communist enterprise by the State of Georgia.

Copies of this issue were supplied to the Rosman Chamber of Commerce for distribution to State legislators, judges, prosecuting officers and civic groups. This was done, Mr. Capell said, to provide documentation on which to base a demand for action by the proper authorities.

Mr. Capell reported that protests were made to the camp operators after complaints of gross immorality at the camp in the form of nude mixed bathing (to which a local Baptist minister was reportedly an eyewitness) and a camp newspaper containing a sexual promiscuity theme (not fit for gentlemen to read, according to the local sheriff).

"The conduct at the camp so incensed the local citizens," Mr. Capell continued, "that residents of the camp were warned not to come into town and to stay in the camp to avoid trouble. The campers disregarded the warning and after several incidents the local citizenry took matters into their own hands. Several hundred people marched on the camp, destroyed the main building and told the campers to get out."

"Then," Mr. Capell said, "came the newspaper stories which distorted the protest into a mob action prompted by racism."

MOVE TO RED PICNIC SPOT

A check of the local records, Mr. Capell stated, reveals that reports of injuries were grossly exaggerated in news stories. A stabbing turned out to have been the taking of a knife away from one of the camp counsellors who was then relieved of the seat of his trousers with it, with no personal injury.

He said the campers have found refuge in a New Jersey camp "well known for the number of Communist activities which have taken place there. Camp Midvale is located at Ringwood, N.J., and has long been a favorite vacation and picnic resort of Communist and Communist-front groups. The Communist paper, the Worker, holds its annual picnics there."

The article concerning Summerlane in the Herald of Freedom recommended action by the proper authorities and "bringing such activities to an end by lawful methods," Mr. Capell pointed out. "However," he concluded, "the invaders of the South goad the normally peaceful and religious people into acts of violence by refusing to obey the law and to cooperate with local authorities for their own protection. Their agitation creates violence."

WHO'S LYING?

During the past several weeks Robert F. Kennedy, Attorney General of the United States, testified before the Senate Commerce Committee and stated repeatedly that the Federal Government has no evidence that any of the major civil rights groups are influenced by Communists. In addition, he stated on several occasions that the Communists have been remarkably unsuccessful in efforts to exploit the racial situation.

Contrast these statements with testimony given by J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, on the same subject matter. On January 24, 1962, Hoover testified before the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, as follows:

"Since its inception the Communist Party, U.S.A., has been alert to capitalize on every possible issue or event which could be used to exploit the American Negro in furtherance of party aims. In its efforts to influence the American Negro, the party attempts to infiltrate the legitimate Negro organizations for the purpose of stirring up racial prejudice and hatred. In this way, the party strikes a blow at our democratic form of government by attempting to influence public opinion throughout the world against the United States."

On two earlier occasions, Hoover testified before the same committee along the same line. On January 16, 1958, he said:

"The Negro situation is also being exploited fully and continuously by Communists on a national scale. Current programs include intensified attempts to infiltrate Negro mass organizations. The party's objectives are not to aid the Negroes—but are designed to take advantage of all controversial issues on the race question in the minds of the American people."

On March 3, 1961, Hoover told the same committee:

"The sit-in demonstrations in the South were a made-to-order issue which the party fully exploited to further its ends."

The Committee on Un-American Activities of the House of Representatives and the Internal Security Subcommittee of the Senate have published voluminous documentary evidence supporting fully the testimony of Hoover. This newspaper has just received the latest publication of the Committee on Un-American Activities, dated July 31, 1963, and containing the testimony before the committee of how the Communist Party in California has successfully extended its influence into additional Negro civil liberties units.

For the information of those who might feel that the Attorney General is simply misinformed, we point out that the Federal Bureau of Investigation is a part of the Department of Justice, which is headed by the Attorney General, and the Attorney General has access to the same information as the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Our readers have a choice. They can believe Kennedy, one of the most cynical politicians and inept Attorney Generals in the history of the United States, or they can believe Hoover, one of the finest law enforcement officers in the history of this or any other country, and a man of the greatest integrity.

As for this newspaper, we made the obvious choice a long time ago.

WORLD COMMUNIST MOVEMENT—SELECTIVE CHRONOLOGY 1818–1957

(Prepared by the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress)

YEAR 1928

During the Communist Party presidential campaign, American Communists advanced the Comintern policy on Negro self-determination. In pursuance of Comintern instruction the party made every effort to attract the Negro masses. * * * The campaign for a Negro republic in the South was tied up with a campaign in the party ranks against white chauvinism. Party members who failed to carry out the Negro policy or disagreed with it were accused of white chauvinism. * * * The Negro question was injected into every situation, in every campaign. The Negroes were looked upon as the chosen people who were to be the vanguard of the Communist revolution. Party members were urged to make every effort to establish personal as well as social relations with the Negroes. Negroes were brought into the party, not on the basis of their Communist convictions, but on the promise that in the party they could enjoy a sociable evening together with whites on a basis of equality. Negroes who had recently joined the party were pushed into places of leadership simply because they were Negroes and as a demonstration that the Negroes enjoyed preferred treatment in the party. This was done not out of sympathy or consideration for the Negro masses, but for purely political reasons.

Behind the Negro agitation and the stress laid on exploiting the Negro issue was the desire to comply with the orders from Moscow. It was hoped through Negro minorities movement in the United States to give leadership to a colored Nationalist movement of world proportions in the countries of South and Central America, Africa, Asia, and the Antipodes. The American Nationalist Negro movement, Moscow believed, would provide the leadership for such a world movement. Besides, the Communist Party could dominate the American Negro movement, because it was believed possible for a small handful of American Communists to organize and control the 2 million Negro workers in American industry, which force could be the most decisive in the broader worldwide Negro movement * * *. Said the Comintern resolution:

"To the extent to which the party succeeds in developing a strong revolutionary Negro movement in the United States, it will also be able to exert a decisive influence upon the revolutionary movement of the Negroes in all parts of the world."

It was hoped by the development of this Negro Nationalist movement on a world scale to bring millions of new supporters in defense of the Soviet Union, ardent supporters, who could actually fight against Russia's enemies over a farflung territory. The Negro Nationalist movement was thus part and parcel of Russian political imperialism. (G: 480–483.)

THE NEGRO QUESTION—COMMUNIST CIVIL WAR POLICY

(By Benjamin Gitlow)

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—What is behind the Negro civil rights bill? Does it mean the beginning of U.S. revolution? Does it put an end to the U.S. Constitution?

(The Communist International in Moscow, in 1921, instructed the American Communists to organize and head the Negro masses. They have fanned the flame of impoverishment and exploitation ever since. The Communists are, therefore, championing the cause of the Negroes in America, not as part of a democratic movement, but as an important part of their drive to mobilize both colored and white for proletarian revolution and the overthrow of our Government. The Communists have no intention of conducting a constitutional battle for Negro rights and justice. To them the Constitution is a scrap of paper to use when it serves their purpose, to disregard it and violate it whenever it suits them. Since the U.S. Constitution and Bill of Rights provides a clear and equitable civil rights program for all citizens of the United States, after reading the enclosure it will become clear that the Kennedy civil rights bill can serve only one purpose: The Communist conspiracy.

(Concerning the author: For 11 years Benjamin Gitlow was a Communist—the first in the United States to be convicted and imprisoned for such membership. He held the highest position in the Communist Party in the United States—that of general secretary of the party. Mr. Gitlow holds another distinction—that of being one of the few persons to split with Josef Stalin and live to tell it. In 1929 Stalin summoned Mr. Gitlow to Moscow. In the ensuing meeting, Gitlow refused to accept orders from the Red leader—hence the split. It was in 1939 that Mr. Gitlow wrote his first book—"I Confess," which told of his personal background as a Communist, and gave the public the first real insight of the workings of the Reds in this country. In 1940 he gave the House Un-American Activities Committee the complete story of the Communist Party in the United States and their plans to rule America.)

The Negro question is a most distressing problem for the American people. For the country it is a problem of great magnitude. Its political consequences in the affairs of our Government and in the arena of world politics cannot be ignored. We in the United States will have to deal with the Negro problem boldy and realistically. To exploit the Negro question, like a politician for expediency only and as an opportunistic leverage for vote getting as is too often the practice of our major political parties, will solve nothing and will eventually lead to a greatly aggravated crisis in race relations and in our relations with many nations. The immediate result of the continuance of such crass opportunistic policies will be the inflamming of our population and the dividing our people, at a time when a united, patriotic citizenry is badly needed to defend and preserve our liberties.

In this article I propose to deal with aspects of the Negro question that receive top priority from the Communists. I do so, fully conscious of the fact that to treat certain phases of the Negro question analytically and critically, especially as it affects our country's security and our posture in the cold war, is to arouse the ire of many individuals and organizations today in the forefront of the civil rights movement, the term by which the Negro question is erroneously called. Many of these civil rights forces who are recklessly spreading dissension among our people, and who are pushing their campaigns in utter disregard for the defense and security needs of the country, will, I am sure, attempt to distort any objective presentation and critical analysis of the Negro problem, on my part, into a smear campaign, charging that the writer is a racist, a white chauvinist, an ultra rightist opposed to integration and civil right.

Against such a ridiculous, premediated smear a defense on my part is absolutely unnecessary. Let it be here noted—the examples are too numerous to cite—that to libel genuine anti-Communists in the vilest language is welcomed by the liberal intellectuals, who are proficient in this practice, and the press which favorably publicizes their calumnies.

On the other hand, in the world of the liberal traumatic miasma, to tell the truth about Communist, Communazi liberals and the host of fellow travelers who idealize Communist and totalitarian manifestations at home and abroad, is scandalous, McCartyism at its worst, a repudiation of American ideals and traditions, character assassination and libelous.

Fully aware of attacks upon me personally that will follow the publication of this article, I have decided, nevertheless, to write it because the Communists and their supporters with the full backing of Khrushchev have emarked upon a campaign to exploit the Negro problem as a vehicle for national liberation. They intend to arouse to a fever heat the nationalist and chauvinist sentiments now finding expression in segments of the Negro population into a drive for the separation of the Negroes from the whites through the establishment of an independent Negro republic in the United States. They are hopeful that an intensified nationalist drive among the American Negroes will accelerate the build-up in Latin America and in Africa of the anti-American campaign to such an extent that it will aid the Communist imperialist efforts on these two continents. But what is much more important is the fact that the Communists are deliberately maneuvering among the American Negroes to create a situation for the outbreak of racial violence, to such an extent that it can be turned into a civil war—a civil war on a racial basis involved with profound political and revolutionary consequences. In such a civil war, should they succeed in fomenting it, the Communists hope to so undermine the American Government and our social structure that they can take over power. In the racial civil war they envisage, they are sure Negroes will be in the front ranks, the shock troops of the Communist revolution.

This Communist diabolic policy is a calculated and deliberate policy. In the final analysis it will not bring justice and political equality to the Negro. It is bound to bring on bloody strife in which the Negroes will be the main losers, and should the Communists win, enslavement of the Negroes and whites alike will take place and all Americans will live without rights, under a Communist dictatorship.

A historical outline, at this time, of the Communist role in the Negro question will, I am sure, help the reader to a better understanding of the Communist position.

The Communist International in Moscow in 1921, instructed the American Communists to organize and lead the Negro masses. For that special purpose money was liberally provided by the Comintern. The Communists took the position that the Negroes, constituting the most impoverished and exploited section of our population—a section with special problems and grievances because of racial discrimination—would constitute, once properly organized and led, the front rank fighters in a revolution to overthrow the United States Government and replace it with a Soviet form of dictatorship. To carry out the Comintern's instructions, the American Communist Party created a Negro department, organized special Negro organizations, published Negro papers and periodicals and conducted a drive for Negroes to join the party, giving them, if they did so, jobs and all kinds of special inducements. Every Negro member brought into the party was hailed as an achievement.

The Communist policy in the early years up to 1928 on the Negro question was that the Negroes should be accorded full racial, social, and political equality with the whites.

At the Sixth World Congress of the Communist International held in Moscow during the late summer of 1928, a special commission was set up to study the American Negro question. Joseph Stalin was a member of the commission on which the American Communist Party was well represented.

I was not in Moscow at that time because I was touring the country as the vice presidential candidate of the Communist Party. While I was campaigning in the South, I received a telegram from the national office of the Communist Party that to our regular Negro demands for equality, etc., I should add the right of the Negroes to national self-determination, the ultimate objective of which was, naturally, the establishment of a Negro government in the Black Belt of the South. The policy, though it originated in Moscow, did not appeal to me. I considered the demand for a Negro republic dynamite, dynamite that would be so explosive in the South, once a considerable number of the Negroes accepted it, that it would do the Negroes more harm than good.

At the close of the vice presidential campaign I was conducting, I returned to New York and went into a huddle on the Negro question with the leaders of the American Communist Party. I asked: "What do you seek to accomplish with this policy? Create a situation in the South where you will bring about a civil war between the whites and the blacks? Do you realize where that will lead to? Do you not realize that such a policy will lead to the butchery and massacre of thousands of Negroes?"

John Pepper, whose real name was Joseph Pogany, a leader of the terrorists in the first Red Hungarian revolution under Bela Kuhn, was attached by the Comintern to the leadership of the American Communist Party. He was a member of the Negro commission, as was Stalin—the commission that handed down the decision. I already had learned that the decision for the establishment of a Negro republic in the United States was formulated by Stalin and that he forced its adoption. So Pepper answered me calmly in these words:

"Comrade Gitlow, there is much truth in what you say but we could not help ourselves in Moscow."

In addition, the 1928 Stalin resolution laying down binding instructions upon the American Communist Party contained the following:

"To the extent to which the party succeeds in developing a strong revolutionary movement in the United States, it will also be able to exert a decisive influence upon the revolutionary movement of the Negroes in all parts of the world."

Stalin hoped by utilizing Negro nationalism in the United States to develop revolutionary Negro nationalist movements on a world scale and through such movements to mobilize millions of ardent supporters for the Soviet Union. The revolutionary Negro nationalist movement which the Communists began in earnest to organize in the United States, in South America, in Africa, and wherever Negroes lived, became a most important arm of Soviet political imperialism.

I have put down in very brief outline the historical facts that constitute the background of the basic, the unchangeable position on the American Negro question of the American Communists and their comrades throughout the world, including, of course, their Soviet masters.

Until recently, the Communist policy in the United States has been to soft-pedal their demand for the establishment of a Negro, nationalist, separationist movement, a movement determined to oust the whites from the South, expropriate their lands and property and establish a Negro republic under Communist hegemony.

It appears that now the time has come for the American Communists to accent the loud pedal on Negro nationhood.

Claude Lightfoot, one of the top leaders of the American Communist Party and a guiding spirit in its Negro department, a Negro himself, states the present position of the Communists on the Negro question in this manner in an article in the July 1962 issue of "Political Affairs," the theoretical and outstanding political monthly of the Communist Party.

"Back in the early 1930's the Communist Party of the United States projected the idea that the Negro constituted an oppressed nation within a nation. The homeland of this nation was seen as embracing what was commonly called the black area of the South. The black belt at that time consisted of over 200 counties, crossing several States. It was an area of Negro majority. The Communist Party adopted this position in 1930." (This is an error on Lightfoot's part. The American Communist Party never originated this decision. It was handed down as binding instructions to the American Communist Party by Moscow in 1928, as I have already stated.)

He further explains that during the period of World War II the demand for a Negro republic was dropped. What Lightfoot deliberately forgets to state is that the demand was put in cold storage after Hitler attacked the Soviet Union and the Soviet Union became one of our allies. Then Lightfoot adds: "In 1946 the Communist Party reexamined its position on this question (that is after the war was over) and reaffirmed its previous position. Although the question of nationhood was reaffirmed this time certain modifications were made. * * * The Communist Party now declared that what we are witnessing was a young nation in its earliest stage of development and because of this consciousness lagged behind objective developments. Notwithstanding these new observations the party continued to place the slogan of self-determination in the forefront of its general program."

That statement by Lightfoot is not an equivocal statement. It states categorically that the slogan of self-determination for the Negro, that is, for the establishment of a Negro republic in the black belt of the South, is in the forefront of the American Communist Party's general program. In other words in the forefront of the general Communist program for the communizing of the United States is the demand for the establishment of a Negro republic in the South. Why does the program of self-determination for the American Negroes hold such high priority for the Communists? Because that objective cannot under any circumstances be achieved without bloodshed and civil war, and civil war to achieve Communist power is a basic major policy for the American Communist Party and so recognized in its program.

One must know how to read the Communist language. I believe I know how to read Communist language, how to digest it and get at its real meaning. Few persons do. And the sad part of the story is that those who make policy for our Government, who are responsible for guiding our ship of state through the perilous storms of the cold war, have not yet learned how to read and understand Communist language, a language unique in its logic, subtle in the use and meaning of words, in which every "i" dotted, every comma, every punctuation mark has a meaning all its own.

Lightfoot continues in this vein and I quote:

"And so in 1959 the Communists adopted a position which discarded the slogan of self-determination."

Particularly note that the slogan, not the policy, was discarded. The slogan, to tell the truth, was actually not discarded but filed away for future uses when the time would be more propitious for its exploitation. That time was not long in coming. It has already arrived because the slogan for a Negro republic has been removed from moth balls and is once again being proclaimed loudly from the Communist housetops. Why?

For the answer let us return to Lightfoot who writes:

"One must now take into account a powerful nationalist current which is becoming increasingly significant.

"The Muslim leadership and doctrine is the most significant source of a trend to the contrary within the ranks of the Negro people. (Contrary to the opposition to the Communist policy for a Negro republic that existed among the Negroes before). The heart of the program advanced by the Muslims calls for the establishment of a Negro nation, separate and apart from other white Americans."

One can begin to understand what the Communist Party is aiming at. It aims to make an alliance with the Black Muslim movement in order to draw it into the Communist orbit. But Communist aims go even further. The Communists see in the increasing popular support the Muslims have in the Negro community an opportunity of linking up the nationalist struggle of the Muslims, and those under their influence, with the world revolutionary struggle of the black people being engineered by the Communists against the United States as part of the Soviet effort to undermine U.S. influence in strategic areas of the globe.

This factor is indeed underlined by Lightfoot when he writes: "Nationalism is rising in the Negro community not entirely out of context with the problems flowing from the basic structure of American Negro life, but it is a fact that nationalism today is influenced more by external factors * * *. The national character of the Negro struggle is still an overall characteristic."

It is necessary here, before we examine what the Communist policy on the Negro question has in store for the United States, to determine the basic elements of the policy.

As has already been stated Stalin was the originator of the American Communist Party policy on the Negro question. Writing an article on "Estimating Stalin," William Weinstone, a top American Communist gave this estimate of Stalin in the May 1962 issue of "Political Affairs."

"His [Stalin's] pamphlet written in 1912 on Marxism and the national question, which Lenin praised, remains a classic of Marxism. His 'Foundation of Leninism' which helped train generations of Communists in its time * * * is also a great work."

We will, therefore, turn to Stalin's "Foundations of Leninism" as an authority on the basic foundation of the Communist position on the Negro question. On page 286 the following is written:

"It is obvious that those who look upon the nationalist question as an integral part of the general question of proletarian revolution, will never be willing to look upon it as a mere matter of constitutional adjustment."

To use Stalin's words—it is therefore obvious that the American Communists when they fight so loudly and militantly for civil rights, for integration, for the Constitution, are perpetrating a hoax on the Negroes. What they are diligently preparing, by their activities in the civil rights field, are conditions favorable for civil war and revolution. This is obviously true because the Communists, by exploiting the justified complaints of the Negro people and the humane instincts of the American people, seek, because they champion national self-determination for the Negroes, an outcome that is not a matter of constitutional adjustment; they seek revolutionary results that do not square with the legal process—for their real aim is civil war and revolution. That is the essence of the Communist position. They are setting a trap for ensnaring the Negro masses into the Communist conspiracy. They are committing a colossal fraud upon the American people.

To further underline the Communist position on the Negro question, I herewith underscore the fundamentals outlined by Stalin:

"The national question must not be considered as an isolated phenomenon but as one which is indissolubly intertwined with the question of the victory of the revolution" ("Fundamentals of Leninism," p. 288).

Stalin emphasized as most important this statement used by Zinoviev, chairman of the Comintern: "The national question is a revolutionary problem, not a constitutional one."

It should now be clear to every reader that the Communists have no intention of conducting a constitutional battle for Negro rights and justice. To them the Constitution is a scrap of paper to use when it serves their purpose, to disregard it and violate it whenever it suits them.

The Communists in their propaganda on the Negro question try to impress the American people and the Negroes in particular that they are for justice for the Negro, for giving the Negro full democratic rights, for raising his status and giving him equal social standing with the whites. This propaganda is all camouflage, all lies.

Here is what Lenin, the Communist genius, stated unequivocally in the basic Communist position as reported by Stalin:

"Herein he (Lenin) declared that the essential point of the nationalist question, in general, and of the right of self-determination in particular, was that they had ceased to be parts of the democratic movement, and had become vital constituents of the proletarian movement, of the Socialist revolution," "Fundamental of Leninism," page 290.

The Communists are, therefore, championing the cause of the Negroes in America, not as part of a democratic movement, but as an important part of their drive to mobilize both colored and white for proletarian revolution and the overthrow of our Government.

And using Aesopian language, because the Black Muslims reject the movements on civil rights which the Communists support, Lightfoot concludes as follows:

"Thus nationalism, as expressed today in the United States, unlike in Africa and other places, is an obstacle in the path toward freedom.

"But this does not necessarily have to be so. A nationalist movement which would direct its fire at the source of our oppression, the white ruling class, would have a positive progressive value.

"And so those of us (the Communists) who feel that we can see through today's frustrations to a brighter tomorrow are duty bound to go among our Muslim brothers and to help light an understanding among them. For in winning them to more positive concepts we will help to enlist people who hold nationalist sentiments in the great battle for freedom in the United States.

We have Lightfoot's words for it that the American Communists are seeking to join hands with the Muslim Brotherhood, an organization that thrives on Negro chauvinism, hatred of all whites and separation from the United States. The Communists hope to direct the fire of the Muslim movement against the white ruling class. That is another way of saying against the U.S. Government. This is the important and immediate objective of the American Communist Party among the Negroes.

It is necessary to examine the Communist Negro policy a little more closely. Their policy on the Negro question is based on a false premise. It cannot stand up when considered in the light of U.S. vital population statistics.

The total Negro population of the United States in April 1960 was 18,871,831 representing 10½ percent of our total population. There is not a single State in the Union where the Negroes constitute a majority of the population. The Negroes are Americans and should enjoy all the privileges of American citizenship. They are, however, not an indigenous group in spite of the numerical numbers. It has no basis in origin, land, special language or culture warranting a legal status for separation as a distinct independent nation within the United States, as the Communists demand.

Under our Constitution there is absolutely no legal basis whatsoever for such separation. Any serious attempt in that direction, as the Communists propose, is bound to break out into racial violence and a great loss of life. This the Communists are fully aware of, yet they advocate that step and are prepared to make the gamble. They are willing to make that gamble because the Communists are disloyal Americans who have pledged their loyalty to a foreign power, the Soviet Union. Furthermore, they are under orders from their Russian masters to pursue such a policy regardless of the consequences. And, finally, since civil war is the main objective in setting the stage for the Communist assumption of power, nothing could foment civil strife and division among the American people better, than to inflame the Negro masses against the white ruling class by promising them heaven in the United States in a separate, independent Negro republic.

But you may insist, since Khrushchev has assumed high command over the Communist empire, a more rational and civilized attitude toward the world and its people may be expected. Nothing could be further from the truth, for on the Negro question Khrushchev sees eye to eye with Stalin and the American Communists. In Khrushchev's "Fundamentals of Marxism-Leninism" published 1961, on page 489, the following appears:

"The reactionary bourgeoisie is altogether incapable of solving the national question, as is eloquently attested by the gravity of the Negro question in the United States of America."

Khrushchev, who wants self-determination for the Negroes in the United States where there is absolutely no basis for it, refuses self-determination to the people in East Germany where there is a real, a fundamental basis for it. To prevent their desire for national liberation he builds a wall around East Berlin, locks the entire border of East Germany with soldiers and bristling steel and tanks, thereby imprisoning a population of over 17 million people.

Yea, the ways of the Communists lack logic and reason. But of one thing you may be sure, they know where they are going and they are hellbent on getting there even if they have to drown the American Negroes in their own blood to get the power they covet.

[From the Washington (D.C.) Evening Star, Aug. 5, 1963]

COMMUNIST RIGHTERS?

Nothing the Government has said on the subject has removed every doubt that Communists are playing a part in the civil rights movement. On the contrary, even the denials during the Senate Commerce Committee hearings have been, on close scrutiny, somewhat less than categorical.

Senator MONRONEY, of Oklahoma, promptly and correctly challenged the statements of two Southern Governors charging that this summer's demonstrations have been Communist-inspired. In answer to the Senator's request for an FBI check, Attorney General Kennedy replied: "Based on all available information from the FBI and other sources, we have no evidence that any of the top leaders of the major civil rights groups are Communists, or Communist-controlled. This is true as to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., about whom particular accusations were made, as well as other leaders." This statement, however, refers only to "top leaders." By implication, this suggests that some of those beneath the top echelon are Communists.

At another point Mr. Kennedy said: "It is natural and inevitable that Communists have made efforts to infiltrate the civil rights groups and to exploit the current racial situation. In view of the real injustices that exist and the resentment against them, these efforts have been remarkably unsuccessful."

Here again, at first blush, this would appear to be a denial of Communist penetration. But it could also mean that infiltration has not been as successful as Communists hoped it would be.

One Mississippi State legislator has labeled Mr. Kennedy's statement a "whitewash." We do not believe this. But the FBI information on Communist penetration of the rights movement should be made public. All concerned—both white and colored—have a right to know just who is working for the Kremlin in this matter.

HIGHLANDER DESEGREGATION: WITH THAT JOIE DE VIVRE AND TAX EXEMPTION TOO

Highlander Folk School, it seems, has always been able to work a little "joie de vivre" into its mission. A pioneer in the field of integration, its avowed good works were undertaken in the early thirties, long before the Supreme Court confirmed the practices of the institution with stern orders for the mixing of the races.

While many alumni have gone forth to remake the world by participating in deadly serious demonstrations, in some cases with the grim assistance at times of Federal troops, the loyal Highlander must look back with longing to the days of good fellowship and congeniality at the old alma mater.

For example, there was the Labor Day celebration in 1957. Recently sworn testimony before a congressional committee was to the effect that the now famous Dr. Martin Luther King was there, along with an alleged Communist or two and a considerable representation from Red-front organizations.

But as usual, at the idealistic refuge on the mountain not far from Monteagle, the agenda did not call for all work and no play. Photographic evidence shows breaks for dancing, swimming, and other forms of relaxation. During the court hearing that ended in padlocking the school, the picture presented was hardly that of a religious convocation.

But when the place was closed by law, the director was undaunted. With whatever assets remained, he removed to Knoxville and set up the Highlander Research & Education Center. In a recent letter to friends and contributors, he proclaimed the Highlander "idea" had been "born anew, like Phoenix rising out of the ashes."

The communication also contained the glad tidings that Mr. Kennedy's Internal Revenue Service had concluded the Center need not pay income taxes and that all who wished to have a part in furthering a good cause could deduct their donations on their annual returns.

That must have been inspiring news for the harassed businessman who needs to relax on a trip occasionally and entertain a few faithful customers. Then while the taxpayer might have been fretting about discrimination on the matter of deductible pleasure, some Highlander researchers decided that all work and no play tends to dull the edge of ideals.

Knoxville newspapers bloomed out a few weeks ago with headlines about a Highlander camp in neighboring Blount County that caught the attention of the high sheriff. He decided to make an unannounced call, accompanied by deputies, with the net result that a group of Negroes and whites were hauled into court. Seven were bound over to the grand jury. There would have been eight, except that a judge was shocked to learn that one of the white girls was only 15 years old. Then there were seven. The charge: contributing to the delinquency of a minor. Some fines were also assessed for lewdness, disorderly conduct, and possession of whisky.

A story in the Knoxville Journal quoted the judge as saying that the involvement of Negroes and whites had no effect upon his decisions, and that anonymous efforts to intimidate him by telephone had been useless. Then came the statement from the bench that there had been "scandalous and lewd" activity at the camp and the officers charged only those they could identify.

Faced with the consequences of desegregation with joie de vivre, Director Horton told the court the camp was set up so people from the North and the South, as well as college students from all over the country, could get closer together and discuss their problems.

There is no indication as yet, however, that the explanatory plea for tax exempt togetherness will satisfy the demands of the legal and moral standards of historic Blount County.

MILITARY CONTROL OF CIVILIAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, on last Wednesday, the distinguished junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] made an eloquent plea on the Senate floor for the President and Defense Secretary McNamara to withdraw the ruling issued by McNamara's order which would make it possible to place communities near defense installations off limits, if these communities should refuse to integrate its private business establishments and also presumably its locally controlled public facilities. As these remarks were printed in the body of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in today's RECORD the following articles in support of the views expressed on that occasion by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi and others who participated in this discussion:

"Report Advances Race Amalgamation," which was printed in the August 2, 1963, issue of the Birmingham Post Herald.

"McNamara Exceeds Authority," which was printed in the Tampa Times on July 29, 1963.

"Political Use of Defense Bases" as printed in the August 4, 1963, issue of the News and Courier.

"Preview of Police State," which was printed in the August 2, 1963, issue of the News and Courier.

"Tax Returns No Club for Integrationist Wielding," as printed in the August 2, 1963, issue of Nashville Banner.

"Attorney General of the Air Force" as printed in the August 6, 1963, issue of the Aiken Standard and Review.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Birmingham Post Herald, Aug. 2, 1963]

REPORT ADVANCES RACE AMALGAMATION

The report of the President's Committee on Equal Opportunities in the Armed Forces (now being called the Gesell report) seeks integration "for the amalgamation of the races" and not merely to secure equal opportunity for Negroes in the services, charges Edward M. Almond, of Anniston, retired lieutenant general in the U.S. Army.

General Almond, who was commander of the 92d Division during World War II, has made a detailed analysis of the report and condemns many of its recommendations.

The report apparently is the basis for the action of Defense Secretary Robert McNamara in threatening to put "off limits" to service personnel, cities where segregation practices are followed.

Some of General Almond's criticisms of the report:

"It demands in the name of 'equal opportunity' a higher percentage of Negro promotions than education, age in service, and the more fundamental consideration of merit.

FEW VERIFIED

"It invokes responsibilities and makes demands on post and area commanders by coercive methods to force integration on civilian communities by 'threat and blackmail.'

"It quotes injustices repeatedly but at the same time admits that the Committee has verified very few and many times none of the facts.

"It does not envisage a real evaluation of the individual Negro based on merit, but repeatedly speaks of opportunities and 'latent' skills inherent in the Negro.

"It strongly recommends a 'spy system' to be called 'monitoring' with an especially sympathetic monitor throughout the range of troop levels in order to report on responsible commanders as to how they carry out their functions.

"It strongly recommends that those responsible for integrating Negroes among white elements of commands be given to understand that such accomplishments will rebound to the credit of the author of such plans for the purpose of furthering his promotion.

NO WAY OF KNOWING

"It emphasizes repeatedly that Negroes should operate without reference to race and that there should be no record of blood or race on the Negro's record of service. Later on in the report it complains of the inability to determine what cases there are which have been committed against Negroes, since it has no way of determining from the military record whether the individual is a Negro or not.

"It goes on further to claim that the absence of such a record has cost untold time and money to accumulate such information for the purposes of the report."

Those signing the report were: Gerhard A. Gesell, Chairman; Nathaniel S. Colley, Abe Fortas, Louis L. Hector, Benjamin Muse, John H. Sengstache, Whitney M. Young, and Lawrence I. Hewes III, committee counsel.

Mr. Gesell, the Chairman, is a Washington attorney.

RECOMMENDATIONS CITED

Following are some of the recommendations of the report, according to Representative JOE D. WAGGONNER, of Louisiana, as quoted in the New Orleans Times-Picayune:

More recruiting should be directed toward Negroes to correct the "insufficient flow" of Negroes into the services and to increase the "pitifully small" number of Negro officers.

Negroes should be located in jobs throughout the services regardless of their individual preferences in order to have a few everywhere and in all positions.

Promotion boards should have more Negroes on them because white officers "consciously or unconsciously" discriminate against Negroes on promotions.

Special officers should be appointed (with biracial staffs) on every base to handle all complaints by the Negroes.

Such complaints are to be "encouraged."

More Negro girls are to be brought on bases for social functions and fewer girls who believe in segregation.

NEGRO HOSTESSES FAVORED

Negro hostesses should be considered, rather than white.

Military police patrols used in neighboring communities should be integrated.

Segregated buses should be boycotted.

Civic clubs should not be joined if they are segregated.

The practice of Negroes gravitating to one base service club and whites to another should not be permitted, even though this might be of their own choosing.

Methods are suggested for getting around segregated housing by renting homes in the name of the Government and moving Negroes in.

ROTC units should be canceled in segregated schools.

The efforts of officers to bring about integration should be constantly reviewed and rated. Promotions should be based on their "initiative" and "accomplishments" in this field.

Military personnel should be allowed to patronize only those local establishments which are "integrated" and have the "express approval" of the base commander. All others should be placed off limits.

Approved stores should display placards or decals on their windows and doors to show they have the approval of the military.

MCNAMARA EXCEEDS AUTHORITY

Defense Secretary McNamara's order declaring communities which practice "relentless discrimination" off limits to members of the armed services is almost laughable. But any tendency toward merriment is drowned in the realization of how far the Federal Government is willing to go to enforce its will on the American public.

What Secretary McNamara actually proposes is economic blackmail of communities which insist upon maintaining their own standards and traditions. This is a weapon being brandished with increasing frequency by Federal agencies which have wormed their way into the active life of every community in the United States.

The Secretary proposes to establish himself as judge, jury, and prosecutor. He is prepared to issue and enforce an edict from which there is no appeal. We suspect the authors of the U.S. Constitution would recoil in horror from such an act.

We offer no defense of any community which practices "relentless discrimination." However, we do insist that where such abuses occur they should be attacked through normal judicial channels. The courts of this Nation are not paralyzed to such an extent that a Federal bureaucrat must apply martial law to suppress real or imagined evils.

And that is what Secretary McNamara is doing.

What is "relentless discrimination"?

Obviously, Mr. McNamara's action is related to the current wave of racial strife and demonstrations by Negro groups seeking, in some cases, full rights of citizenship and, in others, preferential treatment.

Does Secretary McNamara propose to dictate the hiring practices of a community? Would he use his power of blackmail to take the issue of school integration out of the hands of the Federal courts and place it with the military? Is he to sit in judgment of housing distribution within a community?

We are in total sympathy with the individual Negro's desire to improve his position and we believe that the individual Negro pursuing this ambition deserves the encouragement of his total community and recognition of goals achieved. But we do not believe his dreams or ambitions will be advanced through threats such as Secretary McNamara has issued. Such orders will arouse general antagonism even in areas where there is no "relentless discrimination."

Mr. McNamara seems to forget that the Government is not a private corporation and that he and the Kennedy brothers are not its principal shareholders. The Government belongs to all the people. As such, it should be responsive to the will of the people rather than expect the people to respond to its will. We see no basis for the Federal Government specifying codes of conduct for men, businesses, or communities beyond its constitutional limits.

Following the same principle which Mr. McNamara is applying in his "relentless discrimination" order, he might just as well declare that the Government will not purchase from firms which employ red-headed secretaries in preference to blondes. The point is that there are some things which are none of Mr. McNamara's business.

We have lived a long time within the framework of the present Constitution and have registered unmatched progress. There is no reason to junk it now in favor of government by Executive order which bypasses the legislative and judicial branches.

Secretary McNamara would be well advised to withdraw his "relentless discrimination" boycott order and confess that he has wandered far afield from his normal duties as head of the Defense Department.

We are certain that his retreat will not make life one bit more difficult for members of the Negro race. But we feel that enforcement of his order will injure the rights of citizenship of both white and colored people by establishment of a dangerous precedent. For, if the Secretary of Defense exercises economic blackmail to apply his will, how much longer will it be before the Secretary of Defense is backing up his orders to the American people with Armed Forces?

The doors of the courts are wide open to handle cases of "relentless discrimination," Mr. McNamara. Until they are closed, there is no excuse for a member of the Cabinet attempting to usurp their prerogatives.

POLITICAL USE OF DEFENSE BASES

(An editorial from the Charlotte News)

Defense Secretary McNamara's latest directive bids fair to make Humpty Dumptys of military base commanders in the United States. In a precise defense of imprecise language, the original Humpty declared: "When I use a word, it means just what I choose it to mean—nothing more or less."

So it will be with the base commanders, who have been authorized by Mr. McNamara to declare "off limits" any area—or community—which practices "relentless discrimination" against Negroes.

"Relentless" in this instance, as the Greensboro Daily News rightly notes, is a "weasel word." It means whatever Secretary McNamara chooses it to mean, and the meaning can change from commander to commander—subject, of course, to higher level approval where the meaning well might change again.

The probability of unequal application of the directive is obvious. But the meaning of Mr. McNamara's words is not a point upon which debate ought to be impaled. It needs to be directed, instead, at the improper assumption that the social and civil ills of this Nation fall within the province of military concern.

Those ills, of course, are none of the military's business, unless Congress so declares by legislation or the President, in his capacity as commander in chief, so declares by Executive order. Neither Congress nor the President has made such a declaration.

The Defense Department's sole reason for being it to protect this Nation and this Government against foreign attack or domestic revolt. It is neither required nor authorized to use its considerable economic power to achieve political ends or social and civil reform which, at this time, not even Congress has endorsed as a goal properly within the purview of Federal authority.

[From the Charleston (S.C.) News and Courier, Aug. 2, 1963]

PREVIEW OF POLICE STATE

Orders from Washington to inject the armed services into local public school problems is the latest sample of Government dictation. It is, we are confident, by no means the last.

While citizens are marching in the streets of cities of both North and South, and gearing up perhaps for full-scale race riots, the Kennedy administration is proceeding with its practice runs for the police state in America.

We use these strong terms advisedly. An administration that will direct the Armed Forces to intervene in social and political matters on the scale already announced in the current controversy will not stop at policing the color problem. Once the habit is formed of employing the Armed Forces for domestic purposes instead of protecting the country against foreign enemies, the concentration camp and the firing squad begin to move closer.

Couched in language that seems harmless enough, a Department of Defense order published yesterday in the News and Courier instructs commanders to advise parents under their command of "the constitutional rights of their children to be assigned to school without regard to race." These "constitutional rights"—though supposedly settled by the 1954 decision of the Supreme Court—still are being argued in the courts. Yet Army, Navy and Air Force officers are being commanded to interpret them and see that they are enforced in local communities where military bases are situated. Other directives already have threatened to use the economic weapon, by putting off limits places of business that cater to patrons of only one race.

Meanwhile, in Congress, the so-called civil rights bill is under consideration to give the force of statutory law to Government management of private business policies. As we understand this legislation, it would deny the civil right of a jury trial to businessmen charged with violation of rules for employment and accommodation.

Putting together the removal of protection by juries and the enforcement of Government civil policies by the armed services, a concerned citizen hardly can escape the conclusion that the United States of America is fast becoming a police state in the literal sense of the term.

[From the Nashville Banner, Aug. 2, 1963]

TAX RETURNS NO CLUB FOR INTEGRATIONIST WIELDING

To the docket of coercive devices employed or attempted by the Kennedy team in behalf of its desegregation pitch, now is added the charge that it is using previously secret income tax returns of businessmen to make them integrate their facilities near military bases.

And to Senator BARRY GOLDWATER's urgent suggestion that the Senate investigate that, as well as kindred tactics visited on these areas as policy, through the Pentagon, a concerned public can only reply "It is time somebody investigated them."

Congress through its appropriate committees has that authority—backed with subpena power.

Congress writes the laws, including, certainly, the tax statutes. It also has the responsibiilty of guarding these against abuse, or misuse for punitive purpose—as a blunt instrument held over individual or community heads.

Moreover, the Defense Department is answerable to Congress for digressing into new policy areas of sociological challenge, waving a big stick, on the domestic front. Whether such originates with Secretary McNamara, or through the Pentagon's embroidery with new offices of fancy nomenclature—such as the Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Civil Rights—Congress has the authority, and the duty, to hold it to an accounting.

One of the foremost civil rights, guaranteed to the citizens by their Constitution—and not lawfully subject to abridgement—is the right to security from political caprice by figures of the Government, itself. That is the point to which Thomas Jefferson was drawing attention when he admonished, "In questions of power, then, let no more be heard of confidence in man, but bind him down from mischief by the chains of the Constitution."

This is, after all, still the United States of America—where the people are boss—and not a police state, wherein they are in subject status to either elective or appointive officialdom.

If, as charged, tax returns—normally and properly secret—are employed as an instrument of coercion; and by units of the Government not properly privy to them, a major departure from the civil proprieties has occurred. And that, note it, is the business of Congress.

No less has a major departure occurred in the order, whatever its source, subjecting whole communities to the off limits status for failure to come to heel—just like that—at the brothers Kennedy et al., cracking of the whip. Again, this is not a police state, relative to military decree, or otherwise.

BARRY GOLDWATER and southern colleagues, challenging the drift in that direction, are not alone, surely, in their concern. As the Arizona Senator clearly pointed out—communities almost as far north as the Canadian border, with military installations, have not adopted all-out integration.

There is a vast difference between the Kennedy team's political interest and the public interest. There are adequate laws to accomplish the latter. It won't be accomplished by the former.

[From the Aiken Standard and Review, Aug. 6, 1963]

ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE AIR FORCE?

Senator BARRY GOLDWATER, a major general in the Air Force Reserve, sees in the Defense Department's civil rights program "the threat of a military takeover should things change in the country and we find the military commanders have become used to running politics and the social life of the community."

The Arizona Republican expressed this concern in attacking, on the floor of the Senate, the Pentagon order that directs commanders of military establishments to place off limits nearby areas where "relentless discrimination" is found.

Senator GOLDWATER charged that the directive "started in the Attorney General's Office" and demanded an investigation of the recent tour of military bases by the newly appointed Deputy Assistant Secretary for Civil Defense, Alfred B. Fitt, who, he said, was "completely armed with dossiers on the businessmen of the community, dossiers complete with every figure the Committee (Presidential Committee on Equal Opportunity) can get out of income tax returns."

Democratic Senators JOHN STENNIS of Mississippi, and STROM THURMOND of South Carolina, backed the Goldwater charge that the Pentagon order put the military in politics.

The Pentagon admitted that a group of Defense officials recently visited Air Force bases at Biloxi, Greenville, and Columbus, Miss.; Mobile, Ala., and Shreveport, La., and that Mr. Fitts was on part of the tour—"where off-base discrimination problems had been known to exist." But the Department denied that Mr. Fitt or any others had information from income tax records or Government files.

It would seem to us that the Defense Department might have its hands pretty full running the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, the Marine Corps, and in maintaining and strengthening our defenses against the most cunning, ruthless and far-flung enemies the Nation has ever faced—without undertaking to police civil rights.

However, the Goldwater charge of the use of police state tactics, would seem to revolve around the question of whether or not Mr. Fitt and his group have used, as the Senator said, "the full force of the Internal Revenue documents." When the facts have been established by investigation it will then be time to determine the proper scope of military duty.

DOCTRINE FOR TEACHERS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, under the sponsorship of the American Bar Association, the Institute of International Studies at the University of South Carolina has prepared a syllabus and guide for teacher workshops and seminars entitled "Democracy and Communism in World Affairs."

It is my understanding that the draft is to be considered by the American Bar Association this weekend. I sincerely hope that the bar association will scrutinize this work most carefully, for I have had numerous protests from responsible sources concerning the lack of scholarship and the generally ineffective presentation of the subject in this work.

One of the latest criticisms which has come to my attention is an editorial entitled "Doctrine for Teachers" which appeared in the August 6, 1963, issue of the Richmond News Leader of Richmond, Va. I ask unanimous consent that this editorial be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

I am particularly concerned about this publication since it originated at the University of South Carolina. I have had numerous contacts from across the Nation inquiring as to just how such an inferion work happened to be produced in South Carolina. I must say that I am unable to account for what appears to be a most unobjective work and I join with many others who have taken a sincere interest in informing the public on the issues of communism against democracy and urge that the American Bar Association weigh most carefully the harm that could be done by sponsoring the distribution of an inferior product as a guide to teachers in public schools.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DOCTRINE FOR TEACHERS

The American Bar Association is circulating a draft version of a new teacher's guide on communism, intended for comment and correction before September publication. Our correction is brief: This draft needs lots of correction; it is unacceptable, and unfortunate.

The proposed publication is "Democracy and Communism in World Affairs." This title omits a significant word when one considers that the book was prepared by the ABA's Standing Committee on Education Against Communism. That word is "against."

Needless to say, this guide does not advocate communism. It does not, as a matter of fact, advocate anything. The message of the manual, which is designed to help teacher-trainees prepare high school courses in communism, pretty much comes down to this: You've got your communism, and you you've your democracy. They both have their good points and their bad points. If you want to "deal effectively" with communism, you have to understand the appeal which it has for its devoted followers. But teachers are warned "to steer clear of the 'good guys vs. the bad guys' approach." Communists are a bit despotic, but are they really such bad guys?

Under this analysis, communism becomes merely an alternate system of social organization, relished by hungry millions who have a taste for totalitarianism. Communism is indeed ruthless, which makes it something of a challenge to the more genteel "forces of freedom." But on the whole, the problem is to maintain a dynamic equilibrium in world affairs, with a judicious use of foreign aid as a holding action, and to demonstrate the moral power of good example. The ABA manual will cost no lost sleep to Walt Whitman Rostow and the State Department policy planning staff.

Over and over again the fledgling teacher is invited to understand the mysterious "appeals" of the Communistic system. He is invited to read the ponderous tomes of George Kennan and Walter Lippmann. He is told that the enormous bureaucracy of Soviet Russia is "essentially conservative." He is reminded of the excesses of our own industrial revolution, although "today we have learned that property is compatible with social justice." He observes the flowering of socialism and Marxism in history and follows the contributions of Hegel and the refinements of Lenin. He finds that Lenin's terrorism perverted true socialism—a development of such magnitude that a whole chapter is necessary to explain that the "democratic socialists are among the bitterest foes of the Communists, as well as their admittedly most dangerous enemies."

And so it goes in a soft tapestry of subtle webs and fine-spun distortions. The manual asserts that communism in the United States began in 1917; in reality Communists set up headquarters in New York in 1872. Here Trotsky published "Novy Mir" until the revolutionaries left to join Lenin in Russia in 1917. The manual implies that 10,000 U.S. Communists have registered under the foreign agents law, whereas none have. The manual twice refers to the pre-election Cuban crisis last year as the "November" crisis; and not without noting that "the U.S.S.R., backed away from the prospect with maturity and realism." The clear and familiar record of Communist espionage and subversion in the United States is ignored while Communist conquests abroad just happen impersonally—the People's Republic of

TENTATIVE PROJECT DESCRIPTION

Description: This project is to work for voter registration and education in a lower socio-economic urban area within a city defined political unit. An area which might be defined as a place of "voter apathy" or "political apathy". The registration books are open all summer and there is no discrimination or harrassment of Negroes wishing to register. The project would work with a local committee, made up of representatives of existing civil rights and voter registration groups. There has been some extremely effective involvement in the political structure by an independent group of Negroes. They are working for the welfare of the total Negro community in Nashville and in Tennessee, and not for the personal gain or for advancement of specific persons.

The main goal of the project will be to stimulate and encourage qualified Negro voters to register. Additional purposes are -- (a) to assist in developing citizenship education and organization in a particular location. (b) to gather some data on lower socio-economic urban Negro political interests for the total voter education and registration efforts, and (c) to communicate a concern by the presence of the participants.

The project will canvass and survey the area to find non-registered citizens. The survey also would attempt some tentative answers, either subjectively or objectively, to the following and related questions: (1) What are the issues to the people? (2) What are their immediate personal interests or concerns which citizen or political participation might begin to meet, such as, job opportunities, housing, economic conditions, human and civil rights, government services (education, streets, sidewalks, recreation, sanitation, police, etc.)? (3) To what extent and why do they seem to be politically apathetic? How do people get active; in politics?

The project will be coordinated into existing voter registration efforts and organizations. At the beginning of the project adequate time will be given to orientation so that the participants are apprised of the local conditions, issues, problems, personalities, etc. in order to see how the project fits into the context of the local situation. Continuous orientation, seminars and study sessions will be held on the particular economic, social, civil rights, and political structures and their role in that urban situation. During the project, as well as at the close, the group will analyze its activity and survey work, share reactions and reflections upon the whole experience.

Note: The project is clearly voter registration and education and not a "direct action" project. It must be clearly understood that the participants' contribution to the civil rights movement is voter registration and is not to be diverted to crusade for the whole civil rights situation. The project is entering an ongoing situation where local committee people live, already at work and will continue to work after the project leaves. The participants are "outsiders" and will have to be continually sensitive to this.

Living and Group Life: The project group will have a maximum of sixteen participants, including persons from the south and north, Negro and white, men and women. Leaders will be persons with direct experience in the civil rights movement, with at least one leader with experience in the south and particularly in voter registration. There is need for applicants with experience and understanding in civil rights. The group will live within the working area, or as close to it as is possible. The group will work out its own discipline and procedure for meal preparation and cleanup, house cleanup, Bible study, worship, discussions, seminars and recreation, with a focus on civil rights, economic, social, and political structures and their roles in urban life.

Cost: There will be a project fee of $115.00 to cover board, insurance, and administrative and leadership costs. In addition, participants will have incidental personal expenses and roundtrip travel costs to Nashville. SOME SCHOLARSHIPS ARE AVAILABLE according to the need.

* Student YWCA members send applications to the Southern Region Office, of the National Student YWCA, Suite 301, 41 Exchange Place, S. E., Atlanta 3, Georgia.

RECURRING like an insistent theme are four major objectives —freedom, equality, opportunity and restitution. In the meaning of these symbolic words is a litany of Negro longing: Freedom from racial discrimination, equality under law and the Constitution, opportunity to win some of the special privileges and benefits enjoyed by many white people, and restitution for accumulated injustices by means of special programs to bridge quickly the social, economic and educational gulf that isolates Negroes from the mainland of American life.

There is wide variation in the methods Negroes favor for attaining their ends. There is none, however, in their commitment to the fight. On every side they show an insistence that will not be denied.

Although popular slogans call for full equality "today" and "now," there is among the Negro leadership a realization that Negro goals will not be achieved at once. The leaders believe that an end to segregation may come in four or five years, but that true integration may not be achieved for another generation.

The coolest heads see no likelihood of a race war. On the other hand, they expect continued tension, unrest and possibly sporadic violence, in a future likely to test sorely both the Negro's reasonableness and his

THE REV. DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING JR. stands as the undisputed symbol of the Negro revolution in America. Perhaps more than any other Negro leader, he has seared the conscience of the nation and forced it to look, though slowly and unwillingly, at the ills of racial discrimination.

Equally important, he has roused and strengthened his people's demand for equality through an extraordinary ability to interpret their longing and frustration in terms that the ordinary Negro can respond to and understand.

Since starting his civil rights career with the Montgomery (Ala.) bus boycott in 1955, the Rev. Dr. King has led or helped in Negro demonstrations throughout the South. Massive, passive civil disobedience is his major weapon.

The Rev. Dr. King, 34 years old, lives in Atlanta, Ga., where he was born. He is a third-generation Baptist preacher. He completed high school in two years and entered college when he was 15. He holds a liberal arts degree from Morehouse College in Atanta, a divinity degree from Crozer Theological Seminary in Chester, Pa., where he was top man in his graduating class, and a Ph.D. in theology from Boston University.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24

AFTER BEING PERSISTENTLY DISREGARDED for nearly a decade, the Negro revolt in the United States exploded into the public consciousness this year. The police dogs of Birmingham, the deaths at "Ole Miss," the demonstrations, violence, arrests and bombings in scores of other places, north and south, made it plain at last that social upheaval is shaking this country.

Although no one can yet see how far the consequences will reach, it is clear that few persons or communities will be left untouched and that for many life will never be the same again.

In the belief that the purpose and significance of this movement can be explained by Negroes with an understanding that is all but impossible for white people, the Post-Dispatch asked a group of distinguished Negro Americans to write a special series of articles. They were asked to discuss the Negro's aspirations and ideals, to tell what he wants and needs, and what both he and the nation must do to achieve his goals and at the same time strengthen society.

THE RESULT is "The Negro Speaks," a symposium that goes beyond civil rights to deal with some of the fundamental aspects of the greatest social crisis the United States has faced since the depression of the '30s.

The series starts with the accompanying appraisal of the Negro's mood and his demands, by the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., widely regarded as the country's principal civil rights leader.

Later articles will deal with the Negro's need for better jobs and education and for homes outside big-city ghettos, his reaction to President John F. Kennedy's proposed civil rights legislation, the uncompromising demands of young and militant Negroes, the balance of political power that Negro voters can exercise, the new and rising insistence on special treatment to make up for three centuries of neglect, and an assessment of today's movement in the perspective of history.

The writers include civil rights leaders, scholars, educators, experts in a variety of fields and one federal official.

In language sometimes impassioned and sometimes impersonal but always cogent, they cast a clear light on the Negro's goals and the resolution that drives him.

RECURRING like an insistent theme are four major objectives —freedom, equality, opportunity and restitution. In the meaning of these symbolic words is a litany of Negro longing: Freedom from racial discrimination, equality under law and the Constitution, opportunity to win some of the special privileges and benefits enjoyed by many white people, and restitution for accumulated injustices by means of special programs to bridge quickly the social, economic and educational gulf that isolates Negroes from the mainland of American life.

There is wide variation in the methods Negroes favor for attaining their ends. There is none, however, in their commitment to the fight. On every side they show an insistence that will not be denied.

Although popular slogans call for full equality "today" and "now," there is among the Negro leadership a realization that Negro goals will not be achieved at once. The leaders believe that an end to segregation may come in four or five years, but that true integration may not be achieved for another generation.

The coolest heads see no likelihood of a race war. On the other hand, they expect continued tension, unrest and possibly sporadic violence, in a future likely to test sorely both the Negro's reasonableness and his staying power.

THE REV. DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING JR. stands as the undisputed symbol of the Negro revolution in America. Perhaps more than any other Negro leader, he has seared the conscience of the nation and forced it to look, though slowly and unwillingly, at the ills of racial discrimination.

Equally important, he has roused and strengthened his people's demand for equality through an extraordinary ability to interpret their longing and frustration in terms that the ordinary Negro can respond to and understand.

Since starting his civil rights career with the Montgomery (Ala.) bus boycott in 1955, the Rev. Dr. King has led or helped in Negro demonstrations throughout the South. Massive, passive civil disobedience is his major weapon.

The Rev. Dr. King, 34 years old, lives in Atlanta, Ga., where he was born. He is a third-generation Baptist preacher. He completed high school in two years and entered college when he was 15. He holds a liberal arts degree from Morehouse College in Atanta, a divinity degree from Crozer Theological Seminary in Chester, Pa., where he was top man in his graduating class, and a Ph.D. in theology from Boston University.

'Negro Glaring Evidence of White American Hypocrisy'

By THE REV. DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING JR.
President, Southern Christian Leadership Conference

THE MOOD OF THE NEGRO today is one of impatience. There seems to be no more room in his soul to wait. He has waited 100 years, and not very much has been accomplished.

Today he has awakened from the long sleep of quasi-freedom. Everything that he seeks now, was his right and privilege by law on Jan. 1, 1863. He was miserably shortchanged and he is demanding immediate restitution. In all fairness, it must be said that his mood is not one of vengeance and bitterness, but he will not be put off any longer.

The strength and determination of the American Negro are waxing, not waning. Realism impels me to admit that if some immediate relief is not found to ease the compound frustration of the Negro community, there is the terrible possibility of incidents of violence.

I do not believe there is any danger of a violent race war as long as there are signs of tangible progress in areas that affect Negroes most.

What the Negro wants today is his equality. He needs a social revolution; every quarter of his life demands it. Consider his plight, particularly in the South, in public education, medical services, employment, voting rights and public accommodations.

THE WHOLE STRUCTURE of his moment-by-moment experience is marshaled against him in such a way that he is disadvantaged; his "high visibility" penalizes him at every turn. If he is to be included in society, nothing short of a revolution will change his circumstances materially.

The Negro's demand for "equality" means the untrammeled opportunity for every person to fulfill his total individual capacity without any regard to race, creed, color or ancestry. His insistent demand for equality must be approximated if not totally fulfilled. It is the only hope for the soul of this nation. The Negro is the most glaring evidence of the white America's sin and hypocrisy.

What must the Negro and the nation do to meet his needs? I would underscore the need for the Federal Government to get out of the segregation business; that is, it should withdraw federal funds from projects and states where statutory segregation remains in defiance of the Constitution of the United States.

Despite the most comprehensive civil rights bill in history, the Federal Government has yet to launch an effective day-by-day program that strikes at the flesh-and-blood considerations of what segregation does to the Negro in Birmingham as well as in the Brooklyn ghetto.

THE OTHER SIDE of the coin is positive. If the plight of race and color prejudice, with its attendant penalty to the Negro, is removed, then a vigorous program of implementation of already-existing laws must be conceived. New legislation must be enacted by the Congress, or executive fiat must be used. Parallel and supplementary programs in job training and adult education will also be needed.

It seems likely that race and color prejudice will have all but disappeared in its most obvious forms in the next five years. The present temper of Negro demands for equality will not allow statutory segregation to survive more than another year or two.

Three stages seem reasonable. First, we are able to see that even in the deep South, hard-core states, the overwhelming majority of white people say "later" instead of "never." Thus, massive resistance has been conquered. Secondly, though segregation is still with us in many forms, I believe that if the present trend continues—and it must—for the most part we shall have a desegregated nation within the five years that I mentioned earlier.

Thirdly, despite the realization of a "desegregated society," the goal we seek is integration—inter-group and inter-personal living with mutual understanding and respect. We long for the day when color aristocracy will give way to character aristocracy.

This will take considerably longer. I would hazard the guess that it could be a generation away. This might be called a period of "national adjustment."

I DO NOT SHARE the feeling of some politicians and others who believe that continued Negro pressure and demonstrations may jeopardize passage by Congress of President Kennedy's civil rights proposals. The pending legislation would not exist at all today if it were not for Birmingham, Ala., and the all-out Negro pressure that followed in its wake. Their argument is thin, for during the years when pressure did not exist, very little was done in regard to Negro rights. It is an unfortunate fact of political science that politicians react directly to pressure.

The Negro will continue to press his demands for equality, using a number of methods. Tremendous victories already have been won through court decisions establishing and defining his rights as a citizen. Increased educational opportunities will move many Negroes closer to the mainstream of American life. In recent years and particularly in the present moment, the Negro represents a political entity which must be recokned with in national politics. These and other factors will combine in a broad sense to secure equality for the Negro.

In a more narrow sense, I am persuaded that the use of nonviolent direct action is the most practical and useful vehicle to fulfill the normal dream and aspirations of the Negro or any oppressed people. More importantly, it is at the same moment the most moral and the most powerful. It is a critical supplement to the traditional methods mentioned above and has much to do with the pace at which the others move.

The nonviolent revolution in America, with all of its drama and conscience-searing, is just coming of age. It has moved the Negro a giant step forward while 50 years of traditional redress through the courts have brought in many instances continued frustration to the dilemma of his "Negro-ness."

NONVIOLENCE is a creative discipline. Its application in behalf of an oppressed people has not been exhausted yet. However, it could very well be that some new techniques will be developed in the future. For example, the increased awareness of the Negro of his purchasing power and the effect produced by its withdrawal hold promise of the boycott being used more and more to open doors heretofore closed to the Negro community.

There is no legitimacy to the complaint that direct-action demonstrations sometimes are as unlawful as the practices they seek to remedy. It is true that in our demonstrations we sometimes violate laws. But the laws that we violate are unjust laws, human laws that are out of harmony with the law of God. On the other hand, one has not only a legal but moral responsibility to obey just laws, those that conform to moral law.

I tried to explain this difference in the letter I wrote while confined in the Birmingham city jail four months ago. I said then: "An unjust law is a code that a majority inflicts on a minority that is not binding on itself. This is difference made legal. On the other hand, a just law is a code that a majority compels a minority to follow that it is willing to follow itself. This is sameness made legal.

"In no sense do I advocate evading or defying the law as the rabid segregationist would do. This would lead to anarchy. One who breaks an unjust law must do it openly, lovingly and with a willingness to accept the penalty. I submit that an individual who breaks a law that conscience tells him is unjust and willingly accepts the penalty by staying in jail to arouse the conscience of the community over its injustice is in reality expressing the very highest respect for law."

IN SOME AREAS of the civil rights struggle there has been considerable and, at points, rapid progress toward our goal of equality. In others, progress has been negligible and in some instances we have lost ground.

The wake of Birmingham caused the President to change his priority in Americas' domestic concerns and civil rights has become the key issue in the nation. There is before Congress now the most comprehensive civil rights bill in history. Its enactment and implementation could do much to relieve the far too many obvious problems that humiliate and degrade the Negro daily.

For the first time in its history our nation has begun to grapple seriously with the problem of race and color prejudices.

ASA PHILIP RANDOLPH

One of the directors of the demonstration that seeks to bring 100,000 or more Negroes to Washington on Wednesday. Organizing massive rallies is nothing new for Randoph, who in 1941 threatened to lead 50,000 Negroes in a march on the Capital to protest against discrimination in World War II defense industries. The threat led to President Franklin D. Roosevelt's order banning job discrimination in war plants.

Randolph is the highest ranking Negro in the organized labor movement. He is the only Negro vice president of the AFL-CIO, a position he has held since 1957. International president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters since he took the lead in founding the organization in 1925, he also is national president of the Negro-American Labor Council.

He was born in Crescent City, Fla., and worked as an elevator operator, waiter and editor of a Negro magazine in New York City before establishing the porters union. He is 74 years old.

Executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He was born at 2818 Laclede avenue in 1901 and attended kindergarten in St. Louis before he and a brother and sister moved to St. Paul, Minn., to live with relatives after the death of their mother. His wife, the former Aminda Badeau, is a native of south St. Louis.

After graduating from the University of Minnesota, he returned to Missouri to work on The Kansas City Call, a Negro weekly newspaper. It was this change that eventually led to his decision to work for the NAACP. "Going from St. Paul to Kansas City, from an area relatively free of discrimination to one rigidly segregated, deepened my interest in racial matters," Wilkins told the Post-Dispatch.

In 1931 Wilkins joined the staff of the NAACP. As executive secretary, he has been its top officer since 1955. The NAACP is the largest and best known of the civil rights organizations.

That It Does Not Go Far Enough

Negro Group Prepared to Work for Defeat of Lawmakers Who Vote Against Antibias Package

SECOND OF A SERIES

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION for the Advancement of Colored People, with other civil rights organizations, is engaged in a massive effort to secure enactment of President John F. Kennedy's civil rights program in this session of Congress.

Of the three branches of government, only Congress has failed to take a forthright position on the issue of segregation. This is why the President's proposals, now before Congress, are of such vital importance.

The NAACP and other civil rights organizations have hailed Mr. Kennedy's bill as the most comprehensive civil rights measure ever submitted to the Congress by a President. Nevertheless, as good as it is, it does not go far enough and, accordingly, is in need of strengthening.

Civil rights groups are united in urging that the bill be broadened to include a Fair Employment Practices Commission section with power to ban discrimination in private as well as public employment; authority for the Attorney General to initiate on his own civil suits against all violations of civil rights, not just in school cases; sanctions against labor unions which discriminate against Negroes or members of other ethnic or religious minorities; and establishment of the Civil Rights Commission on a permanent basis.

CIVIL RIGHTS advocates recognize that there is strong opposition to the bill, particularly to Title II, the public accommodations section. But this is not new.

There has never been a civil rights bill introduced in Congress that did not meet strong opposition from the South and from its northern and western allies. It matters not what the issue — anti-lynching, FEPC, right to vote, school desegregation, filibuster Rule 22, or what not — the opposition has formed.

This accounts for the paucity of such legislation at the federal level. Only two civil rights measures—the Civil Rights Acts of 1957 and 1960 — have been passed by Congress since Reconstruction days.

We in the NAACP have given top priority to the pending bill and expect its enactment. We are mobilizing full support in behalf of it and are prepared to work for the defeat at the polls of those members of Congress who vote against it.

The fight for equal access to places of public accommodations, for an FEPC law, for school desegregation and for other civil rights measures will continue until the objectives have been achieved. Vigorous action toward these objectives was pledged in the 1960 platforms of the Democratic and Republican parties. We are asking simply for implementation of these pledges.

TITLE II, the most controversial section of the President's bill, faces without equivocation the Negro demand that segregation clause or the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution. What they want is the right to use any public accommodation on the same basis as other citizens. They place human rights above property rights and, accordingly, dismiss as irrelevant the contention of Senate minority leader Everett Dirksen and others that Title II infringes on property rights.

What they know are the suffering and denials they have to endure in certain sections of the country because there is no federal legislation securing their right to equal access to public accommodations anywhere in the land.

They know also that federal and state authorities have placed many restrictions on private property in order to protect the public. They see no reason why they, too, cannot be protected by federal legislation in their right to equal access to public accommodations.

In short, the Negro is unable to comprehend the opposition to this section among those, in the Congress and elsewhere, who profess adherence to a religious faith that affirms the brotherhood of all mankind and to a political creed based on equality of citizenship.

ENACTMENT of the Administration bill would wipe out this senseless humiliation which is the daily fare of nearly 20,000,000 Americans.

Other titles in it would further accelerate the pace of school desegregation; strengthen the right to vote; extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission another four years; establish a new agency, Community Relations Service, to aid communities in voluntary desegregation actions; give statutory approval to the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity; and authorize the President to withhold federal funds from any segregated institution, facility or service.

The goal of our association is to raise the status of the Negro to equality with that of his white fellow citizens. Since its founding, also the right to work on the same basis as other Americans. In those areas where job control is vested in trade unions, this means equal access to job training opportunities and enrollment in the controlling unions.

Segregation, whether embodied in the Jim Crow laws of the South or embedded in custom throughout the nation, is the principal obstacle to the achievement of the goal of equality. Segregation is the negation of equality and the rejection of the Judeo-Christian ethic of universal human brotherhood.

THE PURPOSE of segregation is not separation of the races, but rather the maintenance of a caste system relegating the Negro to the lowest position in the social hierarchy. The South, where segregationists are loudest and most insistent, is also the region in which intermingling of the races has historically been most commonplace. The millions of Americans of mixed racial ancestry originating in the South afford living testimony that separation of the races is not what the South seeks in upholding segregation.

To be meaningful, the equality which the Negro seeks today requires, and would in itself contribute to, a significant expansion of the gross national product. Nothing is gained by achieving "equality" with a poverty-stricken, illiterate white sharecropper. The plight of millions of marginal white people must also be improved. They, too, stand in urgent need of better schooling and training to equip them for better jobs which, in turn, will enable them to live in decent homes.

The abolition of poverty and ignorance is an attainable goal for both Negroes and whites. A booming economy of full employment will make equality not only possible but also meaningful. Our goal is such a society with all citizens enjoying equal rights and opportunities and shouldering equally the duties and responsibilities of citizenship.

Leader of March on Capital Links Freedom and Jobs

By A. PHILIP RANDOLPH

Director
March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom

IN THE GREAT MARCH ON WASHINGTON that is to take place Wednesday, the Negro people's demand for "full freedom now" is linked with a demand for federal action to obtain the basic human right to jobs and bread. This is significant, for it marks the recognition of a fundamental truth. Full economic equality as well as full civil rights are equally and together the objectives of our movement.

The Negro people have not only been deprived of the basic rights guaranteed by our democracy and our Constitution—the right to vote, to equal treatment in public accommodations, to respect and dignity as human beings; they have been deprived also of all the good things of life which have fallen so abundantly to the lot of other Americans—decent housing, green spaces for their children to play in, wholesome and sufficient nourishment, vacations in the country or by the sea.

Negroes have borne more, far more, than their fair share of unemployment and of low paying, distasteful jobs. They have been afflicted, far more, in proportion, than other Americans, by the paralyzing fear of economic insecurity. They have known the blight of poverty. In a rapidly changing world they have been denied access to those skills which alone can insure economic survival.

In the March on Washington we are asking for Federal action to create new jobs through a massive multibillion-dollar public works program. The jobs that we seek are not to be found in the manufacture of weapons of destruction or in unproductive "make work" programs.

JOBS MUST BE fitted to our burning, pressing social needs. Hundreds of American communities are not only job-poor; they lack good houses, good schools, adequate hospitals and health facilities, recreational opportunities for youth. Hundreds of our communities lack the things essential to a secure and healthful environment — trees, adequate parks, public gardens, public swimming pools, museums, ball parks, libraries and workers made in American industry in World War II. More highly paid Negro workers from auto or steel, lacking alternative skills, now walk the streets seeking any kind of job, whatever the pay.

Nor have we yet felt the full impact of this technological revolution. Workers in heavy industry, office workers, even engineering and other highly specialized personnel are being laid off. None is exempt from the inexorable march of this far-reaching change.

Prospects in the building trades and construction industry do not offer us very great grounds for hope. To be sure, significant breakthroughs are being registered today by civil rights groups struggling to batter down racial barriers in the building trade unions. But the market for new luxury housing is glutted; commercial and downtown renewal programs have been carried to completion in many big cities.

Barring new, publicly financed work programs on a huge scale, the freedom forces will, at best, register no more than token gains in the construction field. At worst, they will succeed only in pitting Negro against white workers in a futile struggle for nonexistent jobs.

Defense industry provides no answer either to the problem of Negro unemployment. In this field, as in most others, a technological and scientific revolution has been under way with gathering momentum. The days have gone when the construction of giant battleships could employ thousands of workers. Such weapons have become obsolete. Automation is replacing workers with machines in national defense industries as in all others.

WE MUST LOOK elsewhere if we are to find the expanding weapons of destruction or in unproductive "make work" programs.

JOBS MUST BE fitted to our burning, pressing social needs. Hundreds of American communities are not only job-poor; they lack good houses, good schools, adequate hospitals and health facilities, recreational opportunities for youth. Hundreds of our communities lack the things essential to a secure and healthful environment — trees, adequate parks, public gardens, public swimming pools, museums, ball parks, libraries and monuments.

In all of these areas we have witnessed a steady and tragic retreat from federal responsibility since the end of World War II. In these areas, indeed, we are actually spending less money in proportion to total federal expenditures than was the case 20 years ago. But, as we all know, our population continues to explode by leaps and bounds; and our social fabric—the fabric of our cities, the foundation of our cultural and spiritual life—continues to decline. This is the area in which the Federal Government must move to assure the jobs and human welfare that constitute the true defense of the American way of life.

The need is emphasized by the dire situation of the Negro unemployed. The rate of unemployment among Negro workers is twice that among white workers. At this moment, nearly one out of every six Negro wage earners across the nation is without work.

In our big cities the proportion is far higher, because Negro unemployment is concentrated in the urban areas. In some places it rises as high as one out of every five Negro workers. Unemployment is higher among younger people. In Chicago this summer 70 per cent of Negro youth who sought jobs have failed to find them. Among younger workers roughly one of every four is without work.

The problem of Negro unemployment would be relatively simple to solve if it were merely a matter of providing the skills necesary for effective competition in the labor market. If this were the only question, the current civil rights revolution might well succeed in changing the Negro's economic status in a short time. This could be accomplished by properly enforced fair employment practices legislation combined with a massive retaining program for Negro workers.

UNFORTUNATELY the problem will not yield to so straightforward a solution. The reason for this lies in the advance of automation. Automation imposes a severe crisis on our entire economy. Insofar as Negroes are concerned, its impact has made itself felt with great force. Automation is a technological revolution that knows no bounds. It has largely wiped out employment gains Negro existent jobs.

Defense industry provides no answer either to the problem of Negro unemployment. In this field, as in most others, a technological and scientific revolution has been under way with gathering momentum. The days have gone when the construction of giant battleships could employ thousands of workers. Such weapons have become obsolete. Automation is replacing workers with machines in national defense industries as in all others.

WE MUST LOOK elsewhere if we are to find the expanding markets which we need—to provide jobs, to set the wheels of industry turning, to convert a stagnant into a healthy and thriving economy.

The fate of the Negro masses is linked in the last resort to the fate of the American economy. Our great freedom movement must address itself to the basic problems of this economy if it wishes to find a way out of the swamp of unemployment, poverty and despair.

For this reason, therefore, the march on Washington demands measures to increase the number of jobs available, as well as to end discrimination in hiring Negro workers. Of course, the struggle for full equality of job opportunity must be relentlessly pursued. But it must be coupled with insistence that more jobs be made available through special federal measures. We ask, too, that a massive retraining program for Negro workers and for youth be instituted on a larger scale than anything now contemplated. This will enable our people to catch up to their white brothers and to take full advantage of the opportunities that an expanding job market will offer to them.

These three demands — for equal access to jobs, for the creation of millions of new jobs, and for a job retraining program — are intimately and purposefully linked. Only by winning all of these demands will the Negro people succeed in emancipating themselves from the blight of poverty and deprivation.

Therefore, we are seeking to enlist our white brothers in the movement for full freedom. We have found that many trade unions are responsive to our initiative. They stand firm with us in our quest for full freedom; and they are joining us, in great numbers, in the March on Washington.

In the interest of an integrated and united trade union movement we take a firm stand against unions which maintain closed membership books; which forbid the enrollment of even highly qualified Negro workers. We insist that, whether they exist in the North or in the South, these Jim Crow practices be given up. And we are confident that our movement for interracial trade unions, for the full brotherhood of all American workers, willl be victorious.

Tragedy of Discrimination: It Excuses Failure While Erecting Barriers to Success

Weaver Says Constant Threat of Inequality Causes Sense of Outrage, Hostile Reactions Among Nonwhites

By ROBERT C. WEAVER

Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency

THIRD OF A SERIES

THE ISSUE OF RACE PROVIDES significant areas of disagreement, as well as agreement, between Negroes and well-informed, well-meaning white Americans. Negro Americans feel that the progress they have made is exaggerated by whites; whites frequently feel that Negroes understate their gains. In this and other areas of dispute lie some of the most subtle, yet significant, aspects of Negro-white relationships.

Many white Americans frequently ask, "Why do Negroes push so? They have made phenomenal progress in 100 years of freedom. Now why don't their leaders do something about their crime rate, illegitimacy and other problems?"

The answer is clear: When Negroes demand full equality, they are behaving as would all other Americans under similar conditions. Secretary of State Dean Rusk told a congressional committee recently that were he a Negro, he would do the same. Every American has the right to be treated as a human being; striving for human dignity is an American characteristic. Other factors underlying the Negro American's drive are the slowness with which the Supreme Court school desegregation decision has been implemented and the emergence of Africa as a continent of independent nations.

The constant threat of discrimination and inequality causes a sense of outrage among Negroes. Many react hostilely; a separate culture with deviant values develops. Those who live in these unhappy environments face a difficult dilemma: Ours is a middle-class society and those who fail to show most of its values and behavior are headed for trouble; but on the other hand, the rewards for those who conform are often minimal, providing inadequate inducement for large numbers to emulate them.

Until the second decade of the twentieth century, it was traditional to compare the then current position of Negroes with that of a decade or several decades earlier. The Depression revealed the basic marginal neers, mathematicians and highly-trained clerical and stenographic workers. Lack of college-trained persons is especially evident among Negro men.

One is prompted to ask why does this exist? The facts indicate the answer:

In 1959 nonwhite males who were high school graduates earned, on the average, 32 per cent less than whites; for nonwhite college graduates the figure was 38 per cent less.

Among women a much different situation exists. Nonwhite women who were high school graduates earned on the average of 24 per cent less than whites. Nonwhite female college graduates, however, earned but slightly over 1 per cent less than white women college graduates. Significantly, the median annual income of nonwhite female college graduates was more than double that of nonwhite women with only high school education.

Is it any wonder that among nonwhites, as contrasted to whites, a larger proportion of women than of men attend and finish college? The lack of economic rewards for higher education goes far in accounting for the paucity of college graduates and the high rate of drop-outs among nonwhite males. It accounts also for the fact that in the North, where there are greater opportunities for white-collar Negro males, more Negro men than women are finishing college; whereas in the South, where teaching is the greatest employment outlet for Negro college graduates, Negro women college graduates outnumber men.

LOREN MILLER

He is vice president of the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing and is rated an expert on the Negro's drive to break out of his housing ghetto.

A lawyer and newspaper publisher in Los Angeles, he has for many years played a major part in litigation against discrimination in housing. He was one of the attorneys who in 1948 argued the cases that resulted in the Supreme Court's ruling against racially restrictive housing covenants. He was chief counsel in California cases that successfully attacked racial segregation in public housing and discrimination in sales by FHA builders. As a member of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, he has participated in many of the organization's civil rights cases.

Miller is owner and publisher of the California Eagle, second largest Negro weekly newspaper in the state. He was graduated from the University of Kansas and the School of Law of Washburn University in Topeka. His father had been born a slave in Missouri.

ROBERT C. WEAVER

As administrator of the Federal Housing and Home Finance Agency, he holds the highest federal administrative position ever occupied by a Negro. And if a Department of Urban Affairs is ever created, he may become the first Negro to serve as a member of the Cabinet, for President John F. Kennedy said he would appoint him to the proposed post.

Weaver is the federal government's top housing official. During the early days of the New Deal, he was architect and leader of the so-called "black cabinet," a group of tough-minded Negro brain trusters who were instrumental in obtaining job and housing opportunities for Negroes. After serving in a variety of federal positions between 1933 and 1944, Weaver held a number of teaching and race relations positions.

Before being picked for his present job by President Kennedy, Weaver had been vice chairman of the Housing and Redevelopment Board of New York City and was administrator of the New York State Housing Rent Commission.

between acceptance as earned by individual merit and enjoyment of rights guaranteed to everyone. Implicit, also, is the assumption that Negroes can lift themselves by their bootstraps, and that once they become brown counterparts of white Americans, they will be accepted on the basis of individual merit. Were this true, our race problem would be no more than a most recent phase in the melting-pot tradition of the nation.

Poverty still haunts half of the Negroes in the United States, and

To the Negro American, involuntary segregation is degrading, inconvenient and costly. Perhaps its principal disadvantage is its costliness. Nowhere is this better illustrated than in education and housing. By any and all criteria, separate schools are generally inferior schools in which the cultural deprivations of the descendants of slaves are perpetuated.

Enforced residential segregation, the most stubborn and universal of the Negro's disadvantages, often leads to exploitation and effects a spatial pattern tribulations of others who are less fortunate or less recognized than itself. It cannot stress progress—the emphasis which is so palatable to the majority group—without, at the same time, delineating the unsolved business of democracy. It cannot provide or identify meaningful models unless it effects social changes which facilitate the emergence of these models from the environment which typifies so much of the Negro community.

But Negro leadership must also face up to the deficiencies culture with deviant values develops. Those who live in these unhappy environments face a difficult dilemma: Ours is a middle-class society and those who fail to show most of its values and behavior are headed for trouble; but on the other hand, the rewards for those who conform are often minimal, providing inadequate inducement for large numbers to emulate them.

Until the second decade of the twentieth century, it was traditional to compare the then current position of Negroes with that of a decade or several decades earlier. The Depression revealed the basic marginal economic status of colored Americans and repudiated this concept of progress. By the early 1930s Negroes became concerned about their relative position in the nation.

VIEWED IN THIS context, the facts are:

Median family income among nonwhites in 1959 was slightly less than 55 per cent of that for whites; for individuals the figure was 50 per cent.

Only a third of the Negro families in 1959 earned enough to sustain an acceptable American standard of living. Yet this involved well over 1,000,000 Negro families, of which 6000 earned $25,000 or more.

Undergirding these over-all figures are many paradoxes. Negroes have made striking gains in historical terms, yet their current rate of unemployment is well over double that among whites. Over two thirds of our colored workers are still concentrated in five major unskilled and semiskilled occupations, as contrasted to slightly over a third of the white labor force.

Despite the continuing existence of color discrimination even for many of the well prepared, there is a paucity of qualified Negro scientists, engiwomen than of men attend and finish college? The lack of economic rewards for higher education goes far in accounting for the paucity of college graduates and the high rate of drop-outs among nonwhite males. It accounts also for the fact that in the North, where there are greater opportunities for white-collar Negro males, more Negro men than women are finishing college; whereas in the South, where teaching is the greatest employment outlet for Negro college graduates, Negro women college graduates outnumber men.

THE NEGRO middle - class seems destined to grow and prosper. At the same time, the economic position of the untrained Negro — as of all untrained and poorly-trained in our society—will continue to decline. Nonwhites are doubly affected. First, they are disproportionately concentrated in occupations particularly susceptible to unemployment at a time when our technology eats up unskilled and semi-skilled jobs at a frightening rate. Secondly, they are conditioned to racial job discrimination. The later circumstance becomes a justification for not trying, occasioning a lack of incentive for self-betterment.

The tragedy of discrimination is that it provides an excuse for failure while erecting barriers to success.

Most colored Americans still are not only outside the mainstream of our society but see no hope of entering it. The lack of motivation and antisocial behavior which result are captialized on by the champions of the status quo. They say that the average Negro must demonstrate to the average white that the latter's fears are groundless.

In this attitude lies a volume on race relations. In the first place, those who articulate this point of view fail to differentiate between acceptance as earned by individual merit and enjoyment of rights guaranteed to everyone. Implicit, also, is the assumption that Negroes can lift themselves by their bootstraps, and that once they become brown counterparts of white Americans, they will be accepted on the basis of individual merit. Were this true, our race problem would be no more than a most recent phase in the melting-pot tradition of the nation.

Poverty still haunts half of the Negroes in the United States, and while higher levels of national productivity are a sine qua non for higher levels of employment in the nation, they alone will not wipe out unemployment, especially for minorities. The labor reserve of today must be trained if it is to find gainful employment. Among nonwhites this frequently involves more than exposure to vocational training. Many of them are functionally illiterate and require basic education prior to specialized job preparation.

THE VERY MAGNITUDE of these problems illustrates that society must take the leadership in solving them. But society can only provide greater opportunities. The individual must respond to the new opportunities. And he does so, primarily, in terms of visible evidence that hard work and sacrifice bring real rewards.

Those white Americans who are perplexed, confused and antagonized by Negroes' persistent pressure to break down racial segregation should pause to consider what involuntary segregation means to its victims, the harmful effect on the personality, and, in turn, on the thoughtful and well-intentioned community weighted with its load of guilt for a manifest injustice to a fellow-being, fellow-American.

York State Housing Rent Commission.

To the Negro American, involuntary segregation is degrading, inconvenient and costly. Perhaps its principal disadvantage is its costliness. Nowhere is this better illustrated than in education and housing. By any and all criteria, separate schools are generally inferior schools in which the cultural deprivations of the descendants of slaves are perpetuated.

Enforced residential segregation, the most stubborn and universal of the Negro's disadvantages, often leads to exploitation and effects a spatial pattern which facilitates neglect of public services in the well-defined areas where Negroes live. It restricts the opportunities of the more successful as well as the least successful in the group, augmenting artificially the number of nonwhites who live in areas of blight and neglect and face impediments to the attainment of values and behavior required for upward social and economic mobility.

The most obvious consequence of involuntary residential segregation is that the housing dollar in a dark hand usually commands less purchasing power than one in a white hand. Clearly, this is a denial of a basic promise of a free economy.

What are the responsibilities of Negro leadership?

Certainly the first is to keep pressing for first-class citizenship status — an inevitable goal of those who accept the values of this nation.

Another is to encourage and assist Negroes to prepare for the opportunities that are now and will be opened to them.

THE ULTIMATE responsibilities of Negro leadership, however, are to show results and maintain a following. This means that it cannot be so "responsible" that it forgets the trials and tribulations of others who are less fortunate or less recognized than itself. It cannot stress progress—the emphasis which is so palatable to the majority group—without, at the same time, delineating the unsolved business of democracy. It cannot provide or identify meaningful models unless it effects social changes which facilitate the emergence of these models from the environment which typifies so much of the Negro community.

But Negro leadership must also face up to the deficiencies which plague the Negro community, and it must take effective action to deal with resulting problems. While, of course, crime, poverty, illegitimacy and hopelessness can all be explained, in large measure, in terms of the Negro's history and current status in America, they do exist. We need no longer be self-conscious in admitting these unpleasant facts, for our knowledge of human behavior indicates clearly that antisocial activities are not inherent in any people. What is required is comprehension of these—a part of society's problems — and remedial and rehabilitation measures.

Emphasis on self-betterment, if employed indiscriminately by Negro leaders, is seized by white supremacists and their supporters to bolster the assertion that Negroes, all Negroes, are not ready for full citizenship. As a result, because of the nature of our society, Negro leadership must continue to stress the people's rights if it is to receive a hearing for programs of self-improvement.

Government Said to Shirk Duty To End Urban Ghetto System

By LOREN MILLER

Vice President
National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing

THE PATTERN IS THE SAME EVERYWHERE. Centers of our great cities are filled to overflowing with Negro residents. Ranged around that core, like petals on a daisy, are suburban communities, built white and long kept white by an intricate and devious interplay of private and governmental practices and policies.

The all-white or all-Negro section of a city shapes and strengthens the racial attitudes of its inhabitants.

Embattled whites are stereotyped as standing heroic guard to repulse black invaders trampling on property values. Violence to prevent Negro occupancy is all too common. The "Would - you - want - one - to-move - next-door-to-you?" query is assuming the proportions of the "Would-you-want-your-sister-to-marry-one?" squelch and has almost equal potency.

Negro urbanization, already at 72 per cent, continues to grow. The ghetto expands everywhere and unless present trends are reversed our cities will become increasingly Negro cities, breeding ever more de facto segregation in schools and public facilities, exacerbating division between whites and Negroes, strangling renovation of central cities, heightening the conflict between core cities and suburbs and adding explosive content to strained Negro-white relationships.

President John F. Kennedy issued an executive order Nov. 20 designed to halt overt federal assistance to practices that exclude Negroes from new housing tracts. The narrowly drawn order forbids sales and rental discrimination in governmentally owned or operated dwelling units and in governmentally assisted and redevelopment housing for which federal aid is sought after the effective date.

It has not made a dent in hardshell urban segregation and, stretched to the limit, would not apply to more than 25 per cent of new housing.

THE STRIKING infirmity in the presidential order and in state and local fair housing legislation is that they are devoid of affirmative devices to undo more than half a century of intensive governmental cultivation of residential segregation. There is no governmental leadership of the many private groups which have sprung up in response to the pangs of private conscience and which seek to alleviate diswhich has a total population of 81,712.

Concentration of Negroes in central cities has been on the aggressive increase for more than half a century. A government report noted in 1913 that Negro "migration to the city is being followed by segregation into districts and neighborhoods within the city. . . . Thus the Negro ghetto is growing un."

Residential segregation flowers into de facto segregation in schools and other public and semipublic facilities as everybody knows by this time. Where the Negro central city population grows, as in St. Louis, it results in resegregation of schools even after a desegregation program has been instituted.

Most cities have lost the fight to maintain integrated school systems and have to run twice as fast as they can just to stay where they are. More Negro children attend all-Negro schools in Chicago than in Birmingham.

One more set of dry figures will round out the statistical story. The total population increase for the 10 largest central cities from 1930 to 1960 was 3,480,295, including a Negro increase of 3,222,347. Central city growth thus was Negro growth. Population increase in the standard metropolitan areas outside those 10 cities was 4,174,537, but the Negro increase was only 146,540. Whites outgained Negroes 30 to 1 in the suburbs.

CONTRARY to widespread belief, the fix we are in is not the result of pig-headed popular prejudice; it is the product of more than 50 years of governmental sanction and support of residential segregation. Emboldened by Supreme Court approval of the separate but equal doctrine in 1896, Southern and Border cities enacted racial zoning ordinances from about 1904 to 1915, only to have the court invalidate them in 1917 after more than a decade of usage had whipped up sentiment in their favor.

Balked on one front, segregationists turned to the use of racially restrictive covenants and stretched to the limit, would not apply to more than 25 per cent of new housing.

THE STRIKING infirmity in the presidential order and in state and local fair housing legislation is that they are devoid of affirmative devices to undo more than half a century of intensive governmental cultivation of residential segregation. There is no governmental leadership of the many private groups which have sprung up in response to the pangs of private conscience and which seek to alleviate discrimination in housing.

What it adds up to is gigantic governmental shirking of responsibility to disestablish a ghetto system that is without parallel in the free world outside of South Africa. The Federal Government should discharge its responsibility by arraying the full panoply of its power to create a free housing market.

That means:

(1) Expansion of the presidential order to prohibit discrimination in sales and rentals by builders where loans are obtained from member institutions of the Home Loan Bank system and proscription of discrimination in all housing where an insured loan is in effect.

(2) Desegregation of public housing should be undertaken as vacancies occur.

(3) No urban redevelopment plan should be approved unless it contains affirmative, built-in devices to insure relocation of displaced persons in integrated communities and integration of housing produced under it.

(4) State and local fair housing statutes should be broadened to cover all housing sales and rentals.

Together federal and local governments can create a free housing market. But that will not be enough. All governmental units should co-operate and co-ordinate their programs to encourage and assist Negro entrance into communities outside the ghetto.

Federal housing agencies should take the leadership in encouraging the many voluntary groups that are tackling the problem. The President should assume moral leadership through White House conversations with churches, unions, business associations, lawyers, women leaders and other groups and individuals as he has done in the case of his civil rights legislation.

The 1960 census figures outline the housing problem starkly: The combined population of the 10 largest cities was 21,751,334; their Negro population was 4,655,505, or 27.4 per cent. Standard metropolitan areas around those 10 central cities had a total population of 18,271,039, of which only 809,134, or 5.4 per cent, were Negroes, a substantial number of whom lived in Negro sections of satellite cities and towns.

ST. LOUIS, for example, had a population of 750,026 with 214,377 Negroes, or 28.6 per cent. The metropolitan area outside the city had a population of 1,310,077, with 80,496 Negroes, or 6.1 per cent, but about 45 per cent of that number lived in the Negro section of East St. Louis, prejudice; it is the product of more than 50 years of governmental sanction and support of residential segregation. Emboldened by Supreme Court approval of the separate but equal doctrine in 1896, Southern and Border cities enacted racial zoning ordinances from about 1904 to 1915, only to have the court invalidate them in 1917 after more than a decade of usage had whipped up sentiment in their favor.

Balked on one front, segregationists turned to the use of racially restrictive covenants and obtained court enforcement from 1915 to 1948. In that 30-year span, courts of 19 states and the District of Columbia ground out decrees confining Negroes to unwanted sections of cities and towns—North, East, South and West.

The Supreme Court finally turned thumbs down on judicial enforcement in the St. Louis case of Shelley v. Kraemer in 1948 after extending its tacit approval in an earlier case in 1926. But a firm foundation had been laid for urban black belts in those critical three decades when Negroes were swarming to the cities.

The ultimate in governmental sanction of the ghetto came when the Federal Government got into housing in 1934. Under the thin disguise of conforming to local custom, it approved and financed segregated public housing projects and kept right on doing so for a decade after the courts had held that such segregation ran afoul of the Fourteenth Amendment.

More than 80 per cent of public housing is still segregated in theory and more than 90 per cent in practice because site selection policies determine tenant occupancy.

FHA BEGAN its career in 1935 by requiring race restrictive covenants as a condition for extension of federal mortgage insurance. It furnished a model racist covenant for builders and became a sort of Typhoid Mary carrying the ghetto germ wherever it went.

Of course, neither federal, state nor local governments invented the initial sentiment for residential segregation. What they did do was to lend their processes to conserve shallow racial prejudices and nourish them into enforceable discriminatory practices.

The initial problem to be solved is that of admitting the Negro to a free market where he can buy and rent shelter without discrimination. The presidential order is a timid step in that direction. State and local fair housing statutes operate to create a free market by interdicting discrimination at the point of sales and rentals and are more significant than the presidential order, but they do not cover all housing in the best of cases. The used housing market is still largely closed to Negroes with the consent of government.

The corrective measures needed must be heroic, and unprecedented, but black belts are not a Negro problem; they are an urban problem in an increasingly urban society. They are the fire this time in urban race relations.

THE NEGRO SPEAKS

Integrationist Says U.S. Is Not Facing Up to Ultimate Issues That Transcend Discrimination

Question of Society's Proper Values Being Sidetracked by Drive to End Racial Bias

By JAMES FORMAN
Executive Secretary
Student Nonviolent Co-ordinating Committee

FOURTH OF A SERIES

I REMEMBER, when I was 6 years old, or maybe 7, I went into a drugstore in Memphis, Tenn. It was a hot day. I had been walking up and down the avenue, looking at the beautiful houses in which the white people lived, passing time until I could catch the train going to Mississippi to be with my grandmother.

I sat down on the stool at the counter, twirled around and politely asked the waitress for a Coke. She turned away and went toward the back of the store. A few minutes passed and a Negro porter came up to me and said, "If you want a Coke come with me."

I got off the stool, following him with some hesitation. He stopped at a Coke machine. "You have to get your Cokes here," he said.

I told him I did not want to drink my Coke there; I wanted to sit on the stool in the front. He asked me where I was from. I told him I had been in Chicago. I asked him why I had to drink my Coke in the back.

He said all Negroes had to drink their Cokes in the back at the machine.

I started to cry, holding the wet bottle in my hand. Crying, I took a sip and put it down. Crying, I left the store.

I went straight to my aunt's house and asked her what was a Negro. "That's what we are," she answered. I did not ask any more questions that day.

I REMEMBER that experience vividly to this day, every detail of it. The older I grow the more significant it becomes. It was the making of a Negro.

I can't say just what the aspirations of American Negroes are. Some black people are motivated by the same drives many American whites have—the desire to acquire fortunes, to own a home, to have two automobiles. Every Negro motivated this way, unless he tries to be a white-Negro, knows that his skin color affects the achievement of whatever he desires.

But I know that American Negroes, and especially students, increasingly are asking: "Why should we strive to be like white people. Is it not better to have a society where money is not the dominant value? Is it not better to have a society where productive work of people is valued; where one works for the betterment of society rather than for the betterment of one's private possessions?"

These are the ultimate questions with which the Negro and all America must deal.

At the moment we are not dealing with them. At the moment we are too busy trying to end segregation and discrimination, trying to create a society where personalities are not injured and deformed, a society where incidents such as I have described cannot occur. We are addressing ourselves to the problems of color and not to the broader problems that confront us all. We are simply trying to end our criminal condition.

THE BLACK BABY'S very right to be born is denied when white doctors—the only doctors in Fayette county, Tennessee—tell a pregnant Negro mother they cannot deliver her baby. Negroes in that county were blacklisted because they tried to register to vote. The mother was then faced with the choice of driving 50 miles to a Memphis hospital while in labor, or having an unclean wet-nurse deliver her child.

The black child's right to humane formative years is denied when he learns there are certain things he cannot do because he is black. The damaging process of repression begins when his mother and father must explain why Negroes cannot sit down in a drugstore to have a Coke. His chance to compete equally in this competitive society is denied when he must go to overcrowded, ill-equipped, ghettoized and segregated schools—or to no schools at all, as in Prince Edward county, Virginia.

Black bodies are exploited and denied in the Mississippi Delta, where people must work in the cotton fields for $3 or less for a 12-hour day. Everywhere black bodies are exploited and denied when they are jobless, last hired, first fired, denied promotions and discriminated against by businesses and labor unions.

Black dollars are exploited when the Negro must pay more rent for less desirable homes. Among other things, this means he is even less able to save money for medical expenses or for education for his children.

Denied the right to be born, to be educated, to grow normally and humanely, to live decently—denied these things, the Negro finds it no surprise that he is denied the right to participate in democracy.

THE DENIAL of democracy runs across the South, but let us isolate Mississippi, an area intimately familiar to the Student Nonviolent Co-ordinating Committee, an area in which I was reared.

Senator James Eastland and his Mississippi machine know full well that the present Mississippi constitution was framed to deny the vote to Negroes. The United States Justice Department knows this, too. It is not apathy on the part of the Mississippi Negro which is behind the fact that, as the Civil Rights Commission reported in 1960, only 6.2 per cent of the total Negro population of voting age in Mississippi is registered to vote. Rather, this is the result of the carefully planned denial of democracy to 44 per cent of the Mississippi population.

The skeptical white demands proof of this assertion, and ample proof there is.

Assume that the Mississippi Negro has made up his mind that he, too, wants to be an American citizen. He goes to the courthouse fully aware that he can lose his job because he is trying to register. He knows others have been thrown off the plantations. Yet, he goes to the courthouse, where he must fill out an application blank with 25 questions. He must interpret a section of the Mississippi constitution and describe the duties of a good citizen. The fact that the learned jurists of the United States Supreme Court frequently disagree among themselves on the proper interpretation of the Constitution has no bearing on the fact that the poor and miseducated Negro must come up with the "right" interpretation.

WHEN HE LEAVES the courthouse, he must wait for his name to appear twice in the county newspaper stating that he has applied to register. His employer and officers of the state-supported White Citizens Council scan the paper to see what "uppity nigger" has tried to register. By law, any qualified voter can challenge the registration of any person on the ground that he is unfit morally to be a registered voter.

If the registrar does not receive a complaint, he then determines whether or not the Negro has interpreted the constitution correctly and adequately stated the duties of good citizens. Even then the Negro does not know if he has successfully registered because the registrar is not required to let an applicant know if he has passed the registration test.

This is the legal side to the planned denial of democracy that permits the Mississippi machine to rule high, wide and handsome. By itself it might not be enough, but then there is the extra-legal side. For remember, this is Mississippi, and every Negro remembers, for no Negro can forget, that this is where Emmett Till was lynched. Every Negro remembers that the Rev. George Lee of Belzoni, Miss., was murdered here because he headed a voter registration drive. And every Negro knows that Medgar Evers was murdered here. Young and old, political and unpolitical, color was their crime, denial was their portion, murder was their fate.

Our criminal condition will change to the extent that we force the country to deal with the issues of segregation and discrimination. Dramatic direct action—pickets, vote-ins, sit-ins, sit-downs, wade-ins, move-ins—all confront today's realities. The civil rights legislation before the Congress is primarily a result of such direct action by students and other persons—in Albany, Greenwood, Birmingham, Cambridge, Nashville, in communities throughout the South—who seek to change our pathetic condition.

I cannot speak for members of other civil rights organizations, but those of us in the Student Nonviolent Co-ordinating Committee have made our choice. We prefer to work not for money but for the emancipation of our society. We prefer quick death from positive nonviolent direct action rather than the slow death that one begins to feel when he learns that he is a Negro in America.

JAMES FORMAN

As executive secretary of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, he ranks as one of the major younger leaders of the Negro civil rights movement. He is relaxed, easy-going, but capable.

His calm nonchalance masks the fact that he and his fellow members in Snick, the popular name for their organization, spend much of their time on a truly dangerous frontier—in small towns and rural areas of the deep South. There, in the face of community attitudes ranging from cool unfriendliness to heated violence, members of Snick seek to register Negro voters or to break down other discriminatory practices.

Forman, who is 34 years old, spent his childhood in Mississippi but attended high school in Chicago and was graduated from Roosevelt College there. Before taking his present job with Snick for $60 a week in October 1961, he and his wife were school teachers in Chicago with a combined annual income of $10,000.

G. JAMES FLEMING

He is a close student of the American political scene and particularly of the Negro's part in it. He is professor of political science at Morgan State College in Baltimore and has been director of the college's Institute for Political Education since its establishment in 1959. The institute provides training in public affairs, with emphasis on practical politics, for students, visiting teachers and the public.

In World War II he was regional director of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice for Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware. He worked on a number of weekly newspapers. He served as executive editor of the New York Amsterdam News from 1952-54.

He is a graduate of the Academy of Hampton Institute in Hampton, Va. He holds an A.B. degree from the University of Wisconsin and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Pennsylvania.

Negroes Seeking Political Gains To Obtain Bread, Butter Benefits

By G. JAMES FLEMING
Director, Institute for Political Education
Morgan State College, Baltimore

POLITICAL FREEDOM, POLITICAL OPPORTUNITY and political rewards are among the major goals included in the cries of colored Americans for "Freedom now" and for "All, now and here."

They want political gains not only for their own sake, but as a means toward obtaining even more substantial bread and butter benefits. Thus, colored Americans want freedom "to be in politics" but they also want the gains and status which they believe politics can, or should, help them to achieve.

Freedom at the ballot box means more than freedom to vote; it means freedom and opportunity to hold high elective and appointive office, with the fringe benefits enjoyed by other groups that have achieved political recognition—groups such as those of Irish and Italian background in Boston, Irish and Jewish in New York, Polish in Detroit, or old Anglo-Saxon stock in the South and other areas.

Although there may be some immediate gains, it is not difficult to agree with a recent poll taken by United Press International in 25 major cities. The survey indicates that it will take a decade or more for Negroes, specifically those in urban areas, to achieve the first-class citizenship for which they and their friends contend. It will take non-urban Negroes longer.

During these waiting but not necessarily passive years, Negroes will undoubtedly use all means to lift themselves politically. They will help to make the South a two-party region. They will help to support liberals rather than conservatives. They will put the emphasis on men rather than party organization labels, particularly in local and primary elections. They will try to use their numbers to elevate Negroes to higher political offices and other places of dignity and power. They will try to use politics and government to improve their immediate lot.

NATIONALLY, during these coming years, Negroes will vote as both Republicans and Democrats, with a tremendous degree of independence that will cut across party lines and support of blackness in the Harlems, South Sides, and black belts of the nation. If he is made a racial entity, all to himself in most essential matters, he will exercise his political potentials all for himself. If he is permitted to break out of the racial islands — without penalties against him — he will join the body politic of communities that are neither all-white nor all-Negro.

NEGROES, TOO, will have to decide whether the political recognition they want, based partly on their racially conglomerate living, will be best served by their decentralization and diffusion among the majority race, or whether they can live, more or less together, and use their new political strength to convert their ghettos into decent communities.

In several years of being among Negro leaders and practicing politicians, even in periods of bitter struggles for political recognition, this writer has not found serious sentiment, desire or plan on the part of Negroes to capture and take over any city, county or state, much less the nation.

Few Negroes who have broken with a local party organization, for example, have wanted to run an all-Negro ticket and, by bloc voting, perhaps defeat all white candidates in a specific district.

In the same sense, the Negro electorate has not shown support for all-Negro tickets even where such support might have been effective. Baltimore and Memphis are recent examples where all-Negro slates have failed either partially or totally, although Negro voters might have prevented such a fate. Indeed, investigation will show that, as between Negroes and whites, what bloc voting there is, is white bloc voting.

BUILDING political strength, learning how to play practical politics, learning how to reward friends and punish enemies, and primary elections. They will try to use their numbers to elevate Negroes to higher political offices and other places of dignity and power. They will try to use politics and government to improve their immediate lot.

NATIONALLY, during these coming years, Negroes will vote as both Republicans and Democrats, with a tremendous degree of independence that will cut across party lines and support the faction or man who seems to come nearest to giving Negroes the chance to achieve what they consider "freedom now."

Polls have shown that President John F. Kennedy is favored by Negroes 30 to 1 for re-election, and registration figures show Negroes registered from 74 to 85 per cent Democratic, with fewer than 12 per cent Republican.

What happens to these ratios will depend, somewhat, on whether the President can lead his Democratic Congress into passing significant new civil rights legislation, on whether the President starts "going soft" on civil rights in order to hold Dixiecrat support, and on whether the Republicans nominate a candidate who can give President Kennedy any real competition.

The Kennedy name has come to have electric meaning for Negroes, both as President and Attorney General. They have not only spoken, but acted. They are not held responsible for the behavior of Southern Democrats. There is not likely to be any mass defection from President Kennedy by Negro voters in 1964 even if his civil rights program is not enacted fully by Congress.

THE ROCKEFELLER name also has meaning, largely among older Negroes. But, the polls and the registration figures indicate that Negroes are not enamored of the Republican party. However, miracles are possible in politics!

There is no evidence that a Goldwater can lead the Republican party into performing a miracle in 1964, as far as Negroes are concerned. It appears doubtful that Goldwater could carry the South next year.

Our Electoral College, with its "winner take all" method of allocating votes, gives Negroes a significant role in deciding presidential elections. In 13 northern and border states, Negroes hold a pivotal position. In each of these states there are enough registered Negro voters—50,000 or more—to be decisive in a close election if they unite in throwing their support. In the 1960 election, these states — New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Illinois, Missouri, Indiana, California, New Jersey, Ohio, Maryland, Kentucky, Tennessee and Oklahoma—held a total of 260 electoral votes. That is only eight fewer than required for election next year.

In exercising his increasing political power, will the Negro act and vote as a political bloc wherever possible? Much of the answer will depend on whether he is forced to live in islands phis are recent examples where all-Negro slates have failed either partially or totally, although Negro voters might have prevented such a fate. Indeed, investigation will show that, as between Negroes and whites, what bloc voting there is, is white bloc voting.

BUILDING political strength, learning how to play practical politics, learning how to reward friends and punish enemies, and increasingly paying their own way in politics are the ways in which Negroes seem destined to win the fruits that politics is capable of giving. To this end, amid and after the present demonstrations, Negroes will or will need to:

(1) Continue their cammaign to make the masses of their people vote-conscious and to point out the potentialities of political activism.

(2) Integrate themselves as much as possible into the political party organizations that exist and that will come into being.

(3) Join with other groups to elect to office candidates who accept the reality that all Americans are entitled to equal opportunity, even in politics and government, and that the Civil War is over.

(4) Use their numbers in certain political units of government as an asset rather than a liability and, through political action, obtain for their communities what they have lacked.

(5) Become public-relations conscious to assure the well-meaning majority that the Negro wants all freedom here and now, but not with the objective of denying any other American his freedom.

(6) Remain organizationally strong to prevent a recesion after the Negro has made his gains and to prevent the kind of loss sustained after reconstruction.

(7) Strengthen their internal weaknesses as to family organization, care for their children and their preparation for citizenship responsibilities, to the end that they increase the quality of American society in general and, in particular, make their maximum contribution wherever they are called to serve.

The fundamental challenge to white Americans will be to bring themselves to share the United States and what it stands for, at its best, with all Americans, regardless of race, religion, color or previous condition of servitude; to strengthen their faith in the American system and its ideals so that they can support colored Americans for office employ them on merit and treat them generally as equals, each person being judged as an individual, socially and economically.

DEMANDS FOR EQUALITY IN VOTING, in education, in job opportunity, in housing, in public places are long past due.

Every major city in the United States has felt some manifestations of the current unrest and burning desire of its Negro citizens for equality—now. Hundreds of smaller communities have experienced the discontent that has spread like wildfire and that has illuminated the land with the flames of a modern revolution.

Civil rights legislation being considered by Congress is far from adequate, even to meet needs with which legislation can deal. And civil rights laws, however commendable, will not substantially erase the piled-up conditions inherited by Negroes from slavery and post-slavery segregation and discrimination.

We stand today on the verge of winning rights and respect long denied. But rights and respect are empty symbols unless they are translated into tangible social, economic and cultural gains.

STATISTICS ON JOBS, income, death rate, housing and education show clearly that the past exists in the present. This persistence of the past will continue even if, tomorrow, all forms and attitudes of discrimination were eliminated and true equality in custom and law were achieved. The burden of years of inadequate income, deprived education, menial jobs, social and psychological humiliation would remain. This is the force of inertia preventing true equality of opportunity for the majority of Negro citizens.

To overcome these conditions, the National Urban League believes the nation must undertake immediate, dramatic and tangible crash programs to close the intolerable economic, social and educational gap which separates the vast majority of Negro citizens from other Americans. This gap widens every year.

This all-out attack, a "Marshall Plan for Negroes," must be a co-operative effort on the part of all agencies, institutions and individuals, public and private. If sustained for 10 years, it could reverse the widespread social deterioration of urban families and communities and help develop tools and understanding for progress to full and equal citizenship. The cost probably would exceed the 12 billion dollars the United States poured into Europe under the Marshall Plan.

MAJOR ELEMENTS of the crash program proposed by the Urban League include:

Education—First-class schools and teachers would be provided to help Negroes realize their potential and prepare them to take advantage of educational opportunity. It would mean putting the best teachers in slum schools or in classes where children are the slowest learners. Schools and colleges must find ways to seek out and provide scholarships for Negro youths with potential talents because these youths are still among the most economically disadvantaged. They must be given personal encouragement to seek higher education because they are part of a culturally deprived group.

Employment — A planned effort should be made to place qualified Negroes in all categories of employment and levels of responsibility. It would mean that the employer would consciously seek to hire qualified Negroes and to invest extra time and effort in training programs to upgrade Negroes. Employers would examine personnel practices and plan how to make their opportunities known to the Negro community through the Urban League and the Negro press.

Housing—Racial ghettos would be eliminated by providing genuine housing opportunity on the basis of need and financial ability. For example, the real estate agent or apartment owner would deliberately seek out Negroes as tenants.

Health and welfare services — They would be greatly improved for the Negro community. Public and private agencies would be adequately staffed with competent personnel who understand the complex problems of the urban Negro community.

Public leadership — Qualified Negroes would be sought and named to all public and private boards and commissions, in particular those which shape employment, housing, education, health and welfare policy. To achieve this objective, strong leadership would be developed in the Negro community. This leadership will in turn form the vanguard of the civil rights effort.

SELF-IMPROVEMENT—Every means would be utilized to strengthen the social and economic fabric of the Negro community. Negro citizens, young and old, would be afforded, and encouraged to exploit, every opportunity to acquire education and technical skills.

Financing—Government agencies, private foundations, business and industry would reassess the extent and aims of their financial contributions to established Negro leadership organizations. Financial support must be increased substantially if full and equal opportunity for the Negro citizen is to be achieved.

Responsibility—Negro citizens would be actively encouraged to carry their full share of responsibility for a meaningful community life.

For years there has been a privileged class of citizens—the white citizens. There has been preferential treatment for whites, and now there should be a transitional period of preferential treatment for Negroes.

The community must consciously include the Negro, whereas in the past it has consciously excluded him. Such a form of discrimination is justified if the gap is to be closed.

HOW WIDE the gap is appears clearly in the following figures: The average Negro family today earns $3233 as compared with $5835 for the white family, a difference of 45 per cent. This gap has widened by 2 per cent in the last decade.

More than 75 per cent of all Negro workers are in the three lowest occupational categories—service workers, semiskilled workers and unskilled and farm labor — the categories most affected by automation.

The nation must embark on a domestic Marshall Plan—to help the masses of Negroes to help themselves and, by so doing, reach the point at which they can compete on a realistic basis of equality and achieve their full share of human rights.

This special effort can be considered a kind of indemnification —a repayment in new programs and services to compensate for past racial injustices. This, unquestionably, is the only way that the majority of Negro citizens can be prepared for assuming the increasing responsibilities that they will face in a more integrated society.

This program for restoration of loss might take the form of a law of restitution to correct, as far as possible, the effects of slavery and segregation. A massive fund might be set aside by the Federal Government for such purposes as these: Job training and apprentice programs, educational counseling and guidance, book buying and tutoring programs, special training and fellowships in the arts, scholarships for technical education.

THE UNITED STATES realized after the second World War that it was in jeopardy as long as it had among its allies nations unable to assume full responsibilities. It must now realize that it is in jeopardy as long as it has within its body politic a socially and economically handicapped group of citizens — the majority of whom are often dependent, poorly educated and unable to assume the normal responsibilities of citizenship.

Without a bold, genuine preventive effort, it is almost inevitable that conditions will become worse and that we will by default create a class of permanently dependent citizens unable to make a useful contribution to the nation's growth.

A massive attack on social, economic and cultural problems represents the only way in which significant progress can be made. The civil rights struggle has been characterized as the "Negro revolt." This term may be appropriate in some respects. But today's movement differs from revolutions in that it is an attempt by an underprivileged element of society not to change the fabric of society but to "revolt" into partnership with it. It is a revolt with which every American should sympathize.

WHITNEY M. YOUNG JR. (above) has put the National Urban League in the forefront of those who are urging special compensatory programs to make up for the disadvantages American Negroes have suffered for so many years. He also has brought a new sense of urgency to the league. Perhaps the most professional but least demonstrative of civil rights groups, the 53-year-old organization specializes in job training and social welfare programs.

Young, who is 42 years old, has been its executive director since October 1961. Prior to that he was dean of the School of Social Work at Atlanta University. He was a pre-medical student at Kentucky State College in Frankfurt where he received his bachelor degree when he was only 18. Changing his field of study, he took a master's degree in social work at the University of Minnesota.

RAYFORD W. LOGAN (right) stands in the foremost ranks of Negro historians in the United States. He has written extensively on the history of the Negro in the U.S., Africa and Latin America and has been professor of history at Howard University in Washington, D.C. since 1938 and head of the department since 1942. He is a graduate of Williams College, Williamstown, Mass., and holds A.M. and Ph.D. degrees from Harvard University. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

Outcome of Civil Rights Drive May Not Be Decided for Years

By RAYFORD W. LOGAN

Head of the Department of History

Howard University, Washington

ONE HUNDRED YEARS after the Emancipation Proclamation, American Negroes are demanding equal rights with insistence and urgency that have startled the nation, surprised older Negro leaders and strengthened the opposition of segregationists.

The outcome of this tug-of-war is undecided; in my judgment it will remain undecided for many years regardless of yesterday's March on Washington, of federal and state civil rights laws, of Supreme Court and lower court decisions, of federal and state executive orders.
